In the scene with her mother Miss Trunnelle has her best opportunity, and splendidly supported by Helen Strickland, she makes this the most dramatic and impressive part in the picture. Marc MacDermott is seen as Robert Jardon, the barrister. Bigelow Cooper gives a pleasing performance as Lord Lester. Nellie Grant does remarkably well as Babette. Curtis Cooksey, Leone Flugrath, Jessie Stevens and Florence Stover complete the cast.

elope and marry. After leaving her Arthur visits the tavern. There he overhears Robert Jardon's unsavory remarks about Mary. Jardon refuses to apologize and in the quarrel which ensues Arthur knocks Jardon unconscious. One of Arthur's friends advises him to leave the country, believing that Jardon will die. He writes a hasty note to Mary and embarks on a sailing-vessel. Some time later Mrs. Fitz Allan learns her daughter's secret. They go to the farm owned by an old servant and there the child is born.

The servant is bribed to tell Mary that her baby is dead. When she is recovered, she and her mother return to London. The child is left in the care of the servant. Arthur's many letters are intercepted by Mrs. Fitz Allan, who wishes her daughter to marry Lord Lester. Arthur is killed by one of the sailors and his body is thrown overboard. Mary, to please her mother, marries Lord Lester. Fifteen years later Jardon, Lester's legal adviser, learns that Mary is the mother of a child by Arthur. Feeling that he can command her affection by blackmail he visits her home.

Lady Lester finds the letters written by Arthur and also the letters that have passed between her mother and the servant who is caring for the child. Mrs. Fitz Allan dies from heart attack during an argument with her daughter, who scornfully reproaches her. Jardon enters the room just as she expires. His veiled remarks cause Mary to suspect that he knows her past.

Mary visits Jardon at his apartment and defies him to expose her to Lord Lester. That night the barrister's former mistress shoots and kills him. As Mary's handkerchief is found in Jardon's room, suspicion falls on her. But the adventuress breaks down under a grilling third-degree. Lady Lester leaves her home and takes up her residence at Willowdale Farm, where her daughter lives. Mary is forgiven by her husband and with Ellen she returns to him.

"The Chalice of Courage"

MAGNIFICENT scenery done full justice by wonderful photography is an important element in making for the strong appeal which marks the picturization of Rev. Cyrus

An artistic scene in the "Chalice of Courage"

Townsend Brady's book, "The Chalice of Courage," the Vitagraph six-part V. L. S. E. feature to be released August 9. Strong in its power to hold the interest and entirely worthy of its fine presentation, the dramatic possibilities of this story make it an excellent screen subject.

The theme is laid in the mountains, and consequently there are many opportunities for thrilling action. A horse and rider plunging over a high cliff, a factor in the plot's development, is the most exciting incident and leads up to a gripping dramatic situation. This, when the young wife, too crushed and broken to be moved, and suffering terribly, implores her husband to kill her. In this scene William Duncan, playing the leading male role, does most commendable work.

Though rather seriously treated, in that the man in the case wears a quite grave expression, a mirthful scene is when the girl answers the call of an inviting pool and takes a plunge. A bear appears and naturally throws the girl into a state of panic. From the distance the mountain recluse sees this, and after shooting the animal, gallantly retires.

The production is realistic to a degree, for which may be thanked the director, Rollin S. Sturgeon. The characters are well interpreted by William Duncan as Newbold, Myrtle Gonzalez as Enid, George Holt as James Armstrong, George Kunkel as Robert Maitland, Wm. V. Ranous as Kirby, Natalie De Lontan as Louise Rosser. Otto Lederer as Stephen Maitland, and Anne Schaefer as Mrs. Maitland.

George Holt in a scene from "Chalice of Courage"

To escape the persistent attentions of Armstrong, a former suitor, Louise accompanies her husband on a prospecting trip. In an accident she is mortally and painfully injured and begs her husband to end her sufferings. After an inward struggle he does this. Sometime later Newbold suddenly disappears from the settlement, taking with him a locket worn by Louise.

In the locket is a picture of Armstrong, whom Newbold has never met. Five years later Enid Maitland visits her Uncle Robert in the West. Maitland arranges a camping trip to the mountains and invites Armstrong. At the camp Armstrong pays Enid marked attention. One day she ascends the canyon to fish for trout. A terrific storm comes up and Newbold, now a recluse of the mountain, meets Enid and is compelled to carry her to his cabin at the top of the mountain.

The storm continues through the night and they are snowbound, and there is no hope of their reaching the settlement until spring. After a fruitless search Maitland and the guide Kirby give Enid up as lost. During the winter Enid and Newbold grow to love each other and each fights a silent battle to restrain their deep affection. In the spring Armstrong, with Maitland and Kirby, reach the cabin.

Newbold recognizes Armstrong from the picture in the locket. In answer to Newbold, Armstrong makes a remark insulting to the memory of the dead woman. Kirby knows the truth and confronts him. Armstrong is forced to confess. He leaves the cabin and takes his own life. Enid and Newbold return to the city, where they are married.

THE operation of a submarine boat, the fall of an automobile over the edge of a cliff, and the destruction of a launch by a torpedo fired from a submarine, form the thrillers in episode eight of Pathe's thrilling "Romance of Elaine" serial entitled "The Flashlight Gun."

Del Mar, the foreign operative, who had mined the harbors of the United States and is seeking to do away with Elaine, lest she interfere with his operations, again plays a prominent part in the story, and Professor Arnold, though he has little to do in this particular portion of the story, again proves himself Elaine's friend and benefactor, saving her life by taking her off the launch in a motor boat just before the launch is struck and blown to atoms by a torpedo from a submarine.

As the picture begins Professor Arnold is seen completing his latest invention, which he calls the flashlight gun, since the gun projects a ray of light and is so constructed that the bullet, on being fired, will strike the exact center of the circle of light. This gun Professor Arnold sends to Elaine with a note explaining its operation, the note being merely signed "a friend."

On receiving the gun Elaine and Jameson take it down to the basement, where they hold an impromptu demonstration and find that it is remarkably efficient.

Del Mar, the foreign agent, plants a torpedo of his own construction in some rocks near the shore and dispatches a message to Kay, one of his assistants, instructing him to pick up the torpedo from its hiding place and install it in Elaine's home, set to discharge at a certain hour, and thus dispose of Elaine forever.

By chance Elaine wanders near the shore and accidentally finds the hiding place of the torpedo. Her curiosity being aroused, she takes the deadly apparatus away with her in her automobile, is seen by one of Del Mar's assistants, and the information that she has the torpedo is conveyed to the foreign agent.

Visiting her friend Lieutenant Woodward at the fort, Elaine is advised to take the deadly contrivance to Professor Arnold, who is on a yacht in the harbor. She sets out to do so and word is flashed ahead to intercept her automobile, but through a mishap the automobile containing Del Mar's accomplices goes over a cliff and Elaine and Jameson escape.

On boarding Professor Arnold's yacht they think themselves safe, but Del Mar descends in his submarine and sets out to destroy the yacht by firing a torpedo at it.

Professor Arnold sees the periscope of the submarine through his binoculars and suspecting Del Mar's purpose he hastens Jameson and Elaine over the side into a motor boat and then orders all hands to flee for their lives.

No sooner has the motor boat left the side of the yacht when the torpedo is fired, blowing the yacht to atoms. Del Mar discovers, when it is too late, that he has failed in his purpose, however, since Elaine and Jameson are safe ashore in the company of Professor Arnold.

THE innumerable complications of plot that have continued throughout the first fifteen chapters of the North American serial, "The Diamond from the Sky," become even more complex in chapter sixteen, which is entitled "The Path of Peril."

Vivian Marston, the beautiful adventuress who has set her cap for Blair Stanley in the past, ere this chapter ends, deliberately arranges to meet Arthur Stanley, now known as John Powell, in the hope of winning his love, and through that, "The Diamond from the Sky." Esther, meanwhile, arrives in the west and receives her first news of Arthur Stanley's whereabouts, and as the chapter closes we see her setting out to find him, though unfortunately we also

Chapter sixteen begins with the safe arrival of Esther and Quabba on the other side of the chasm over which they cars, which are used to bring the ore to the surface, they hasten to climb aboard the car, turn on the power and go thundering down into the depths of the mine, as they know Blair and Luke are still following them.

Meanwhile, Arthur Stanley, or John Powell, as he is now known, rescues Vivian Marston from a watery grave when her sail boat is tipped over nearby his yacht, for he little suspects that the woman had upset her craft purposely in order to meet him.

After being given dry clothing Vivian proceeds to weave her meshes about the heart of her rescurer, and when he offers her anything within his power to give she asks that he procure for her "The Diamond from the Sky." Ere the chapter ends Vivian and Powell land at Los Angeles and Esther and Quabba, after making their way through the mine, come out on the other side of the mountain where they are temporarily cared for by the kind-hearted miners, and learning of Arthur Stanley's presence in Santa Barbara set out immediately to find him.

Marmaduke Smythe, the English lawyer, who in a previous chapter was abandoned in the mountains, is much disturbed by fears lest he be attacked by Indians, and spends a very uncomfortable day in solitude. Growing unusually nervous at a sound in the distance, Marmaduke fires his trusty rifle, only to discover that he has killed nothing but a frog. Investigating further, however, he is amazed to find in the pool into which the frog has fallen the famous "Diamond from the Sky," which had been dropped there by a pelican in a previous chapter of the story.

"Bold Emmett, Ireland's Martyr"

Reviewed by John C. Garrett

"BOLD EMMETT, Ireland's Martyr," is a play based on history during the stormy days when Robert Emmett tried vainly to free Ireland. The pictures were taken in the beautiful countryside and on the rugged cliffs of old Ireland. It is a three-reel production to be released by Lubin on August 11.

Valentine Grant and Sidney Olcott are featured and a very good cast helps them to make this production one which is both interesting and well acted. The beautiful scenery, one of Ireland's many assets, is artistically shown by the means of splendid photography.

Con Daly, a young Irish fisherman and a revolutionist, is in love with Nora Doyle, the belle of the countryside, who lives with her mother. One day Major Kirk is desperately wounded and taken to the home of Mrs. Doyle, where Nora and Con nurse him back to health. In a cave nearby the revolutionists are making arms and ammunition. Robert Emmett, "The Bold," visits the cave and afterwards disguised as a blind flute player he goes into the heart of the enemy's camp. Here he is in conversation with Con Daly when Feely, an informer, overhears him and straightway sets out to notify the authorities.

Emmett is holding a meeting with the revolutionists when Con happens to glance out of the window and sees the soldiers headed by Feely approaching the house. He pushes Emmett up through the fireplace and after seeing that the leader has escaped from the house he opens the door and lets the soldiers in.

Upon finding their prey has escaped the soldiers turn upon Feely and then arrest Con and Nora for treason. They are tried, found guilty and sentenced. The girl is to serve seven years on a penal isle and Con is to be executed.

On the day the execution is to take place Mrs. Doyle remembering that Con and Nora had nursed Major Kirk to life, decides to go to Dublin and ask him for a pardon for them. She gets into the old donkey cart and is soon on her way over the hills to Dublin.

Con is led to the execution, the rope is put auround his neck and the trap is ready to be sprung. Robert Emmett is in a tree-top overlooking the prison yard, shoots at the rope and with a splendid shot severs it. In the meantime Mrs. Doyle's errand has been successful and a messenger is madly riding toward the prison on horseback with an absolute pardon for the two young people. He arrives just in time, saves Con from execution and we last see he, Mrs. Doyle and Nora having a happy reunion in the Doyle cottage.

The story in which Marie Cahill is featured is the same comedy by Avery Hopwood, in which she appeared on the musical comedy stage, and much of the humor of the production, not alone in the action of the story, but also in the dialogue has been transplanted to the film through the humorous sub-titles that are frequently used. The adaptation of the story was prepared by Raymond L. Schrock for the screen and T. Hayes Hunter is credited with the direction of the production, though a number of talented players appear in Miss Cahill's support. The principal male role, that of Freddie, is left in the hands of Samuel B. Hardy, who gets every laugh possible out of the many opportunities afforded him.

The action begins when Freddie sees and falls in love with Judy, who is troubled with an affliction of one eye by which every time she smiles she winks, the result being that she is followed by innumerable gentlemen who imagine she is flirting with them. Freddie, after many humorous adven-

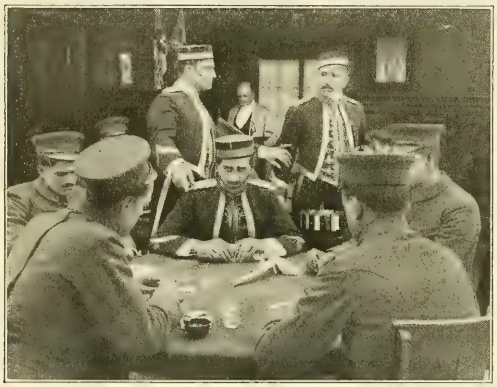
When he objects to her flirtation, Judy locks him in a bathroom and sets out for another nearby resort. En route the train is wrecked, and when Judy regains consciousness she has forgotten all about Freddie, her marriage and in fact her entire past.

She is mistaken for a vaudeville star who is happily married to another gentleman, and at the new hotel to which she is taken finds that she has a husband and several children, much to her embarrassment.

The husband, in order to inherit a fortune from his uncle, stands humbly by while the uncle carries on a flirtation with Judy, though he is somewhat surprised when still other children of Judy's are introduced to him.



In the end an automobile accident restores Judy's memory and Freddie, appearing at that opportune moment, she decides that after all her first love was best, and the two after straightening out the misunderstanding depart for a real honeymoon.

Paul Byron, Marcia Moore, and Evelyn Greeley complete the cast.

Miles Anstruther, an officer in the British Army, has made a brilliant record in the service. He is appointed Lieutenant-Colonel over his friend Major Bingham. The demotion to the rank of "second in command" keenly disappoints Bingham who is in love with Muriel Mannering, an orphan protege of Lady Harburgh's. Urged by Lady Harburgh, Muriel accepts his offer of marriage, telling him that she does not love him now but will try to learn.

Anstruther arrives and takes command of his regiment. Muriel is instantly attracted to him. He has not been told of her engagement to his friend and pays her a great deal of attention. The Colonel learns of Walter Mannering's financial embarrassment and he gives Bingham a sum, instructing him to present it to Walter but not to disclose the identity of the giver.

At the Officers' Ball, Anstruther proposes to Muriel. He is hurt when she forbids him to speak of his love, informing him of her engagement to Bingham. Bingham enters the conservatory and shows her the engagement ring. Muriel asks him to release her as she cannot marry him without love.

She then seeks Anstruther and informs him that she is now free, and he repeats his proposal. Bingham sees them embrace and jealousy takes the place of his friendship for his superior. He gives Anstruther's present to Walter as his own gift. Mannering, as a return for this kindness, tells Anstruther that his sister is really in love with Bingham. In Twice does he appear at the psychological moment in Celestia's defence: the first time to repulse Professor Stilleter's advances towards her, and the second time, to defeat Mary Blackstone's plans to have her put out of the way so that she will be alone in her conquest of Tommy Barclay. William Dangman's characterization of the East Side youth is decidedly clever.

A STORY quite out of the ordinary, acting that is satisfactory in every particular and backgrounds that are correct to the most minute detail, all tend to make the Selig three-reel release of Thursday, August 19, entitled "The Clause in the Constitution," one of the best that has ever borne the Selig trademark.

The story is from the pen of Campbell MacCulloch and the production was staged by Edward J. Le Saint. Earle Foxe has the leading male role, that of Edward Clay, star reporter on a big daily newspaper, while the role of John Duffy, ward politician, is splendidly interpreted by George Hernandez, Stella Razetto appearing as his ward, Rose Rankin, with whom Clay is in love.

Will Sheerer gives a splendid impersonation of the governor of the state, while Joe King acts the part of the lieutenant governor, who signs the important Canal bill when the real governor is out of the state for a few hours.

When Edward Clay, a newspaper man, in love with Rose Rankin, a ward of politician Duffy, secures an interview with Governor Graham on the Canal bill that has just passed the legislature and which will result in cheaper transportation for the inhabitants of that state, he suspects immediately that James O'Neil, president of the Eastern Pacific Railway, will use every power at his command to prevent the bill becoming a law, despite the fact the governor positively asserts he will sign the bill when it passes the upper house of the legislature.

Clay accidentally overhears a conversation between O'Neil and Duffy, and is able to witness the passing of a check from the railroad president to the political boss when he places his eye to the keyhole of the room in which the two men are in conference.

Clay rushes to his city editor with the news that O'Neil has declared his railroad will lose half its profits if the Canal bill passes and that Duffy has told him, "The governor won't sign. I'll fix him."

Upon learning the next morning that Governor Graham will visit Mt. Holly University for the purpose of laying a corner-stone, Clay realizes that in order to reach Mt. Holly the governor will have to pass over a railroad whose lines run for many miles outside the boundaries of the state. Knowing that there is a clause in the state constitution reading, "In case of the death of the governor or his absence from the state, the duties and powers of said office shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor." Clay instantly realizes that during the hours when Graham is aboard the train Lieutenant Governor Rainey will be legally empowered to sign the important bill, thus making it a law.

Clay's city editor decides to give Rainey a chance to become a power in the state and suggests to him that he sign the bill in the governor's absence, thus affording the people cheaper transportation. Rainey consents and representatives of the newspaper are sent ahead to wire back the exact second when the governor leaves the boundaries of the state.

Owing to an unforeseen delay in the passage of the bill it becomes necessary for the newspaper men to delay the governor while he is aboard the train, and to accomplish

The pictures are thrilling, impressive, and authentic, being taken by the ACF's own correspondents, located among the various warring nations of Europe. The first release, a four-part feature entitled, "The Battle and Fall of Przemysl," was secured by Albert K. Dawson, the ACF correspondent with the Austro-Hungarian army, and pictures vividly the events which led up to the capture of this famous stronghold.

The first part of the picture is a sort of review of the Austrian and German activities following the declaration of war. The troops are seen mobilizing, marching, scouting, skirmishing, packing their four thousand dollar shells across the country, and finally engaged in one of the greatest bat-

The intimacies of camp life, the big guns in action, views of famous generals busy planning and executing the maneuvers which have caused their names to be featured in the newspapers for the past year, and many other angles of war which the people like to see and become familiar with are shown here in their true atmosphere and without exaggeration.

One does not have to be morbidly curious nor in favor of the Germans and Austrians in order to enjoy these pictures. All that is necessary is an inclination or desire to see the actual enactment of one of the greatest military triumphs in history. At present the American Correspondent Film Company, with headquarters at 220 W. 42nd street, New York City, has photographers in Belgium, Poland, on the Austrian frontier, and in Italy. Their plans are to furnish exhibitors with authentic moving pictures of the activities of the warring nations, and their organization enables them to do this most efficiently.

MARY ROBERTS RINEHART, the famous authoress, has written some very thrilling and exciting stories. She has also turned her pen to stories which are not alone exciting but full of good clean humor. Amongst these are a series written around Letitia, better known as "Tish," a woman of new ideas, and her companions, Aggie and Lizzie. The Essanay Film Company has scenariorized these stories and made them into two reel productions.

The first of the "Tish" pictures to be released is "The Cave on Thunder Cloud," on August 14. Camille D'Arcy takes the part of "Tish," and Marion Skinner and Louise Crolius are cast as her friends, Aggie and Lizzie. The portrayal of all these characters is splendid and the picture is artistically projected.

Tish organizes a walking tour and her two companions, Aggie and Lizzie, will not listen to her going alone, so after some parleying all three of them clad for the tramp start out for a long hike, and Modestine, the donkey, is laden down with what the three old ladies would term the necessities of life.

Edward Donald, a young clubman, makes a wager of five hundred dollars that he can hold up a train with an empty revolver and escape. He accomplishes this act, but the authorities hearing of this, put one of their best known detectives on his trail.

The young man after a long chase over hills and through ravines, and after severely hurting his foot, manages to hide in a cave on Thunder Cloud and here Tish and her companions come and decide to make it their camping place. Young Donald comes out of the cave and tells the three ladies that he is a railroad detective after the desperate hold-up men.

Tish leaves the camp to go after some water at a near-by farm house and meets the detective and his two aids. The woman immediately thinks that they are the train robbers, and the detective in turn is suspicious of Tish's actions and follows her back to the camp. The woman rushes into the cave breathlessly and tells Donald to hide as the train robbers are coming and he is in no condition to put up a fight on account of his injured foot.

Later Donald tells the three women that there is a reward of $1,000 for the capture of the robbers, and if they will help him he will go after the men and then return and capture the hold-up men. Tish dresses him in an old calico dress and bonnet and he rides away on the donkey.

After some thinking Tish decides that she, Aggie and Lizzie can use the reward to an advantage, so the three start out to capture the desperate train robbers. The detectives after being held at bay in the cave by the three women manage to bundle all three of them off to jail. Here Tish sends for her nephew to come and bail her out.

Just as Charlie Sands, Tish's nephew, arrives at the jail a telegram and package are brought into the judge. It is word from Edward Donald telling of his prank, returning the package he had stolen from the train and asking that the "three old ladies" who so kindly helped him out would receive the $1,000 reward. Tish with a triumphant sneer on her face passes the detective and the three women leave the jail.

"NAT" AND "CAVVY." That's what they call them at Universal headquarters. It's something to have a nickname in such an institution, for the atmosphere of Carl Laemmle, "Pat" Powers, "Bob" Cochrane, "Sphinx" Kann and "Hard Hitter" Brandt, requires of a man a ten-ton punch to have them refer to him in such familiar terms.

But "Nat" Rothstein, advertising manager of the Universal, and his side kick, Raymond Cavanaugh, are two very extraordinary individuals. Their work is probably better known and they are perhaps less known than any other two men in the moving picture business. They dislike personal publicity and advertising, prefering to spread the fame of the Universal rather than to talk of themselves.

These two men create, design, write and produce all the vast amount of advertising for this great organization, and those of us in the film world who have read those crisp gems which ripple from their typewriters know that the Universal has a reputation for the manner in which it exploits its productions. It is safe to say that few concerns in the picture game have a bigger trumpet than "Nat" and "Cavvy"—the official screamers for the Universal.

To prove this, all we have to do is refer to such colossal campaigns as "Damon and Pythias," "The Black Box," "The Broken Coin," "The Master Key," "The Williamson Submarine Pictures," "Broadway Universal Features," and dozens and dozens of other big features which this company has put out recently.

"Nat" and "Cavvy" did it all. They can write more ten-ton punch "ads" to the square inch, with more gripping readable stuff in them than any team this side of Mars. They're the dyed-in-the-wool, blown-in-the-bottle brand of Western Chicago hustlers. They write advertising without the aid of mince pie. That's why everybody reads the stuff they write. It's the kind of stuff that made "children cry for Castoria," and Waterman's pen write. They're as original as an Irish joke, and they get on together like a couple of honeymooners.

If you start on a cruise through the Universal offices to find them you'll have some difficulty, for they're hidden away behind a lot of boxes, posters, cases, books, pencils, cuts, rulers, drawings, typewriters, ink, solicitors, engravers, printers and all the rest of the paraphernalia that goes to make up a thoroughly efficient advertising office. They occupy a space of about 12x14 feet, but their brains are all over the office, in fact, all over the country. For who hasn't read the result of their labors? Every well known newspaper, magazine and periodical has, at one time or another, been emblazoned with some startling Universal announcement. We all have seen the thrilling descriptions of the great serials and features, and startling announcements of forthcoming productions. "Natty" and "Cavvy" are responsible for it all.

People have called them "nuts." Well, if that's nuttery then there are many others who would be tickled to death to be put in their class. There are "ad" writers and "ad" writers, but "Nat" Rothstein and "Ray" Cavanagh are unique in their field. They are not the sort of fellows who tell you to come back later and get the "ad." They grind 'em out while you wait. What they have to say is told in crisp, brisk, abrupt language, with a punch that knocks the exhibitor right plum into the Universal program. He has to purchase the Universal program after he reads the eulogies of its advertising department. If he doesn't he's afraid he's not living the right kind of a life.

But, "Nat" and "Cavvy" didn't acquire all this in a day. Neither did they study it at some Incorrigible Correspondence Scollege. You cannot "make" real advertising men by writing them a couple of letters or giving them tutors. Real advertising men who possess the real advertising and merchandising instinct are born and created thus. "Nat" and "Cavvy" are old timers at the game.

"Nat" Rothstein has been a hustler ever since his father hustled him out of a neighbor's green apple tree about twenty-five years ago. He has been advertising manager of several large Chicago institutions, and at one time was in control of a large agency. His style has been copied by hundreds of merchants all over the country.

He has applied the never-failing modern merchandising methods in the selling of Universal films. His remarkable campaign books on serials are the talk of the country.

Both "Rothy" and "Cavvy" hail from that bristling burg Chicago where advertising is the big word in every business. Their great ideas in advertising helps for showmen have been received with welcoming arms by hundreds—yes, thousands of exhibitors all over the world.

These two men are a peculiar combination in that one may draw up and lay out a big campaign, and, if called away before he begins it, the other can go right ahead and carry it through. They can lay out a big advertising campaign, involving huge sums, while an engraver is soliciting their business and a bootblack is shining their shoes. They can do a half dozen things all in the same breath, and do them all well.

When they arrive on the firing line in the morning their desks are clear. During the day these very same desks are often piled high with pages and pages of advertising material, but before the day's battle is over everything has been completed and their desks are as barren as the desert.

They have made the name of J. Warren Kerrigan and scores of other Universal stars household words; they put the fun in advertising, the nerve and snap in exploitation.

Those who are of the opinion that the Irishman doesn't get on well with the Yiddisher ought to browse into "Nat" and "Cavvy's" office. They are one of the greatest teams one could hope to meet in many a day, and they agree on everything except certain delicate questions such as the legitimacy of "Nat's" unwritten right to refrain from eating pork, and "Cavvy's" sacred ideas about pork and beans on Friday.

Oklahoma

In order to ascertain the views of the people who pay to see moving pictures and to get their ideas as to what character of pictures should be censored, the newspapers of Oklahoma City, Okla., have asked their readers to write for publication, what they think on motion pictures and censorship. The motion picture producers claim that the best manuscript, the most vital life stories, are seldom produced for fear that they will be banned.

Free speech in America, they charge, is being threatened by public censorship as a legal right over the films. And that once authorized in motion pictures the suppression of freedom of expression will quickly extend to the spoken stage and to the press itself. The theatergoers are asked "What do you think about motion picture censorship?" After both sides have been heard, the verdict will be printed for the benefit of all concerned.

Illinois

Grace Methodist Episcopal church at Elgin, Ill., after one trial, has decided to use moving pictures indefinitely to promote interest in Christianity, the board of trustees agreed.

That pictures are just what one makes them.

That they are popular and effective, and the direct means of conveying an idea.

That they can be educational and can stimulate religious thought as effectively as any other thought.

That there is no objection to the use of a picture machine or reels in themselves, since they are purely the mechanical agents, capable of being used for educational and religious purposes as well as for any other.

One member made the point that the exhibition of religious pictures has set people to talking about the Bible, especially children, who grasp the idea readily when they see it worked out through moving pictures. He said that he had never been asked so many questions about a Bible story in so short a space of time as his children had asked him since they saw the reel "David and Absolom" one Sunday evening.

Pictures are shown twice a week after short sermons.

Texas

As an advertisement for the Fair and in order to secure the fairest of the fair, the Texas State Fair at Dallas, Texas, had a moving picture film made of fifteen of the most beautiful ladies residing in Dallas. Hundreds of photographs have also been submitted from Texas beauties from all over the state, asking to be permitted to pose as a moving picture actress in the Dallas State Beauty Film, and the State Fair beauty contest has proven itself of nation-wide interest, as evidenced by the telegram received by C. A. Meade, southwestern manager of the Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essany Company, Inc., one of the largest film manufacturers in the United States, requesting that he secure a copy of the film of the fifteen Dallas beauties and send to the New York office. Mr. Meade stated that it was the intention of the V. L. S. E. Company to give the Dallas Beauty film picture nation-wide publicity and to show the picture wherever V. L. S. E. pictures are shown.

Longview's $50,000 opera house, located at Longview, Texas, said to be the finest in Northeast Texas, was opened with a special feature picture show night of July 29. Mayor Bodenheim delivered a short address and was loudly cheered as he praised the Longview spirit, especially of F. T. Rembert, who built the opera house. The building has a cooling plant for summer and heating plant for winter. It is equipped with everything necessary to make a modern play house. A large crowd was present at the opening performance.

Los Angeles

The organization and filing of incorporation papers this week at La Junta, Colorado, by the Triangle Film Corporation with a capital of $5,000,000 comes not as a surprise to leaders in the film world. Mention was made previously in Motography that such an organization was a certainty.

The new company is headed by H. E. Aitken of Mutual fame, who is president and directing head; David W. Griffith, Thos. H. Ince, Mack Sennett and Adam Kessel Jr., vice-presidents; Chas. Kessel, treasurer, and C. O. Bauman, secretary, and headquarters will be established in New York under the direction of Mr. Aitken, while Los Angeles will be the production center.

The Reliance-Majestic studios, Inceville studios and Keystone studios, now headed by Griffith-Ince-Sennett combinations, will be brought into the new company and the highest class of general feature pictures will be specialties of the Triangle organization.

Large theaters will be leased or purchased in many of the principal cities of the United States, and plans include the invasion of foreign countries.

Norman MacDonald, one of the new directors of the Universal Films, is now creating special Hawaiian pictures for a big specialty production, which promises to be of unusual merit.

The Universal will feature, through Director Charles Giblyn, a great Naval Reserve scene, in which some 864 midshipmen from Annapolis, Maryland, will be featured, the party being en route from the East to San Francisco.

Nothing is too expensive for Universal productions it seems, for this week a western cattle and frontier city, costing $1,500 to erect, was burned down to the ground in the early nighttime by Director Bob Leonard, securing scenic effects for the play "Renunciation," featuring Julia Dean, the former Broadway star.

Henry Ford, the great automobile manufacturer, was a guest this week of the Universal management, and was personally shown the ins and outs of movie productions by Dr. Lloyd Mace, head of the hospital department. Mr. Ford was thoroughly entertained and voted the Big U a magnificent plant.

Edwin F. Dunne, former mayor of Chicago, now Governor of Illinois, with his staff, were special guests of honor at the Universal studios this week, upon personal invitations extended through Carl Laemmle, president of the company, The visitors were shown through the entire plant and pictures were made, which will be shown in the Animated Weekly.

Many improvements are being made at the Universal to comfortably care for the growing staff of producers and stars, and twenty-six companies are now steadily engaged producing pictures. Another big stage is now being constructed.

Helen Leslie, one of the stars of the Universal company, now playing with the Warren Kerrigan company at Lake Tahoe, was dangerously injured by being thrown from a horse this week. Three

New York Motion Picture Corporation was decidedly weaker until the last several days. The part that this company will play in producing feature films for the newly organized Triangle Film Company, in which Mr. Kessell, Mr. Ince, Mr. Griffith, Mr. Sennet and Mr. Aitken are associated, is now pretty well known. A part of the future policy of the new Triangle Film Company seems to be based upon:

1. Only exhibiting feature films.
2. Using downtown theaters in most of the larger cities as an advertising magnet by which the attention of the smaller exhibitors can be gained.
3. Charging $1 and $2 for seats.

All of this is a radical departure from established precedents and the answer cannot be known until a year from now.

North American Film Corporation.—Bookings are reported in excess of $750,000, with steady gains each week. As the latter part of July and August is usually not a very propitious time for the moving picture industry, and as the weather man has not done his part toward helping out this business, these gains are somewhat unusual.

The general market on film stocks continues to be abnormally inactive, and it is reported that there have been fewer transfers of stock in the last two months, in five of the better known companies, than in any similar period for the last several years.

ribs were broken and other hurts put the little actress out of commission for the time being.

The Balboa Amusement Company at Long Beach is making rapid strides of progress during the summer season, new leading men and women are being secured, and action is the result. Mr. Horkheimer plans some big features in pictures during the next ninety days.

The Static Club of America, the Los Angeles organization of cinematographers, is fast becoming a very important club from a social and educational standpoint, new members, representative camera men from all the big companies, are joining the club, and it is the popular move now for the wide-awake photographer to become a member of the Statics. This is the only club of its kind in the United States outside of the Cinema Camera Club of New York, and its membership is limited exclusively to active camera men in good standing who can show one year's steady service. The club rooms are in a cosy bungalow leased by the boys. They have a billiard and pool room, card rooms, library, reception room, music room and offices for the club officers and directors, all of which denotes a prosperous condition and healthy tone of efficiency.

The demand for actors of the legitimate stage is attracting many notable men and women of the profession to Los Angeles, and one can visit any of the big hotels or Broadway, the California Rialto, and meet with celebrities of the stage who formerly made New York and Chicago their places of rendezvous. Strange to relate these men and women who formerly clamored for the great eastern cities seem perfectly satisfied and contented to linger here in the Golden State, where flowers and sunshine add to the brightness of living and the nights are delicately cooled by the wafting breezes of the mighty Pacific, while enjoyment of the lobster and cold bottle kind can be had at any of the hundreds of cafes in the city and at the beaches, all reached by finely made automobile roads. Hundreds of machines are owned by stars and players of the profession, and they are most always in constant use.

NEW YORK NOTES

Chester Beecroft and his staff, now located at the Horsley studio in Bayonne, N. J., are soon to move to New York—71 West Twenty-third street is a probable location.

Theodore Mitchell, press representative for D. W. Griffith in New York, is authority for the statement that Saturday, July 31, was one of the biggest days which the Liberty Theater has had since the opening of "The Birth of a Nation" there six months ago, despite the fact New York has not experienced as hot a day for many years.

George Proctor, formerly employed on the Motion Picture News is now writing scenarios for the Metro Pictures Corporation.

A reading notice about Julian Solomon in last week's issue of MOTOGRAPHY referred to him as publicity manager of the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company. This was in error. It is from genial Pete Schmid's desk that publicity concerning the activities of Bosworth, Inc., and the Morosco company emanates. Mr. Solomon's title is Vice-Special Representative of those companies in the East.

I. B. Rubinstein sails for Italy Saturday, August 7, to take war pictures for the American Correspondent Film Company, Inc.

Harry Reichenbach, manager of advertising and publicity for the Metro Pictures Corporation, returned from the exposition last week sunburned, radiant, and chuckling over the way the largest newspapers in the West "ate up" his story about Francis X. Bushman's being presented with a bomb at his hotel.

Samuel Long, president of the Kalem company, was buried from his residence at Riverside Drive and Eightieth street Friday morning, June 30. Eight manufacturers contributing to the General Flm Program were honorary pallbearers, the active pallbearers being eight of the employes longest in the service of the Kalem company.

Adam Kessel, Jr., C. O. Baumann and Charles Kessel returned to New York Sunday, August 1, from La Junta, Colorado, where the conference at which the Triangle Film Corporation was formed was held.

Jack Rose, who featured so prominently in the recent Rosenthal murder case, has been mentioned in all the newspapers as now being in the motion picture business, but none of them explain further. The Humanology Film Company, in which Mr. Rose was interested, has made but one picture to date, "The Price He Paid," adapted from Ella Wheeler Wilcox's widely read story. Whether or not they intend to continue producing has not been formally announced.

Mary Anderson, until recently a member of the Vitagraph stock company in Flatbush, left Saturday for Santa Monica, Cal., to join the Western Vitagraph Company. Rollin S. Sturgeon picked Miss Anderson for his company on his recent trip East.

Mike Donlin, one of the best known and most popular men in baseball, finished work on "Right Off the Bat," being produced by the Arrow Film Corporation under A. S. LeVino's supervision, early this week. All of the exterior scenes for the picture, which is five reels in length, were filmed in Winsted, Conn.

CHICAGO GOSSIP

The making of a moving picture entails some expenses which the unwise are not cognizant of. For instance, after six thousand feet of negative had been "shot" on the Pavlowa picture it was found that only about one thousand was of a high enough quality to release, and it was consequently necessary to retake the major portion of the scenes. A company that recently started making pictures locally, complained bitterly the other day that their director had stated that the expense for remodeling a studio would be about $1,000, but that they had expended over $17,000 in actual cash to get the result required.

H. E. Aitken discussed last week some of the plans which he has in mind for the new Triangle Film Company and one of his ideas in particular is so splendid that we do not see how, when worked out, his idea can meet with failure. It is the intention of his company to lease one of the Michigan boulevard theaters in which will be shown, as a complete show, the entire week's release of the Triangle Film Company. The pictures will be staged similar to the manner in which the "Birth of a Nation" is projected, with shadow box effects, stage fittings, and an entire orchestra will rehearse every show before it is put on, so that the musical accompaniment will be of the finest character. Every exhibitor in Chicago is to have an annual pass to this theater in order that he may see the pictures before he books them and he will see them under the finest kind of conditions. It is an axiom that a booking on Michigan boulevard will absolutely "make" a picture in Chicago, and we predict that exhibitors will take to this new venture the moment it is started. It will also have the effect of showing exhibitors how pictures should be projected and should go a long way toward eliminating some of the bad features of projection as found in the smaller houses throughout the city. If sufficient of Chicago's theater-going public pay entrance fee to see the Triangle films at the Boulevard theater to cover the expense of the house the advertising will have cost the Triangle Film Company nothing, and even if they do not get a single paid admission the venture should prove tremendously profitable.

Carl Laemmle was a visitor in Chicago last week on his way to New York. Mr. Laemmle made a visit to the Midway Gardens, where the Pavlowa picture is being filmed, and was entertained there at a dinner by the two Smalleys, "Ted" Flaherty, Claud Plough and Maurice Fleckles.

E. K. Moss, formerly with the Mutual Film Company, is now to be found in the World Film Corporation Chicago office.

R. Levine has a splendid new house at Chicago Heights, which opened on July 31. This theater is named the Washington and seats 800 people.

H. Schoenstadt is completing a new house at Fifty-fifth and Ashland avenue to seat 1,100 people. It will be known as the Boulevard.

George L. Cox writes from the Sacred Heart Sanitarium, Milwaukee, to say that he is sleeping about twelve hours a day and going through various stunts with the electric light cabinets, massage and other modes of bodily torture to rejuvenate the aged and shopworn, and that he will be there another week or longer, depending on how well he feels and his bank roll. A surprise party was given him at the Hotel Pfister on his birthday, July 31, by a number of his friends, at which time he was presented with a silver loving cup.

Dwight J. Reed, president of the Camel Film Company, makers of animated advertising film, exhibited to the writer some splendid pictures he had made for the Solvay Coke Company, the Oshkosh Overall Company, and others, at E. E. Fulton's projection room.

Although the parent company has almost passed out of existence, the Chicago Kriterion branch under the able management of J. E. O'Toole, is still doing business. O'Toole is now buying features whenever he sees a good one offered and claims that his bookings are increasing right along.

Friend William (Bill) Sweeney was elected to the board of governors of the Reel Fellows' Club at the last meeting. Sweeney now holds more offices than he has fingers and toes.

Abe Balaban is an enthusiastic booster for the "Movie Inn," Chicago's popular moving picture rendezvous, although Abe, with his svelt figure, is not a good advertisement. We nominate Louie M. Noto as one of the best walking advertisements of a caterer in Chicago.

Ralph Bradford, Chicago manager of the Mutual Film Corporation, is making preparations for an extended fishing trip up into Wisconsin. Ralph is too even tempered to make a good fisherman as from personal experience, we know that the fish will not bite unless they are talked to.

Chris Whalen, who was the "goat" in the recent ventilation test case gave us the inside of a recent meeting of exhibitors at which it was proposed that the exhibitors donate one day's receipts for the benefit of the Eastland sufferers. In his own inimitable way Chris says one exhibitor replied: "I should give a benefit from the Eastland? Vell, I shall do it. I shall give my expenses from 11 o'clock till 5 o'clock, but I want free service from the General Film Company and free operators from the union." Chris stated that this particular exhibitor takes in about $2 between the hours of 11 and 5.

Nate Ascher's new one-thousand-seat house on Sheridan road, to be known as the Lakeside, is rapidly nearing completion. We expect to have photographs of this house in the very near future, at which time we will be able to show one of the prettiest suburban theaters in Chicago.

Aaron Gollos is advertising in the daily newspapers for information about a good moving picture house for sale. We refer him to the Jefferson on the south side or the Plaisance in Austin, as these are two mighty fine houses.

George K. Spoor returned from New York on Monday of last week, having made a hurried trip east on Wednesday to pay a final tribute to Samuel Long, president of the Kalem Company, who died on that day.

J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of the Selig Company, is looking after the affairs of his company in New York this week.

V. H. Hodupp, of the Chicago Pathe exchange, says that his office broke all previous records for gross weekly bookings last week.

Exhibitors in Chicago and the West will be pleased to hear that A. W. Goff, the pleasant division manager whom they met while he was connected with Pathe, has been promoted to a division managership of the western territory of the V-L-S-E.

F. O. Nielson returned to Chicago last week, refreshed from his long vacation, the first that he has had in many years, and is making arrangements to announce the release of the two big pictures he purchased in New York, "Little Sunset" and "Just Out of College."

C. J. VerHalen was a visitor at Motography's office last week. Ver Halen is now the busiest little weekly editor in Chicago, he having to make all the arrangements for the Tribune Animated Weekly as well as cut the negative before it is printed. Here's wishing you success, C. J.

We received from one of our subscribers last week the following letter:

"Will you please advise to whom we may apply for rental of the "Birth of a Nation"?

We appreciate the fact that it may be a long time in getting to a city the size of Freeport, but it may be possible that it can be shown. Yours truly,

———— THEATER,
J. F. D., Owner.

Which goes to emphasize the value of advertising in Motography.

C. F. Potter, Jr., sales manager of the Simplex Photo Products Company, Morris Park, L. I., N. Y., was a caller at this office last week. He is appointing local representatives and calling on the trade to stimulate sales of a small motion picture camera and a new studio lighting apparatus.

That the Chicago office of the Metro Pictures Service is growing is proven by the fact that within the last three weeks exactly fifty-one exhibitors have become "Metroed."

Every night finds Phil Solomon, assistant manager, in his Metro Meter—the new ninety-horsepower gasoline wagon, and according to Mr. Solomon this machine not only registers mileage, but contracts also. It is a rare occurrence when two or three are not registered every night. In fact, exhibitors are so used to seeing the big black wagon driving up to their theater that they have their fountain pen ready to sign up when they see Harry Weiss and Phil Solomon coming.

The Chicago office boasts that they have four downtown runs—their pictures are being shown at the Bijou Dream, the Star, the Studebaker and the Boston.

Who said that Chicago was a suburb of New York, or vice versa? When it comes to time, trouble and expense (with an utter disregard for the latter), the following will most likely be interesting—the negative of the Francis X. Bushman picture, "Second in Command," was delayed in coming from the coast studios to New York, yet the Chicago office had to have this picture in time for censoring and ready for rehearsal at the Studebaker theater for a chance to get the critics to review same. No train carrying express would make the run in less than twenty hours. So as a last resort the Metro Pictures Corporation, New York, on Friday sent one of their office men, Mr. Laird, to bring the prints to Chicago, which he did in twenty hours.

Frank Tichenor was a visitor in Chicago this week, calling on numerous friends along film row. Mr. Tichenor is jubilant over winning his suit against the Photoplay Productions Company and announces that he will now resume work on the production he had under way at the time when the court action interfered.

NOTES FROM ALL OVER

Ben Wilson, Lee Sterrett, his assistant director, Dorothy Phillips, Vivian Prescott, Estelle Dowling, Gene Burnell, little Katherine Lee (aged four), Joseph Girard, William Bailey and thirty of the ugliest negroes in New York are in Washington working on a feature civil war film to be known as "A Gentle Volunteer." The Universal will release the $15,000 ante-bellum feature on its regular program.

Dallas, Tex., is agitated by a movement to close its motion picture theaters on Sunday; but all indications point to the defeat of those interested in the movement. The fight of the exhibitors is being aided and abetted by most of the city officials, headed by Mayor Lindsley and Finance Commissioner Shannon, who have come out in all of the daily papers with interviews in favor of Sunday shows. Mr. Shannon states that on Sunday, July 11, he viewed "The Rosary" at the Old Mill theater, and says: "It was one of the best sermons I have seen in a long time; that is, if you can see a sermon, and I believe you can."

A number of the "Flying A" stars, headed by Miss Vivian Rich, are planning a week-end vacation on a group of Pacific islands a day or so out from Santa Barbara.

The Minusa Minstrel, a wee bit of a publication that is being put out and put over by the St. Louis office of the Minusa Cine Products Company, has made such a hit that the three issues are almost completely exhausted.

Dupers of "Cabiria" are to be run down and punished, is the advice from Harry Raver's office of the Itala Film Company, makers of the big D'Annunzio spectacle, now famous the world over. Rumors of duping have reached Mr. Raver's ears from several sources, and while no infringements have been perpetrated, some damage has been done in several unsold countries on account of rights being offered without authority at ridiculously low figures by so-called film exporters having offices in New York.

Cleo Madison, who has been ill with pneumonia for some weeks, returns to the screen in the Gold Seal drama, "The Flight of the Night Bird." She looks better than ever and is glad to be before her friends once more.

William Elliott, having completed his summer engagement in pictures with the Balboa Amusement Producing Company of Long Beach, Cal., has returned to New York to begin work on his fall productions for the spoken stage.

Al Christie is busy working on the big feature, "Mrs. Plum's Pudding," which will be the screen debut of Marie Tempest, the famous comedienne. Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran and several other prominent Universal players are in the cast.

P. J. Flannery, until recently with the New York Review, is now connected with the publicity department of the Big Four. Mr. Flannery was with the Review for the past five years, and previous to that was connected with the Brooklyn Daily Eagle. While with the Review he conducted its motion picture section.

Raymond L. Schrock, scenario editor of the eastern Universal studios, has just completed a four-reel play in which the eminent stage favorites, Effie Shannon and Herbert Kelcey, will be featured.

Harry Myers, Wilton Lackaye and Rosemary Theby, with a company of fifty Victory players, are in Quebec filming scenes for "His Double," the big Universal Broadway feature starring Wilton Lackaye. Harry Myers is directing, while Rosemary Theby is playing opposite the famous actor.

Henry E. Dixey, the famous actor, will appear in "Romance and Pickles," an original play by Raymond L. Schrock and Hugh Weir. It will be directed by Harry Myers, and Rosemary Theby will appear in an important role supporting the famous comedian. This is another of the forthcoming Broadway Universal features.

To enter the offices of the All-Celtic Film Company reminds one of an art gallery, for large oil paintings of all the company adorn the walls. These were made by the Padelford studio, and represent the better class of good photographic work. Peggy Shannon, Joe Sullivan, Charles C. O'Hara, J. A. Fitzgerald, Earl Lennon, Gene Techenor, Henry Schlatter, Tammany Young, Jake Baderacco, Frank P. Donovan, the press agent who put Rafferty on the moving picture map, and others are daily in attendance for the admiration of the callers.

Commencing about the 15th of August, Edwin Stevens, "the devil" of the legitimate stage, will start his screen debut in "The Crime Syndicate," a five-reel drama by Raymond L. Schrock and Hugh Weir, both well-known playwrights. John Adolfi will direct the production.

In appreciation of his appearance at an entertainment given recently, Charles Chaplin, creator of the Essanay-Chaplin comedies, was presented with a beautiful diamond ring by the Indoor Yacht Club of San Francisco.

Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby, famous the world over as film folks of unusual talent and ability, have just signed another contract with the Universal whereby they will appear in productions both for the regular program and features.

The Peaceful Rafferty comedies have grown so popular that Warden Osborn of Sing Sing requested the All-Celtic-World Film Companies, the producers, to have them shown last Sunday at the prison, and they met his request most willingly. Needless to say, the films proved the hit of the day and many of the inmates requested Mr. Osborn to get the entire series. Charles C. O'Hara, the author of the series, and head of the All-Celtic, says that he will personally see that the entire series is shown at the prison.

Florence Laurence, who before her retirement from moving pictures a year ago was one of the best known motion picture actresses in the profession, is seriously ill at her country home at Mulford, Mass. Her condition is so serious that two Boston specialists have been telegraphed for.

Little golden-haired Clara Horton, whose work with the Eclair Company has occasioned so much favorable comment from the general public, has joined the Universal's general stock company and plays an important role in "Just Jim," the first of Oscar A. C. Lund's Universal features.

In Selig's release of August 14, "The Orang-Outang," a novel feature has been introduced. We find all of the sub-titles of the picture—and there are many—all written by this huge orang-outang, Chang, who takes the leading part in the picture.

Maclyn Arbuckle, now working with Bosworth, Inc., in a production of "The Reform Candidate," is a member of the Dallas, Texas, Lodge of Elks, No. 71. Needless to say the fact that the annual convention of the Elks in Los Angeles fell upon the very week of Maclyn Arbuckle's presence in the city suited the latter to a T—a Texas T.

Buckley Starkey versatile photoplay actor with the World Film Corporation, is now in Knoxville, Ga., with the company selected by Oscar Eagle for the making of "The Cotton King."

It is little known that Harry Myers, director of the Victor Studio of the Universal Film Company at Coytesville, N. J., at one time thought seriously of pursuing painting as a life vocation. He has worked at various times in pastels, oils and water colors and in addition is a caricaturist of no mean ability. The peacock panels displayed in "The Prize Story" one of Mr. Myers productions, is an excellent example of his artistry.

Richard C. Travers, leading man with Essanay, who recently completed work in his part playing opposite Viola Allen in "The White Sister," has just returned from Chattanooga, Tenn., where he took the leading role in "Affinities," the play by Mary Roberts Rinehart, which was produced by Essanay's southern company.

Twenty thousand people were present in the Court of the Universe at the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco, on July 15 when the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial was presented with a bronze memorial by Director Frank L. Brown, representing the Exposition's official board. This is the highest award to be presented an animated newspaper.

Lubin of Philadelphia has captured a prize beauty in the person of little Edith Adele Pierce, who was the second most beautiful girl in America in a contest held at the San Franscisco fair. Miss Pierce, who is only sixteen, is petite, with large brown eyes, a small mouth, and silken, wavy brown hair. Born in Syracuse, N. Y., she spent most of her youthful career in Philadelphia. For the last nine years she was on the vaudeville stage, and only recently joined the Lubin forces. Miss Pierce submitted her photograph to a committee of beauty experts, headed by Mrs. Fiske and Harrison Grey Fisher, and won the second prize after a close contest.

The Thanhouser female baseball team, headed by Peggy Burke, captain, will meet a men's team at the forthcoming Exhibitor's Field Day at Brighton Beach. The nine is made up of Eleanor Brown, Janet Henry, Violet Hite, Ethyle Benham, Winifred Lane, Jean Lehnberg, Ruth Elder, Fan Gregory and Lydia Mead.

Leon J. Bamberger has resigned as Washington representative of the World Film Corporation, to accept a position with the V-L-S-E. Mr. Bamberger succeeded in making an enviable reputation for himself during his connection with the World Film Corporation, and comes to the Big Four with a host of friends and well-wishers.

William Hale Thompson, Mayor of Chicago, Ill., and possible candidate for United States President in the next campaign, recently made a trip to the West Coast. On his way he enjoyed a visit with Tom Mix, the intrepid cowboy-actor of the Selig Polyscope Company, at Las Vegas, N. Mex., and visited the famous Selig Jungle-Zoo at Los Angeles, Calif.

Many persons who remember Paul Gilmore, when he was a matinee idol on the legitimate stage, will be pleased to renew his acquaintance shortly via the screen. Mr. Gilmore is being featured by the Balboa Co., in a number of strong three-reel productions.

Lubin of Philadelphia announces the engagement of Jack Pratt, who directed the filming of "The Garden of Lies," as an addition to its staff of directors; and the engagement of Allen Farnham as general art director in supervision over the decorative and artistic effects of the Lubin productions.

Producer Ed. J. Le Saint has accepted an engagement with the Universal company to direct features and with him has gone delightful Stella Razeto, who was so well known while with the Selig Polyscope company.

Dainty, petite Claire Whitney, who has to her credit the honor of having starred in the first feature the Fox Film Corporation stood sponsor for, has been elected by William Fox to portray the leading feminine role in a new feature, the work of Rex Ingram, author of "A Mother's Love," which served as a starring medium for Betty Nansen.

Actors, Director Francis Powers and cameramen are now at work at the Reliance-Majestic studios upon "The Kinship of Courage," a two-reel Majestic feature. W. E. Lawrence and Francelia Billington have the two chief roles. Wilbur Higby, William H. Brown, Walter Long, Mildred Marsh and Violet Wilkey are other principals.

Pauline Bush has been enjoying a visit from her husband, Allan Dwan, who came from the east on a hurry trip to see her, pending his starting with Kessel and Bauman. Miss Bush will probably follow him in a short time and if she does, the whole colony will be sorry.

Meredith Nicholson, the noted author, came all the way from his home at Indianapolis, Ind., on Friday, July 30, to view the recently completed Selig Red Seal Play, "The House of a Thousand Candles," based on his novel of the same title.

The Vitagraph Company has secured for immediate production in pictures, an original story by Robert Edgren, entitled, "Black Caesar," and the late Morgan Robertson's wonderfully virile book story, "Masters of Men." Both stories are masterpieces of fiction and crowded with the thrilling action that is the life of a photo-dramatic masterpiece. Carefully selected casts, picked from the flower of the Vitagraph Stock Company, will enact the principal roles in each of the features, which are destined to be representative Vitagraph features.

Admirers of Harold Lockwood will be delighted to learn that he will be seen in several two-reel subjects for the American company.

Alma Ruben, formerly one of the Vitagraph's featured players, is now appearing before the Balboa's cameras. At present, she is doing a vampire part under the direction of Frank Cooley. Besides her good looks, Miss Ruben possesses unusual acting ability.

Louis Reeves Harrison has written an as yet unnamed five-reel masterplay, which Lubin will produce at once as a special feature. The play deals in a big way with the present war situation and is pregnant with things vital to today.

Another long run for its features is reported by the V-L-S-E.

"The Blindness of Virtue," four-part Essanay production, on the Big Four Program, completed its second week's successful run at the La Salle Opera House in Chicago, playing to capacity houses at 25c admission.

The next Clara Kimball Young feature will be based on the very successful novel, "The Heart of the Blue Ridge." This is a story that deals with moonshiners in the mountains of North Carolina.

Will Rex, who has been playing leads in the comedies produced by Al Ray for the Federal Films Company, has been appointed director of the dramatic company. This, however, will not interfere with his comedy work, as for the present he will produce but one picture every two weeks.

Bessie Barriscale returned from San Francisco a very happy young actress, for she could not help but be elated at the splendid reception she received from the public and especially from the exhibitors, many of whom went out of their way to tell her how genuinely popular she is in their theaters.

Several hundred visitors to Universal City were recently entertained when Francis Ford staged a battle over ten acres of ground in Universal City as a feature scene in the eleventh installment of "The Broken Coin" serial.

Julian M. Solomon, Jr., Vice Special Representative of Bosworth, Inc., has packed up all those soft summer shirts which have made him famous, bought a big stack of magazines and has hied himself to the mountains for a short rest.

Commencing in October, the Vitagraph Company will release a Sidney Drew picture every Friday, inaugurating what will be known as a "Sidney Drew Day." Mr. Drew will direct all the pictures in which he appears, playing opposite his wife.

Frank Crane is starting work on his next feature which will be the long promised Lew Fields picture "All Aboard," which will serve to re-introduce to our exhibitors the famous comedian, who caused so much hearty laughter in "Old Dutch."

The Quality Pictures Corporation at its Hollywood studio, has just erected a five-room apartment, completely furnished in every detail, for a special scene to be used in "The Silent Voice," for Francis X. Bushman, who will be seen in this production on the Metro program.

Dorothy Gish, the winsome Griffith featured player, is spending her vacation at the San Francisco Fair. She is accompanied by her mother.

Nat C. Goodwin is hard at work at Universal City in the film version of the old French tragedy, "Business Is Business," under the direction of Otis Turner. Mr. Goodwin plays the role of Isadore Lechat.

Ann Murdock, the new Metro star, whose first screen appearance will be made in Charles Frohman's play "A Royal Family," a production by the Columbia Pictures Corporation for the Metro program, experienced in this play the sensation for the first time of riding a horse astride. She will be seen, too, for the first time in boy's dress. She is an accomplished equestrienne, so riding astride was not difficult for her.

Among the many leading men who appeared at the Exhibitors' Convention in San Francisco, none proved more popular than the unassuming Hobart Henley, so well known with the eastern Imp company, and now with the western Universal.

Andrew Arbuckle is the newest member of the Balboa Company's family of players. Prominently before the screen world today are three members of the Arbuckle family. They are Roscoe, Maclyn and Andrew, and all of them are fat.

The Griffith California studio is the scene of much activity these days, with Broadway stars such as Douglas Fairbanks, Tully Marshall, Rozsika Dolly, John Emerson and Thomas Jefferson, playing in feature pictures.

Because of the unusually good results which attended their first animal picture, "Joe Martin Turns Them Loose," Paul Bourgeois and Rex de Rosselli have been assigned to the production of a multiple-reel drama of the African jungles. The picture will be released under the 101 Bison brand. No title has thus far been given it.

Jacob William Binder, Director of Finance and Publicity of the National Board of Censorship, was a member of the large party of exhibitors that visited the Griffith studio recently.

Henry King has completed "The Brand of Man" at the Balboa studios. This is the story he wrote, produced and is being starred in.

It will be a novel experience for May Allison, who plays opposite Harold Lockwood, to see herself on the screen two or three times a month and this is what she will do in the future, for while the new features are being outlined, she is acting in several two-reel photoplays under Thomas Ricketts. Miss Allison has already become one of the Mutual favorites and is giving her best efforts.

William Lampe, who is known wherever the footlights gleam, has succumbed to the lure of motion pictures. He was captured by H. M. Horkheimer, president and general manager of the Balboa Amusement Producing Company, of Long Beach, Calif., and has started working on his first picture.

In a very short while, Anna Little will cease to go to and from the Universal ranch, for Anna leaves soon. She departs with the good wishes of everyone, including the management, and there will be much wailing among the steady Universal fans, for their departed favorite. Anna will take a short rest and then spring a genuine surprise on everyone.

Capt. G. E. Merrill, in command of the troops stationed at Texas City, Texas, has just placed an order for a Minusa Gold Fibre screen with the home office of the Minusa Cine Products Co., in St. Louis, to be used in entertaining the troops stationed at that place.

Theatrical managers of the Mid-West will hold a convention at Chicago, Ill., on August 12, 13 and 14. A committee of fifty, including producers, theater managers, and agents, are arranging a novel program for the entertainment of the visitors. The Selig Polyscope Company will entertain the visitors on August 13.

Colin Campbell, the Selig director, has sailed with a select company of players for Catalina Island, where he will produce a series of original two-act photoplays.

During the past week there has been a great number of notables who have visited Universal City. Among these were nearly four thousand Shriners, Mayor William Hale Thompson of Chicago and a party of one hundred prominent Illinoisians, Hugo Allan of the Berlin Hof Opera and Louis Rouillion, a prominent member of the national board of censors and a director of the Mechanics' Institute of New York City.

The seven reel Selig Red Seal play, "The Rosary," has been used by Commissioner Shannon of Dallas, Tex., as an example of the good a motion picture can accomplish, in the fight of the city officials and the exhibitors against the law providing for the closing of motion picture theaters on Sunday in that city. Mr. Shannon and his backers say that picture plays like "The Rosary" not only furnish clean entertainment but also teach a moral lesson.

Garfield, or as his friends know him, "Garry" Thompson, one of the best known scenario authors in the country, has been engaged by the World Film Corporation for a place in its scenario department at the company's studio, Fort Lee, N. J.

Edward O'Connor, the comedian who is well known in farce, extravaganza, comic opera and vaudeville, has been engaged for the Pathe series "The New Adventures of Wallingford," now being made by the Whartons at Ithaca, N. Y. Mr. O'Connor will play "Onion Jones," one of the leading characters in the story.

SOME NEW THEATERS

Arkansas.

The new motion picture theater at Crossett was recently opened to the public and was attended by a large number. The new building is equipped especially for motion pictures, and is operated by the E. S. Crossett Club.

Jacob Bryan of Earl, Ark., has just completed a building for moving pictures only. It is 110 feet long and 25 feet wide. Ventilation is secured by an eight foot fan driven by a four horse power gasoline engine. He shows the Universal program. The seating capacity will be five hundred.

Minnesota.

Plans are under way by Messrs. Lennon and Benz for the erection of a large photoplay house at 7th and Wabasha streets, St. Paul. The theater will have a seating capacity of 2,500 persons.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker, MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

Tides of Time—(Five Reels)—Knickerbocker.—Mary Nash featured in this allegorical story, which is founded on Poe's "Conqueror Worm." Edmond Stark, a capitalist, refuses to grant his employe's reasonable request. They determine to burn his factory. Mary, the mother of one of the men, pleads with Stark and, showing him Edgar A. Poe's poem, "Conqueror Worm," asks him what part he is playing in the drama of life. In a dream he sees himself as others see him. Upon awakening, he begs Mary to lead him from his life of selfish unhappiness to her heaven of humanity. For a longer review, see another page this issue.

The $100,000 Bill—(Two Reels)—Domino—August 12.—Featuring Walter Edwards. Guy Roberts, an Alaskan prospector, is given a one-hundred thousand dollar bill at the sub-treasury at Nome for his coarse gold. The news spreads, and Soapy Smith and his gang get busy. Roberts takes passage for Seattle. Soapy and his pals dope some of the sailors from the ship, change clothes with them and go aboard. They drug Roberts, but cannot find the bill. Later he pretends to give the money to Ruth Duncan, the skipper's daughter, with whom he had fallen in love. The crooks get the girl into their power, but are again baffled. They decide to torture Roberts into a confession of its hiding place, and then get away in the boats, but Ruth calls the crew to the rescue. The crooks are captured and Roberts has the satisfaction of disclosing to them the hiding place of the bill—under the steamship label on his trunk.

Gussie, the Graceful Lifeguard—Thanhouser—August 13.—The young clerk is spending his money lavishly at the seashore. He receives notice from his employers that his services are not needed any longer. The hotel cashier who admires our handsome subject, gets him a job as life guard, assuring the proprietor he will fill the hotel. He does not know how to swim, but is very clever in concealing the fact. He gets indifferent towards the cashier and pays too much attention to a wealthy old maid. While he is out rowing with her, the cashier's brother, a genuine, but homely live-saver, upsets the boat, leaving both in distress, while the old-maid's wig goes on a cruise. The cashier gets him out of his fix, and he returns to his true love.

Weighed in the Balance—Thanhouser—August 13.—The wealthy importer's cousin in the country sends her boy to him to make his place in business. The country boy makes his debut into the society of a saloon gang and accepts some counterfeit money from its leader at a credit discount. The employer discovers that something is wrong, but says nothing. The boy's pocket is picked, but the thieves soon throw the worthless wallet away. The scrub woman finds the wallet and returns it to the boy, who gives her some bills as a reward. The importer witnesses this action, has the woman apparently arrested and brought to the office. When the boy sees that she will be sent to prison he breaks down and admits that he gave her the bills. The boy's honesty in clearing the woman even at his own expense induces his employer to give him another chance, and he promises reformation.

The Way of a Mother—(Two Reels) Reliance—August 14.—With Marguerita Marsh and George Walsh. Robert Harding, a country boy, who has come to New York to earn his living, falls in love with Gladys Duncane, an actress. Gladys is a woman of principle and courage, and supports herself and child by her only talent, her voice. Henry Bartlett, a man about town, covets Gladys and writes to Robert's mother, warning her of the danger her son is running by associating with an actress. Mrs. Harding comes to New York and goes to the woman's apartment, where she finds Gladys caring for her sick child. Gladys promises that if the child's life be spared her she will give up Robert. The child improves and Mrs. Harding leaves. In the ante-room, however, she hears her son enter the apartment and the ensuing conversation assures her of the woman's honesty and of Robert's genuine sorrow. She re-enters the room, and being entirely won over, invites them to return with her and celebrate the wedding.

The Fatal Finger Prints—Komic—August 15.—Nell and Ben are happily betrothed, and all is well until the advent of Austin Force, whose aesthetic physiognomy captives Nell and she promises to marry him the following afternoon. Nell's aunt, Ellen buys a beautiful necklace for the bride-to-be, and Austin, seeing the purchase, and ignorant of the identity of Ellen, enters the house that night and secures the necklace. Nell, who is spending the night, surprises him, but in the dark they fail to recognize each other. Force has to slap Nell's face to effect his get-a-way. Force, who has now put the necklace in the safe-keeping of Nell's father realizes it will go hard with him if the aunt identifies the gems. Nell appears with the finger prints on her face as priceless evidence. Ben's suspicions are aroused, and after he does some detective work, Austin is exposed and Nell nestles in the amplitude of Ben's arms.

The Kinship of Courage—(Two Reels) Majestic—August 15.—The cast includes Francelia Billington and W. E. Lawrence. Carlos Dunning is the lawless son of a famous lawmaker of Arizona. He meets Olive Temple and at last resolves to behave, but his associates in the west keep after him. He goes to New York to begin life over again and once more meets Olive. The shadow of an old disgrace, however, falls between the two young people, and Dunning is about to give up his fight to live an honest life. But the cloud is dissipated as suddenly as it came, and the Arizonan and his sweetheart are happily married.

Universal Program

A Cigarette, That's All—(Two Reels) —Gold Seal—August 10.—Barrett is importuned by a Hindoo Yagi to purchase a pair of spectacles through the medium of which walls vanish, and those behind them are seen in their true characters. In succession the glasses are turned by

Barrett upon his employes, his partner, his best friend, and his wife. What is disclosed, and the resultant effect upon the lives of the several characters in the story is ingeniously shown in its outcome.

A Dip in the Water—JOKER—AUGUST 4.—Shultz, with his little boy Beannie, and his daughter Lillian, visit the wealthy widow at the seashore. The widow favors Shultz's rival, Binks. Tom loves Lillian, but he cannot get on father's right side. The couple go out in a rowboat which Beannie has perforated. Shultz has made a date with the widow, but decides to go bathing with Beannie first. Some bathing girls run off with the men's clothes, and Shultz, with glittering eyes, is forced to watch Binks make suit to the widow on shore. Tom and Lillian swim ashore from the sunken boat, and Tom brings father his clothes after he has his consent for immediate marriage. It is quite unnecessary to add that Binks' punishment is as sound as the occasion calls for.

Haunting Winds—POWERS—AUGUST 4.—Wilfred Melton, discovers a rich ledge of gold, but being poor, cannot develop it. He is in desperate circumstances, and goes to a wealthy hermit to beg for provisions for his family. The hermit who has just been counting a mass of gold, mistakes his purpose and in the ensuing struggle the hermit is accidently killed. Melton takes the gold and provisions. He is haunted by the wind in the trees which he construes to be the voice of the old man accusing him, but as he is about to give himself up, learns that the hermit is wanted by the authorities for lifting a bank of ten thousand dollars. The bank is mystified to receive a package of ten thousand dollars, and Melton's conscience is at last at peace.

Universal Animated Weekly No. 178—UNIVERSAL—AUGUST 4.—Society people of Long Island attend annual race at Bay Shore; Jack Ness, captain of Oakland, Calif., baseball team, sets new batting record; elephant drags shriners around Universal City, Calif.; rigid inspection held on New York excursion steamers; Harry Elionsky of New York swims five miles in straight jacket with legs shackled by thirty pounds of chain; world's biggest locomotive pushes 150 loaded freight cars up steep mountain grade; Liberty Bell arrives at San Francisco, Calif.; last public appearance of ex-Lieutenant Becker, who was electrocuted; cartoons by Hy. Mayer.

Dan Cupid, Fixer—NESTOR—AUGUST 6.—Jack comes home from college to meet the wealthy beauty his father has picked out for him to marry. Miss Dillpickle's style of beauty, however, is not to Jack's liking and he has an exciting time eluding her rather grotesque endearments. Miss Dillpickle means business, so when Jack runs off to town she is in hot pursuit. He takes refuge in M. Massage's beauty parlor, and is undergoing a manicuring operation with a bewitching nail surgeon opposite, when his fiancee sails in for a banana massage. A mutual recognition takes place forthwith, but Jack grabs the manicure girl and is soon half way to the tropic of capricorn in his speed car, leaving Miss Dillpickle to the tender mercies of Monsieur Massage, far behind.

Judy Forgot—(FIVE REELS)—BROADWAY FEATURE—AUGUST 9.—Starring Marie Cahill. Judy Evans, a stage star, marries Freddy, and they proceed to Europe on their honeymoon. Judy has the inherited habit of winking whenever she smiles, which habit leads to many compromising situations. At Wiesbaden, the newlyweds quarrel and Judy runs away. She is caught in a wreck, and, as a result of the accident, loses her memory. Trixy marries a young man and is charged with kidnapping, therefore through a transposal of baggage, Judy is taken for Trixy. An infinite number of ridiculous situations follow close upon each other. In the end, Judy regains her memory and when, after a long search, Freddy finds her, they resolve never to quarrel again.

Where Happiness Dwells—BIG U—AUGUST 10.—Stanley Lambert, a physician, to whom the sham and shallowness of city life is a bore, repairs to his cabin in the mountains. Grace Manning, a society girl, who feels practically the same, goes to a mountain resort, and runs across Lambert, who appears to be the flesh and blood of her dreamed of mountain hero. He keeps up the deception, and both, having similar ideals, cupid's work is effected. Grace, realizes the barrier between them, and unable to face her lover, goes back to the city. Stanley, heartbroken, goes back also, with the faint hope of finding her, knowing only her first name. Grace's life being unbearable, she returns to the cabin, only to find it deserted. On his sad return to the wilderness, Stanley finds her ill at the hotel, and after her almost immediate recovery, they are married.

To Frisco Via the Cartoon Route—IMP—AUGUST 10.—One of the celebrated Hy. Mayers' animated cartoons which are always looked forward to with anticipation by lovers of graphic humor.

Payment Received—(TWO REELS)—VICTOR—AUGUST 11.—Jack Brandon and his wife, Agnes, live on a large ranch. Near them live Jude Martin, his wife and daughter Cynthia. Jude is out of work and his wife is ill. Jack gives them all the aid they need without telling Agnes, not considering it an act of charity. Jack's wife is from the city and being tired of the monotony of ranch life welcomes diversion in the person of Akron, a cattle buyer. Akron hears that Cynthia is to meet Jack at night to receive some medicine, and cleverly gets Agnes to witness the meeting. She reluctantly believes that her husband is faithless and consents to accept Akron's escort to the city. At the station she learns from Jude how she has been deceived and is saved. Jude forces Akron on the train and tells him to keep going until he is out of the country. After some tense situations, Jack is reconciled to his wife.

His Beloved Violin—(TWO REELS)—BIG U—AUGUST 12.—Von Wagner's dearest possession is his violin. His granddaughter falling ill, he is obliged to pawn the instrument. He loses the pawn ticket; the pawn broker finds it, and sells the violin to Jardin, a famous musician, Jardin is engaged to perform at the home of Mrs. Hamilton, where Von Wagner's granddaughter, Mildred, is employed. Von Wagner, having sold one of his compositions, tries to reclaim his instrument, but the pawnbroker demands the ticket. Von Wagner goes to tell Mildred of his trouble, and at the Hamilton's home meets Jardin, who recognizes him as his old teacher. The picture fades with professor and ex-pupil rendering a selection together.

The Elephant Circus—Powers—August 12.—A photoplay reproduction of a popular vaudeville act. This picture was produced under the supervision of the curator of the Bronx Park zoo at New York. On the same reel is Little People in Fur, one of Ditmar's educational pictures.

Lost—Three Teeth—Nestor—August 13.—The girl, who is an ex-football artist, has had the misfortune to leave her three front teeth on the field of battle. This deficiency gets on her conscience enough to make her refuse her lover. But in spite of the "blot" on her past, he is bound to have her. The maid carelessly tosses the false bony triad out of the window; a tramp finds the teeth and discovers a ready customer. Our hero gets on the job, and after a gallant effort recovers the missing food sawers. Now the gap is filled, her smile is restored, and as soon as the operator quits hollering "busy," the aspiring youth has something to say to the minister over the phone.

Chasing the Limited—(Two Reels)—Bijou—August 14.—Clagett, chief clerk to the superintendent of the railroad, because of his fondness for the superintendent's daughter is sent to a small town five hundred miles away, as agent. Here he meets Catherine and realizes that his former attachment was only fancy. Catherine's brother steals a large sum from the safe, and Clagett falls under suspicion, but he guesses the identity of the real thief. After a thrilling episode, Clagett saves the superintendent's train from a wreck, and, returning to the office is exonerated from guilt, Catherine having obtained the money from her brother and replaced it. As the superintendent's daughter comes to ask forgiveness for her suspicion, she finds Catherine in Clagett's arms.

In the Grip of the Law—Laemmle—August 15.—Kate Roberts lives at her mother's boarding house at the seashore. She has a spat with her sweetheart, Ned Johnson, because he is so popular with the women visitors at the house, telling him that if she had money, she too, could wear fine clothes. Kate now "falls for" the good looks and clothes of Henry Andrews, and incessantly accompanies him about, cutting Ned clean off. Ned discovers that Andrews and his father are parties to a smuggling game, and with the help of the sheriff, catches them with the goods, as they are about to get away. Kate gladly returns to Ned's love and their happiness is full when he receives a large reward for the capture.

Love on an Empty Stomach—L-Ko—August 15.—Hank and Kitty have had no breakfast, but, notwithstanding, they retain their ability to attend to the wants of the ladies. Unfortunately they pick out the same lady. She has a husky sweetheart who has just left to purchase the ring. Hank conceals a sledgehammer in a bouquet of forget-me-nots, figuring that this will rid him of the gentleman, who happens back and catches him in conversation with his fiancee. It does, but only temporarily, as the fellow comes too quickly and goes after Hank. Hank had also struck Kitty with the hammer, and with everybody looking for everybody else, confusion ensues. The escort tries to find Hank, and there is almost a crime right then and there with the escort as killer and Hank as killee.

Mountain Justice—(Two Reels)—Rex—August 15.—Angus McDonald and Jeffry Kirke are partners in a moonshine still. Kirke is cruel to his wife, yet she is devoted to him. Nora Davidson is deeply in love with Angus, but his interest is centered in Mary Kirke. They both see Kirke strike his wife, and Angus is prevented by Nora from killing him. Mary leaves her husband to give him a chance to reform. Angus pleads with Mary to accept his love, but is refused. The officers raid the still and Kirke kills one of them. Angus sees a chance to get Kirke killed and turns him over to the officers. The mountaineers learn of the betrayal and Angus is about to be hung when Nora's father, through love of his daughter, holds the men at bay with his gun. Angus finally realizes his love for Nora and they are united.

Feature Programs

Metro

The Vampire (Five Reels)—Metro—August 9.—Featuring Mme. Petrova as Jeanne Lefarge, who is seriously injured in an automobile accident and in her convalescence meets a married man and falls in love with him. When she finds out that he has kept this from her she decides to avenge the wrong on all mankind and becomes known as a vampire. In Paris she meets a young attache of the American legation and is about to cause his downfall when she finds she is desperately in love with him. The young man's father is none other than the one who had deceived Jeanne years before and she finally accomplishes a difficult deed, that of reuniting the young man with a fine young woman and in the end herself reforms.

The Second In Command—(Five Reels)—Metro—Featuring Francis X. Bushman and Marguerite Snow. Major Bingham is in love with Muriel and he causes a misunderstanding between her and the man to whom she is engaged, Miles Anstruther. Bingham and his superior officer, Anstruther, depart with their regiment for South Africa. During a battle with the Boars, the Colonel saves Bingham's life at a risk of his own. The wounded and penitent Major confesses his duplicity, which results in bringing together once more Anstruther and Muriel. For a longer review see another page of this issue.

North American

The Path of Peril—(Chapter Sixteen "The Diamond from the Sky")—(Two Reels)—American.—In this chapter Vivian Marston, after overturning her sailboat, is rescued by Arthur Stanley, now known as John Powell, and proceeds to cause him to fall in love with her, the two landing from his yacht at Los Angeles. Ere the chapter ends Esther and Quabba escape from Blair Stanley and Luke Lovell, make their way by a path of peril that leads through a mine to the other side of the mountain, learn Arthur Stanley's whereabouts and set out to meet him at Santa Barbara. "The Diamond from the Sky" is found by Marmaduke Smythe in a frog pool where it had been previously dropped by a pelican. A longer review of this picture will be found on another page of this issue.

Paramount

Seven Sisters—(Five Reels)—Paramount—Marguerite Clark featured as Mici, the daughter of a widow of a Hungarian army officer, who must not be married before her three elder sisters are. She is sent away to a convent and there meets Count Horkoy, who falls in love with her. The Mother Superior of the convent discovers Mici's escapade and expels her. The girl returns home, and as punishment is forced to wear short dresses and act as if she were fourteen until her three sisters are married. The count follows her home and wagers three kisses that he will have the three sisters safely wedded within a month. At this point the conclusion is clearly in view and one knows that it will be only a question of time before he will succeed in his undertaking.

Pathe

Pathe News No. 61—Pathe.—Saddle horses entered in the twenty-second annual show at Long Branch, N. J.; a ban placed on abbreviated bathing suits at Atlantic City, N. J.; a submarine for the British government launched at Quincy, Mass.; scenes with the French Moorish Zouaves; shell which fell in the French trenches near Verdun and failed to explode; Queen Alexandra presents Royal Flying Corps with four aeroplanes at London, England; Lord Kitchener visits the Guildhall where Lord Mayor has organized a meeting at London, England; James W. Gerard, U. S. Ambassador to Germany, in his office at the American embassy at Berlin, Germany; animated cartoons by W. H. Morris; annual outing of Boston Chamber of Commerce at Beverly, Mass.

The Flashlight Gun—(Episode Eight "Romance of Elaine")—(Two Reels)—Pathe.—Professor Arnold invents a gun which projects a ray of light, in the center of which a bullet is certain to be fired due to the construction of the gun, and presents this to Elaine Dodge. Del Mar constructs a torpedo which he conceals in the neighborhood of Elaine's home and the girl accidentally finds it and sets out to convey it to Professor Arnold. Del Mar's assistants attempt to trap her automobile, but are themselves killed when their car goes over a cliff in an attempt to wipe out Elaine's life. Del Mar fires a torpedo from his submarine at the professor's yacht, but Elaine and the professor escape just before the missile explodes and Del Mar is again foiled. A longer review of this picture appears on another page of this issue. N. G. C.

Max and His Mother-in-Law—(Two Reels)—Pathe—Max Linder, the popular French comedian, featured as the bridegroom whose mother-in-law is ever present. She insists on accompanying the young couple on their honeymoon. They go to the mountains to enjoy the winter sports. Max and his bride have a companion even when they go skating, coasting and skiing. The portly mother-in-law's attempts to perform these various feats produces real hearty laughter.

The Dawn of Freedom—(Three Reels)—Pathe.—The Swiss patriotic army is victorious over their oppressors. Castiglioni, the commander of the invading forces, is captured. He is permitted to go, unguarded, about the village on his promise not to escape. After a short friendship Monica falls in love with Castiglioni. The prisoner secures plans of a campaign against his army. He promises to return for Monica as soon as he has reassembled his forces. Peter, who is jealous of Castiglioni, accuses Monica of aiding him in obtaining the plans. She denies this and her father, the leader of the army, believes her. Castiglioni returns. Monica's father sees the lovers embrace. Enraged, he struggles with the soldier and throws him down a steep cliff. Monica follows her lover to death.

cago capsizes as she leaves the pier; Pathe American fashions showing latest styles in hairdressing; Liberty bell borne on triumphal march through the principal streets of San Francisco on its way to the Panama-Pacific Exposition. On the same reel with The Eyewitnesses at the Front, etc., showing the lighter side of the war.

Pathe News No. 58—Pathe—July 21.—Federal Judge K. M. Landis congratulates Ed Walsh when he pitches a six to two victory over the Athletics in Chicago; the funeral of Archbishop Quigley, Chicago, Ill.; Pathe's American fashions. On the same reel with:

The Witness at the Front, showing scenes in the forest of the Argonnes.

Bold Bad Boys—Pathe.—A Heinie and Louie comedy in which Heinie takes out an insurance policy for Louie. An idea is suggested by a pretty girl. The scheme makes a hit with Louie and to make some easy money he breaks Louie's leg. The fraud is detected by the insurance company, and as Louie cannot run it is up to Heinie to carry him in the dash for safety; which is good for many laughs.

Vitagraph Special

The Goddess—(Two Reels)—Vitagraph—Chapter Thirteen. In a small town Tommy, in a stump speech, warns the voters to reject the visionary principles put forth by Celestia, who is preaching a doctrine founded by the capitalists. The Goddess arrives in the town and Tommy is left without an audience. Professor Stilleter's love for Celestia is robbing him of his hypnotic power over her, and he determines to marry her. Mrs. Gunsdorf attempts to kill Celestia but is prevented from doing so by Freddy. By hypnotic suggestion the professor instructs the Goddess to obey the driver of an automobile which he will send for her at a certain time. Stilleter makes arrangements for the marriage. Tommy overhears a conversation between Mrs. Gunsdorf and Mary Blackstone from which he learns that the latter had urged Mrs. Gunsdorf to kill Celestia. He is suspicious of Stilleter and, aided by Freddy, he overpowers the driver. Tommy drives the car and with the Goddess and Freddy sets out for the place which she believes is heaven, wishing to prove to her that her belief is a fraud. V-L-S-E, Inc.

The Chalice of Courage—(Six Reels)—V. L. S. E.—August 9.—A picturization of the story of the same name by Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady. Newbold, a recluse of the mountain since the tragic death of his wife, meets Enid Maitland, who has ascended the canyon after leaving her uncle's camp. A storm comes up and Newbold carries her to his cabin at the top of the mountain. The storm continues until the next day. They are snowbound in the cabin, with no hope of reaching the settlement before spring. During their stay together they each fight a silent battle to restrain their love. With the coming of spring they set out for the city where they are married. For a longer review see another page in this issue. T. C. K.

A Bunch of Keys—(Five Reels)—Essanay—August 9.—The three Keys girls are unable to settle a dispute over their uncle's will, in which a hotel is left to them. Each one thinking that the hotel was left to them alone. Lawyer Snaggs, who has the will, is called upon to decide the question and as he is a designing old lawyer, makes love to Teddy, the youngest of the sisters, hoping to win her and the hotel. Through the efforts of Grimes, Teddy's suitor, the will is found and it is discovered that the girls are expected to divide the property equally. For a longer review, see another page of this issue. THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY
WASHINGTON

July 16th, 1915

My dear Mr. Nielsen:

I witnessed with pleasure a private exhibition of your moving picture film entitled "Guarding Old Glory". It is a splendidly realistic exhibition of various phases of Army and Navy life which can not fail to interest the public. I trust that thousands will see these pictures, for I am sure they will increases the pride and interest which people already have in our Army and Navy.

Cordially yours,
Josephus Daniels
Secretary of the Navy.

HEADQUARTERS EASTERN DEPARTMENT
GOVERNORS ISLAND N. Y.

July 20, 1915.

Mr. F. O.Nielsen,
Chicago, Ill.

Dear Mr. O.Nielsen:-

I have twice had the opportunity to see the remarkably good moving picture representing army life in various phases, designated "Guarding Old Glory."

I wish to congratulate you on getting up a particularly good piece of work, one which should be of real educational value, especially with the explanatory remarks which you inform me you are going to put in, to give all who see it an idea of what we have, its excellence, and what we are especially short of. Your interest has been such as to enable you to produce a particularly good piece of work, and all of us who are interested in the education of the people on the subject of military preparedness, appreciate the effects of your efforts in this direction.

Trusting that you will have a large measure of success, I am,

Very sincerely,

General Leonard Wood

U.S. Army

Extract from review in Moving Picture World by James S. McQuade

"I viewed five reels of moving pictures the other day, wholly devoted to the United States army and navy, and became so absorbed that, when "Old Glory" faded out in the final scene, I could scarcely realize that I had been watching the screen for nearly one hour and a half."

Rowland Tells of Metro Offerings

NEXT QUARTER'S RELEASES

PRESIDENT RICHARD A. ROWLAND of the Metro Pictures Corporation, after a four-day conference at Atlantic City, participated in by the eighteen exchangemen composing the distributing forces of the organization, the heads of the five producing concerns whose products compose the Metro Program, the official and executive staff of the central office and those of the directors and studio managers who could be spared from their work, announced that plans and arrangements were now complete for the forthcoming Metro quarter and that the various heads had outlined a plan of progress and determined action which will more than sustain the enviable record of the company since its establishment five months ago.

Mme. Petrova will appear solely in productions of the Popular Plays and Players Company of which L. Lawrence Weber is the acting head. Mme. Petrova will appear approximately once every three months. Her next feature will be "Vampire," a five-act dramatic concoction from her own scenario. Francis X. Bushman and Marguerite Snow, of the Quality Pictures Corporation, headed by Fred J. Balshofer, will appear at intervals of every ten weeks. The next release in which these two estimable stars will be seen is "The Silent Voice" which Charles Frohman produced in its original form, with Otis Skinner in the principal part.

Mary Miles Minter, whose work in "Always in the Way" called forth unusual excellent comment, will be seen on that program about every fifteen weeks. Her next appearance will be in a most elaborate cinematization of the recently successful novel, "Stork's Nest," which is now under way in the Metro scenario department, under the supervision of George D. Proctor, newly installed in the capacity of supervisor of scenarios.

Edmund Breese has been engaged by the Metro Pictures Corporation for work in productions by the Popular Plays and Players of Robert W. Service's vivid poems of the Alaskan wilds. Mr. Breese scored such phenomenal success in "The Shooting of Dan McGrew" that L. Lawrence Weber purchased the entire Service collection from the publishing concern of Barse & Hopkins. "The Spell of the Yukon" will be the forthcoming Popular Plays and Players-Breese screen document. Emily Stevens, niece of Minnie Maddern Fiske, is under a five-year contract with B. A. Rolfe Photoplay Corporation and at that concern's studio, Sixty-first street and Broadway, New York, is working with an all-star cast in a picturization of "Destiny," which, when completed, will prove a classical allegory, if the intentions of the producers materialize. Ann Murdock, recently seen in "A Celebrated Case," is working in the final scenes of "A Royal Family," another Frohman production, while Hamilton Revelle is supporting Miss Stevens in her various screen efforts.

Ralph Herz, the inimitable comedian and actor, begins work August 18 in a big and spectacular production of "The Purple Lady," in which he will be supported by the dainty Lois Meredith, last seen as star of the Lasky-Belasco play, "The Woman," and Bosworth's "Help Wanted." Mr. Herz will be compelled to divide his time between the Rolfe studio and the Maxine Elliott theater, where he is at present playing the star role in "Hands Up." Henry Kolker, star of numerous Henry W. Savage plays and the direct cause of the remarkable success of "The Great Name," which enjoyed wide popularity two years ago during its long run in New York, is completing the final stages of "The Bridge," which, when released, will probably be titled with a more appropriate name. Emmy Whelen is completing "When a Woman Loves," in which she has the support of Arthur Ashley and an all-select cast, while Francis X. Bushman and Marguerite Snow are working at the Hollywood studio of the Quality company on an eight-reel production of the famous historical play "Richard Carvel."

ROMAINE FIELDING GIVES FILM WORLD SOMETHING NEW

For the first time in history an independent traveling power plant complete has been built, for the purpose of taking photoplays at night. It seems to be absolutely without precedent and will, without a doubt, be a model for other companies to follow in the near future, as it is invaluable for field work where it is impracticable to run wires for miles in order to get the night photography.

The plant, constructed for Romaine Fielding of the Lubin Company, is mounted on a big Mitchell motor car, making it possible to take the entire lighting system anywhere that an automobile can travel, with a cable of two thousand feet which makes it possible to get into places which have heretofore been considered impossible. The generator has a special switchboard on which the different lines or circuits can be run, in places where artificial light is required for photoplay work. The plant is also equipped with a 13-inch navy searchlight, projector type, which will be used in connection with the other lights when necessary. This searchlight is mounted at the right of the driver so that it can be operated without leaving the seat of the car either while the car is in motion or on a stand. The capacity of this searchlight is 4,500,000 candle power and when in operation requires twenty-five per cent of the capacity of the plant to operate it.

The entire plant and automobile weigh approximately eight thousand pounds. Compactness and simplicity was the principal aim in designing the unit. By the application of the auto type engine in this work, the weight is greatly reduced, which is proven by the fact that a light plant of the same capacity which can be purchased from eastern manufacturers weighs three times as much as the above described installation.

The first big picture in which this plant will be used to great advantage will be "The Great Divide," which the Lubin company will have Mr. Fielding produce. This will be one of the biggest features ever attempted. A part of it will be taken in and around Phoenix and the remainder in the Grand Canyon of Arizona.

INCE SIGNS CRANE WILBUR TO SUPPORT DRAMATIC STARS

Crane Wilbur, ranked among the foremost screen matinee idols of the day, has been signed, it was announced this week, by the New York Motion Picture Corporation to appear as leading man in photodramatic productions under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince. Mr. Wilbur will leave the East within a few days and immediately take up his new duties at Inceville in fulfillment of a long term contract.

The engagement of Mr. Wilbur is only another striking illustration of Producer Ince's intention to obtain the best supporting casts available for appearance with his big legitimate stars in the elaborate pictures to be released by the recently organized Triangle Film Company. There is perhaps no more favorably known man in the film world today than Crane Wilbur. Hero of a thousand thrillers, Romeo of a thousand romances, he has won his way to the hearts of the millions, not solely by his handsome face, manly physique and graceful carriage but by his supreme artistry as an actor. He often has been characterized as "a Davenport in twentieth century clothes."

Producer Ince has not announced, as yet, just what play has been chosen in which to cast Mr. Wilbur. It is understood, however, that he will be given a virile interpretation in an original 'script from the joint pens of Mr. Ince and C. Gardner Sullivan. Whatever part he be assigned, Mr. Ince feels confident, will receive worthy treatment at the hands of the noted player.

MOROSCO ANNOUNCES NEW STARS IT HAS CAPTURED FOR SCREEN

The Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company announces the acquisition of several new stars of the stage, to be screened by this concern in the near future, including such prominent celebrities as Blanche Ring, Cyril Maude, and Charlotte Greenwood.

Blanche Ring is one of the few remaining big theatrical stars who have repeatedly turned a deaf ear to all offers for motion picture engagements and Mr. Morosco can well afford to feel proud of the fact that he has been successful in his efforts to secure this favorite for the screen. The subject in which Miss Ring is to make her first motion picture appearance has not yet been announced.

Cyril Maude's initial film subject for Mr. Morosco, "Peer Gynt" an adaptation of Ibsen's well-known masterpiece, has already been completed and will be the first release of the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company on the Paramount program during the fifth quarter, commencing September 1.

Charlotte Greenwood, known as "The girl who won fame over night" as a comedienne, is another capture of importance for the screen. In "Pretty Mrs. Smith," Miss Greenwood appeared with Fritzi Scheff at the Casino Theater, New York, where both press and public acclaimed her as one of Broadway's funniest laugh provokers. In "Tik Tok Man of Oz" Miss Greenwood created a sensation and her appearance on the screen will be looked forward to with interest by thousands all over the country who have laughed at her clever antics.

PALLAS PICTURES, INC., TO RELEASE THROUGH PARAMOUNT PROGRAM

A brand new producing company which is to release its product through the Paramount Picture Corporation is announced this week with the formation of Pallas Pictures, Inc.

The new concern plans to present big feature attractions in which Dustin Farnum, one of the most popular actors of the stage and screen in this country, and Macklyn Arbuckle, another favorite of both the legitimate stage and the motion picture screen, are to be the featured players.

Mr. Farnum, already known for such productions as "Captain Courtesy," "The Squaw Man," "Cameo Kirby," "The Virginian" and others, will appear in at least four films for Pallas Pictures, Inc., two of which it has already been decided are to be "Davy Crockett" and "The Gentleman from Indiana." Mr. Arbuckle is to be featured in a comedy written by himself and Edgar A. Guest which is to be entitled "The Reform Candidate," this being an adaptation of Mr. Arbuckle's popular comedy of the same name.

WAR PICTURES UNBIASED

It may be of interest to exchanges and exhibitors to know that the pictures turned out by the American Correspondent Film Company, Inc., makers of A C F Real Life Features, are strictly neutral. They are assembled from the various centers of interest in Europe and deal with the war strictly on a fair and impartial basis. This is a gratification as well as a pleasure to the New York critics and experts who have viewed "The Battle of Przemysl." It is true to life and is presented for the purpose of entertainment and instruction with no comment or prejudice that might affect any audience. The pictures were taken by American citizens who are still in Europe at the scene of action. Another American Correspondent Film Company envoy will be dispatched within the next few weeks to Italy where he will gather pictures and news stories on the Italian-Austro-Hungarian frontier. It is seen from the foregoing, that the American Correspondent Film Company is sparing no expense to get real war pictures and that it is endeavoring to review the colossal struggle of Europe from every side.

Freuler Announces Big Contracts

AN ALL FEATURE PROGRAM

THE Mutual Film Corporation announces that it has just completed a record-breaking series of contracts reaching a total of $8,000,000 for the year, for the production of its new program.

The brands comprised in the new Mutual program according to the announcement are:

The American Film Company, Inc., producers of "Flying A" photo plays, American Beauty comedies and dramas.

The Gaumont Company, producers of Knickerbocker Star features and All-Star comedies.

The Bostock Jungle and Film Company, featuring the Bostock zoological collection.

David Horsley productions, Cub comedies and Centaur features.

Mustang Film Company, producing Mustang western features and star photoplays.

The Thanhouser Film Corporation, producing Thanhouser feature plays and Falstaff comedies.

The combined productions of these manufacturers as contracted for in the Mutual program amount to a million feet a week—fifty-two million feet a year. The tremendous financial power behind the new Mutual program is indicated by the fact that the capitalizations of the producers allied in the program total approximately $10,000,000.

"We have made an era marking step in the framing of the new Mutual program," observed John R. Freuler, the new president of the corporation. "The new program is all star, all feature, and we believe without a precedent in film program history.

"This wonderful program goes out without any increase in rental prices. Yet the program has been brought to all feature quality and the same high standard that has given the strong appeal to the best of our multiple reel productions will be found in the quality of the single reel productions and everything on our regular program.

"Some of the new productions will go out right away and the entire new program will be in full swing the week of September 13.

"The new Mutual program will carry in its regular service two three-reel Broadway star releases every week, five two-reel banner features, nine one-reel feature comedies, two one-reel all star dramas and one one-reel Mutual Weekly of world news events.

"In this new Mutual program we will present stars whose art in moving pictures and on the speaking stage has made them famous the world over. This program, you see, will be all 'feature.' The quality policy will be maintained in every reel that goes out of the Mutual exchanges.

"It is significant to consider the comedy factor of the new program. It is framed on the assumption that the great American majority likes to laugh if it has provocation. We certainly will give 'em provocation. I have added five new comedies every week to the regular Mutual program.

"In addition to the regular program, the Mutual Film Corporation will release each week one Mutual Master-Picture of four or five reels. These Mutual Master-Pictures will be productions of such magnitude that they cannot be comprehended in one, two or three reels. They will be produced by special arrangements with the greatest theatrical magnates of the country. The Mutual masterpieces will put on the screen great literary masterpieces from the pens of famous writers. These master pictures will feature big Broadway stars.

"The subjects for each day will be of so different a nature that there will positively be no duplication of subject or presentation. With the exhibitor on the Mutual program receiving a number of reels per day, an assurance will be given that no two releases will be similar in any manner. This, of course, is a big step forward in the interests of exhibitors who will appreciate a variety of theme in the menu served moving picture fans."

Mr. Freuler is a strong believer in the future of the moving picture business as applied to low-priced entertainment of the five, ten and fifteen-cent order. Hence the completion of his plans to strengthen the Mutual program so that exhibitors will secure in this way the best possible productions in regular service.

"The moving picture business is essentially one of volume," said Mr. Freuler. "That is proven by the fact that over 18,000,000 people daily attend moving picture shows. If we are to produce just for the classes, then the foundation of the moving picture business is wrong. It has become one of the leading industries of the world because entertainment of a high class order has been brought to the millions who cannot afford to pay high prices for entertainment.

"The moving picture has progressed to a point where it rests on a solid basis and is supported by the theaters that charge five, ten, fifteen, twenty and twenty-five cents. Ninety-five per cent of the moving picture theaters of the country are in this class and the same percentage represents their following among the fans.

"As an exhibitor, I have frequently complained because of the sameness of the theme offered in one day's program. My hope as an exhibitor was that my patrons could be supplied with a variety of subjects independent of the length of the films.

"The exhibitors are in a sense the retailers of our product, and for the best interests of the business we are determined to give them what they have long sought for through the expression of their patrons."

Mr. Freuler commented at considerable length on an interview with W. W. Hodkinson, president of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, who contended that there were too many films and too many theaters.

Mr. Freuler takes issue with Mr. Hodkinson on both points advanced in the latter's interview.

"The evolution of the moving pictures theater," said Mr. Freuler, "will find more theaters, but of a higher character. Just as the moving picture theater was a development of the store-front show place, so you will find a gradual disappearance of the house seating but 300 people. Moving picture exhibitors are rapidly coming to the conclusion that the ideal seating capacity is 1,000 or more.

"The overhead in such a theater is not greatly in excess of the smaller house and a good profit is assured through increased attendance.

"We must not forget the neighborhood theater and the theaters in the smaller cities and towns of the country which in reality are the backbone of the moving picture enterprise. There are 13,120 moving picture theaters in cities and towns of the United States of 10,000 population and under. This is a substantial majority of moving picture theaters. You will probably see an increase in this number rather than a decrease, for the reason that the neighborhood theater is the show house that has a regular, steady patronage the year round.

"Henry Ford is the biggest figure in the automobile business because he has brought to a million owners the joys of driving an automobile. He has solved the problem of volume and cost by producing a meritorious article within the of reach of the average man's pocketbook. There is a parallel to this in the moving picture industry, in a maintenance of volume as represented in the number of good moving picture theaters furnishing amusement to a population of 100,000,000 people, supplying quality and variety in the right proportion.

"This will be the policy of the Mutual Film Corporation and the manufacturers producing under its banner. We are confident, therefore, that increased patronage by the exhibitors of the country, representing the feelings of the public at large, will confirm the wisdom of this all Mutual feature program."

LEONARD MC CHESNEY BECOMES STUDIO MANAGER OF EDISON, INC.

The surprise of the week in film circles was the announcement of the resignation of Horace G. Plimpton from the position of studio manager, Edison, a position which he had held for about six years. When Mr. Plimpton tendered his letter of resignation to C. H. Wilson, vice-president and general manager of the Thomas A. Edison, Inc., Mr. Wilson was greatly surprised and accepted it very reluctantly. Since Mr. Plimpton's connection with the Edison company, the advancement of motion pictures has been quite as wonderful as an Arabian Night's story, and Mr. Plimpton has always been well in the forefront of all movements for the betterment of the screen. As his resignation was to take effect as early as possible, Leonard W. McChesney, manager of the Edison motion picture division, who has been stationed at Orange, N. J., took charge of the Edison studio in Bedford Park, New York City, on Monday, August 9. Mr. McChesney contemplates no radical changes of studio policy during his regime, and, except for the change of head, the studio life promises to go on as usual, the company devoting itself to its present three reels, alternating with a four-reel weekly; with a one-reel Wednesday and Saturday—all released through the General Film Company; and the production of special longer plays, to be released soon under the name of Kleine-Edison Features, the first of which will be Mrs. Fiske in her famous "Vanity Fair." There is every indication that the stock stars, who have so long been with Edison, and who alone have figured in the features which lately have been exciting such favorable comment, will be retained. Mr. McChesney's career is quite remarkable and is in itself a reflection of the rapid growth of the motion picture. For though still a young man, he has in thirteen years worked himself up from a minor position to manager. Except for a comparatively short time spent as advertising manager of the General Film Company, his entire experience has been with the Edison organization dating from the time he was in the advertising department, then stationed in Chambers streets, New York City. He rose steadily till he became assistant advertising manager of the Thomas A. Edison, Inc. His next promotion was to that of salesmanager of the motion picture department, in July, 1913. Recently the vast Edison enterprises were divided into "Divisions" so as to give each more of a separate organization and management. It was then that Mr. McChesney became manager of the motion picture division.

REICHENBACH LEAVES TO JOIN EQUITABLE CONCERN

Harry L. Reichenbach, general press representative and advertising manager of the Metro Pictures Corporation since the inception of that corporation, leaves that concern August 16 to assume a similar position with the newly formed Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation with offices at 126 West Forty-sixth street, New York.

The reason for the change, according to Mr. Reichenbach, is a large increase in salary, which inducement, according to Harry, is the only one that could attract him from his happy surroundings in Metro Square. In leaving the Metro Company, Mr. Reichenbach paid a warm tribute to President Rowland and Mr. Engel, in saying that during his sixteen years in the theatrical and picture business he has never enjoyed seven months of such happiness and contentment as has been his during his stay at the press desk in the Heidelberg Tower.

Mr. Reichenbach, in company with Felix Feist, Art Spiegel, Lewis G. Selznick and other executives of the Equitable, leaves Friday for Chicago to attend a meeting of the World Film Exchange and branch managers, at which gathering new ideas will be talked over by the various heads of the concern.

REINHARD WITH KNICKERBOCKER

John Reinhard, who has had a long and successful career on the legitimate stage, is making a strong heavy lead in the three-reel productions of Knickerbocker Star Features. Mr. Reinhard won many compliments in his work in a recent Knickerbocker Star Feature production in his support of Alice Brady.

In the latest release of Knickerbocker Star Features, "Capital Punishment," Mr. Reinhard has a very strong part in which he is distinguishing himself as a heavy in a difficult role.

In moving pictures, Mr. Reinhard has had considerable experience and is a well-known screen figure, whose reputation for strong, artistic and well balanced work is growing. In the productions of Knickerbocker Star Features Mr. Reinhard will continue in his strong role of heavy.

Tom Terriss, who is producing a series of five-reel features for the corporation which bears his name, has engaged as his assistant director, Jack H. Brown, who has been assistant to Edgar Lewis for two years.

Opening Bill of Triangle

THREE BIG FEATURES

PLANS were completed last week for the extensive exploitation of the new enterprise, the Triangle Film Corporation, in which Messrs. D. W. Griffith, Thomas H. Ince and Mack Sennett are actively interested and in which the Griffith, Keystone and Inceville studios will actively co-operate.

Triple stellar bills will be the rule of the new enterprise. The opening will star Douglas Fairbanks, Raymond Hitchcock and Frank Keenan, each in an original play of an hour's length or more. W. Christy Cabanne, of the Griffith studio, is directing Fairbanks under Mr. Griffith's supervision. Mack Sennett is directing Hitchcock, and Thomas H. Ince is directing Keenan. Each play is entirely different in character, and the three offer an ensemble of modern comedy, burlesque and historical romantic drama such as has never before been given.

The run of this combination will be for one week only. It is expected to open Labor Day in New York and Chicago, one of the most fashionable theaters in each of these cities having been leased and a scale of prices from 25c to $2.00 having been arranged for. About a week or fortnight after the New York and Chicago opening, the combination will be released throughout the country generally. In all theaters except New York and Chicago, the prices charged will be 25c to $1.00.

The subsequent openings will present entirely new stars in entirely new bills. After the first long Raymond Hitchcock play, it is probable that Mr. Sennett will go back to a couple of two-reelers in each combination. Messrs. Griffith, Sennett and Ince have engaged no less than forty-two leading stars of the American stage to date, and it is probable that they will engage as many more within the next few months.

A partial list of the stars appearing in the releases of the first month or six weeks includes De Wolf Hopper, Billie Burke, Raymond Hitchcock, Eddie Foy, Sam Bernard, Douglas Fairbanks, Dustin Farnum, Bessie Barriscale, Frank Keenan, Mack Sennett, Tully

Marshall, John Emerson, Frank Campau, Julia Dean, and probably Lillian Gish and Mae Marsh who are to be starred on account of the work they did in "The Clansman."

These stars are to be supported by the leading principals of the Los Angeles studios including such well known actors as Owen Moore, Rozsika Dolly, Wilfred Lucas, William Hinckley, Mabel Normand, Sena Owen, Fred Mace, Roscoe Arbuckle, Enid Markey, Elmer Clifton, Thomas Jefferson, Clara Williams, Louise Glaum, Loretta Blake, Mary Alden, Charles Murray, Herschall Mayall, Raymond Wells, Sam De Grasse, Howard Hickman, Rhea Mitchell, Spottiswoode Aitken, Ralph Lewis, "Teddy" Sampson, Margaret Thompson, Fay Tincher, Wallace Reid and Walter Long. The aim is to have all the parts cast with artistic excellence. Settings will be as carefully looked after as the acting and the photography.

A large corps of scenario writers are preparing plots at each of the studios, about 15 to 20 of the stars above named and several hundred leading principals are now working at Hollywood, Keystone and Inceville on the actual filming, and the nation-wide press campaign will start in New York, August 16. Henry MacMahon, formerly of the old stage "Clansman," "The Blue Bird," "Pomander Walk," and recently Boston manager of "The Birth of the Nation," has been appointed general press representative.

FIRST RELEASE OF CUB COMEDY THROUGH THE MUTUAL, AUGUST 19

Thursday, August 19, is the date chosen for the release of the first of the Horsley productions through the Mutual program. This release is a comedy in one reel called "The Little Hero," and features George Ovey, "the funniest man in America." Milton H. Fahrney is the director.

Originally Friday was selected as the day on which the Horsley comedies were to be released, but this was changed to Thursday when it was found that such a move would be to the interest of the program. No change has been made in the day for the release of the animal pictures, which will be offered every Saturday, beginning early in September, as first announced. The brand name for the Horsley comedies is Cub Comedy, with the sub-caption "It's a Bear."

The story of "The Little Hero" centers about Jerry, a character played by George Ovey, who is chosen to portray the "little hero" part in a drama presented by an amateur theatrical society. The work of Ovey in this picture is in line with his best previous efforts. His support includes Goldie Colwell, Louis Fitzroy and a large cast. Unusually attractive posters in sizes of ones and threes have been prepared for this subject.

B. S. MOSS MAKING FEATURE

"The Salamander," a visualization of Owen Johnson's widely read and discussed novel, which in play form had a metropolitan hearing last season at the Harris theater, New York City, is rapidly approaching the completed stage under the guidance of Arthur Donaldson, conceded to be a master producer of the shadow stage. B. S. Moss, president of the Moss Motion Picture Corporation, which stands sponsor for the new feature, recently remarked in an interview: "We have adopted as our slogan, 'Quality, not quantity.' As we have not contracted for any definite date release of 'The Salamander,' we are therefore in a position to take our time in preparing our screen offering, thus the production will not be rushed, as is invariably the case with a number of feature films. Our director, Arthur Donaldson, has been given a free rein with ample currency at his command to turn out a feature that will bear all the earmarks of a master film. I feel confident that I will be in a position within the next two weeks to set a definite release date for 'The Salamander.' On the completing of this film, we will place in rehearsal a gripping, thrilling photoplay of particular moment, dealing in unusual manner with politics."

NEW TRIANGLE ACQUISITION

C. Mel Simmons is one of the latest acquisitions to the Triangle staff. New York has not seen a great deal of his presence, but out on the Pacific Coast and in the Northwest he is known as a man who knows considerable about the film business, keeps his word, and generally gets what he goes after. All of which stamps him as a man of initiative and self-confidence balanced by sound judgment. Mr. Simmons will be in the sales force of Triangle with headquarters on the Pacific Coast. From the days when he was with the Swanson Film Exchange in Omaha, he has, at different times, been manager of the Seattle branch of the General Film Company; Pacific Coast sales manager for the General Film; manager of the Northwest branches of Eclectic and Pathe; and manager of the World Film Seattle branch. He was recruited for Triangle by Harry E. Aitken, president of the concern, while in the East considering an offer from the Mutual Film Corporation.

C. Mel Simmons.

AMERICAN RELEASES CHANGED

A radical change has been made in the releasing schedule of American Film Company, Inc., whose film outputs are distributed throughout the United States exclusively by the Mutual Film Corporation.

Hereafter, "Flying A" dramas and American Beauty films will be released on Monday, Tuesday, Friday and Saturday. This announcement covers all releases on and after August 23, irrespective of release dates named in advertising copy.

The decision to release two Beauty films instead of one each week and other developments have made necessary these changes.

American Film Company, Inc., also announces the release of a wonderful four-reel feature entitled "Infatuation"—a Mutual Master-Picture.

Directing Film Comedies

By MACK SENNETT*

THE producer of motion pictures must be a specialist in his line of business. He must be an energized embodiment of scenario writer, star, player, camera man, scenic artist and of all other animated elements with which the film producing business is associated. Writing from the standpoint of comedy pictures, with which I am best acquainted, I can say, without exaggeration, that all producers of laughs should possess all of the foregoing—and more. There is a peculiar dynamic energy in comedy motion picture production which, I believe, differs from the regular brand of film energy. It is a perennial hop-skip-jump affair with which everybody, from producer to film-devil, appears to be attacked. A complete knowledge of theatrics to the minutest detail is one of the many important matters in which a producer of laughs must qualify. He must not only know the theoretic but the constructive side of the theatrical business as well, without which knowledge his comedies are bound to show a deficiency somewhere.

Mack Sennett.

He must know the exact border line between "stage" acting and "screen" acting, for the line of demarcation is a very plain one indeed, and a most important essential to good comedies.

Mack Sennett directing a scene in one of his new features.

Staginess will not do in motion pictures any more than will too much naturalness do on the stage. One of the most difficult of the many billets of the comedy producer is to cure this inevitable disease of the footlights before a star or player may appear to advantage in front of the camera.

Most of the comedians of the legitimate stage who have signed to appear exclusively in Keystone pictures have started their work in the film world by being inordinately "stagey." It has been necessary, in many cases, to put these footlight favorites through a complete educational course in motion pictures before they could escape from that mechanical staginess, to which they had been long accusomed, and appear natural.

I cite this to show that nobody, no matter how well endowed, is born to motion pictures. Naturalness is a compulsory requisition, together with perfect poise and plenty of sang froid. In the end those from the legitimate stage appear to have a little advantage over the others because of superior qualifications brought on by long contact with the stage. With time and perseverance their "staginess" disappears.

Mack Sennett directing another scene in the same feature.

The producer must be correctly informed as to the range of expression in each individual player, the idea being to show the player's emotions to the best advantage. He should be able to judge offhand just what will produce the best photographic results and that which should bring out the fullest measure of laughs.

Here is where the element of good photography comes in. It is one of the foremost factors in film comedies, without which an otherwise good film may be foredoomed to failure.

Trick photography—the thousand and one lighting metamorphoses of the camera which help to a great extent in producing laughs—is a complete study by itself and one with which the producer must be entirely familiar.

After all, it may be said that everything in picture comedy production is subordinate to the laugh, but this, of course, is a very elastic expression. There must exist an orderliness of arrangement in every department of the game in order to secure the elusive laugh. There must be absolute system and utter lack of confusion.

The real director of film comedies is the one who looks ahead; the man who has the foresight to deal with complex comedy situations in the abstract, to weigh and measure them and to decide just how much money should be spent on each. He should possess keen managerial ability combined with his other attributes. He should know when to open the coffers, and, particularly, when to close them.

He should have keen discrimination, above everything else, for it is very often that the producer must spend money in a reckless manner on some particular production which he is certain will prove a big success. He should know how far to continue with this recklessness and the exact moment when it should stop.

Every laugh-sketch, every player, whether star or subordinate, must be subjected to analysis at the hands of the director. Most of the Keystone players are from vaudeville or burlesque and no matter what may have been their success on the stage, we can never tell how successful they may be in pictures until they conform to our standard of acting and have paraded before the critical eye of the public.

MELVILLE ELLIS ENGAGED TO SUPERVISE COSTUMES OF STARS

At a salary of $15,000 a year, Melville Ellis, America's premier designer, has been engaged by the New York Motion Picture Corporation, it was announced this week, to furnish his exclusive services to the costuming end of Thomas H. Ince's forthcoming productions. This step marks another era in photoplay achievement, for it is the first time a producing company has gone to such extreme measures for correctness in the dress of its performers.

Mr. Ellis possesses an international reputation as a creator and connoisseur of fashion. He numbers among his associates in business the world-famous modistes of Paris and New York and is consequently in a position to impart first hand information concerning the coming styles. It is this that he is under contract to do.

Each week, from New York, where he will make his headquarters, he will send to the Inceville studios a report of his findings, in the nature of numerous designs and patterns, together with an assortment of the costliest and handsomest gowns obtainable. These will then be remodeled to suit the stars appearing in the Ince productions.

It is with a view to fortifying his productions against the unfavorable criticism of a knowing public —at least, the feminine portion thereof—that Mr. Ince followed Ellis all over the country with telegrams, beseeching him to affix his name to a contract. Not infrequently does a fashionable woman in the audience observe an antidated dress on an actress. Not infrequently does she spread the news of her discovery. In this way, it is possible that an otherwise masterly production may be severely censured by photoplaygoers for its absence of correctness in dress.

ESSANAY AGAIN INCREASES ITS WEEKLY FILM OUTPUT

Essanay has again boosted its program by adding another three reel drama each week. Beginning September 1, it discontinues its one act drama, released on Monday, and substitutes the three reel photoplay.

The weekly program thus consists of two three reel dramas, a two reel drama, a George Ade fable alternating with an animated cartoon and scenic release, a one-reel western drama, featuring G. M. Anderson and Marguerite Clayton, and a one reel western comedy. This makes a total of eleven reels each week, exclusive of the Chaplin comedies and the multiple reel features on the V. L. S. E. program.

Essanay has steadily been growing away from the one reel photoplay in its eastern productions, it being President George K. Spoor's aim, in this class of play, to get more finished productions and better dramatic works, plays with a well rounded plot, which it has found are difficult to present in one reel.

"While we are increasing the number of reels," said Mr. Spoor, "it is because the kind of plays we now are producing demand it. I am absolutely opposed to any padding and would not for a moment permit the presentation of a play in two or more reels that could be presented in one.

"I have found that in line with our policy of buying only stories and books of well known authors, there is an intrinsic worth in these works that makes more than one reel necessary. We are making a specialty of producing works of high literary merit, plays with a vital issue at stake, with more intricate action and well rounded plots.

"We are continuing our western dramas in one reel because these plays are in a distinct class by themselves and original with G. M. Anderson. They contain the breezy style of the great out-of-doors with rapid and thrilling action. They have been found specially adapted to the present footage, as Mr. Anderson created them, and are so satisfactory that no change is contemplated.

"We are striving for a well balanced and varied program, and in the eastern plays there is another characteristic that enters into the productions. In these we are presenting problems or vital issues of a complicated life. I do not mean they are all problem plays in the common use of the term, but plays that carry issues that human beings are constantly called upon to face. The public now is demanding better photoplays, plays that while highly entertaining have a truly artistic value, and it is our aim to keep in step with the advanced demands."

"THE BATTLE CRY OF PEACE," VITAGRAPH, GIVES STARTLING FACTS

Perhaps no point is more clearly illustrated by the recent production of "The Battle Cry of Peace," an eight-part photoplay on the preparedness question which the Vitagraph Company of America has turned out, than is that brought before the public during the past few days by the arms strike in Bridgeport and other manufacturing centers. The picture, which it is said bases its facts on Hudson Maxim's book, "Defenceless America," shows clearly that unless immediate steps are taken to increase the armament of a proposed army it would be necessary to "fight with broomsticks."

Commodore J. Stuart Blackton of the Vitagraph Company of America, who supervised the production of the picture, in addition to having written it, is very emphatic on this point in the propaganda which he is instigating to force an appropriation of $500,000,000 through the next session of Congress. While it is true that numerically this country could put an army of a million men in the field within a short time, it would take a year's time to properly equip a quarter of a million men. Not only from the question of armament, however, does Commodore Blackton figure, but he also has gone into the question of whether a million men could be supplied with munitions for any length of time.

"I call being prepared for whatever may arise," declared Commodore Blackton, "National Insurance. We insure ourselves against all possible losses in business and daily life, yet we are not content to insure our country, or the liberty which the country represents to us. We must be prepared to patrol the skies with aeroplanes when the time comes and it is only by being prepared that we can accomplish this end. If we want to ward off the possibility of an attack we must be prepared to resist that attack.

"Since the Vitagraph Company announced its production of 'The Battle Cry of Peace' there has arisen a question on many sides as to the sincerity of the members of this company in advocating this move. One of the methods of testing our sincerity was by asking us whether we would be among those to volunteer should the necessity arise and also it has been suggested that a law be passed making it necessary for those who are strongest for preparation be forced to be among the first to volunteer. For my associates and myself I desire now to go on record as being absolutely in favor of such a law, if it is considered that these means are necessary to enforce patriotism among the male population.

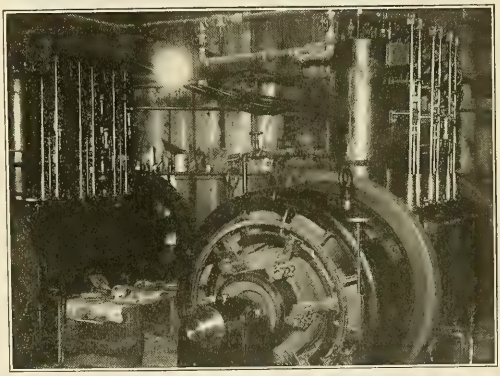
"One of the thrilling comparisons which the film makes is that of the number of aeroplanes which are in use in the various countries. According to statistics which are demonstrated in the picture, when the present conflict began in Europe, France had 1,400 aeroplanes, Germany 1,000, Russia 800, Great Britain 400, Austria 400 and the United States only 23, and most of these of an obsolete type. Probably the reason why America is so far behind the other countries in aeroplanes is due to the fact that last year the board appointed by the Secretary of the Navy recommended an appropriation of $1,300,000 for this department but Congress cut the million off, leaving only $300,000 for this proposition.

"Right here let me make clear the distinction between 'Preparedness for war and Preparedness against war.' It is for the latter that we stand and are fighting, and it is this point which we desire to bring home to the American public. We are anxious to have our patriotism understood."

According to the present plans the picture will be shown to many public officials during the coming month.

DETROIT'S MILLIONAIRE THEATER SHOWS ONLY V. L. S. E. FEATURES

Featured on the front page of the August 7 issue of the Big Four Family, the private house organ published by V. L. S. E. for the exclusive use of the Big Four employes, is an article that draws attention to the fact that there is in the United States a motion picture theater that may justly be called a civic institution.



This theater, the Majestic, in Detroit, Mich., is owned and controlled by about fifty men who represent over sixty millions of dollars. These men set forth their aims and intentions as regards their theater, in a four-page pamphlet recently distributed to their patrons. They point out that the object of the theater is to present to the people of Detroit, the cleanest and best picture plays; those a whole family can see and enjoy. No expense will be spared they say to make the Majestic the leading feature show house, not only of Detroit, but of the entire country.

In this respect, the fact that V. L. S. E. features are the only ones showing at the Majestic, and that every production is exhibited for a solid week, is a monumental testimonial to the keen judgment and producing skill of of the Big Four. That V. L. S. E. features are proving equal to the honor, and that the policy of the Majestic is endorsed by the public, is attested by capacity matinees and phenomenal night crowds.

LARGE ELECTRIC POWER PLANT TO BE INSTALLED AT INCEVILLE

The purchase of a mammoth electric power plant, to be utilized for the more efficient lighting of Inceville, is one of the latest steps taken by the New York Motion Picture Corporation toward the general enlargement of its scope. Determined to supply his studios with an equipment that will eliminate the necessity of occasional delays on account of inclement weather, Director General Thomas H. Ince negotiated last week for the purchase of the apparatus.

The system, which is to become the property of the New York Motion Picture organization, embraces two 3-cylinder engines, each of 125 horsepower, two 35-kilowatt direct-connected Westinghouse generators, and a four panel marble switchboard, together with all the numerous smaller accessories. The engines are started by compressed air and are capable of lighting two thousand 25-watt incandescent lamps, nine hundred and forty 60-watt lamps and the twenty 25-amps. Winfield-Kerner lamps, which are now a part of the Inceville properties.

Preparations are now being made to remove the entire equipment from Alhambra for installation at Inceville.

D. W. RUSSELL TO OPEN BRITISH OFFICES FOR DAVID HORSLEY

D. W. Russell has been appointed representative in the British Isles for David Horsley and leaves August 14, accompanied by Mrs. Russell, on the American liner St. Paul for London, where he will make his headquarters. Mr. Russell will handle the Mina and all other Horsley pictures known under other brand names as well as the Cub comedies which Mr. Horsley is now releasing through the Mutual program.

So many inquiries have been received from England for the Horsley product that it was found feasible to establish an agency there. Mr. Russell is particularly fitted to be in charge. He has been associated with Mr. Horsley's interests for several years as Western representative with offices in Chicago, and recently was appointed general sales manager at the Bayonne office. Previously he was connected with other motion picture organizations. In addition to his practical knowledge of the film business Mr. Russell understands English conditions and customs, having traveled extensively through the Isles. The office which will be located at 193, Wardour street, London, W., will be opened the latter part of August.

FAMOUS EDISON STAR TO WRITE AND DIRECT FOUR REELER

As the first woman to direct an Edison production, Miriam Nesbitt, the talented and popular star of that company, starts Sunday on a six weeks' vacation and tour of the west and the Panama Exposition, during which she will film the exterior and some of the interior scenes in a four reel feature, "A Close Call," in which she will star, direct, and of which she is also the author. The picture concerns the pursuit of a missing man whom she must find and marry within a limited time to win a fortune. Miss Nesbitt has placed the story in the World's Fair location and she expects to make the feature doubly attractive because of it embracing some of the most beautiful scenes at the Exposition. The plot will take her also to San Diego, while a vivid Chinatown den scene will be taken in the famous Chinatown section of San Francisco. Afterward the chase takes her through the Panama Canal, where the story dramatically ends. She will also represent Edison at the Exposition. On her trip, Miss Nesbitt will first spend some time at a camping party in the wilds of Northern Wisconsin, then visiting Chicago and St. Paul. Six days will be spent in Yellowstone Park, where her mother now is. Other cities visited will be Portland and Los Angeles.

Miriam Nesbitt.

Of all the stars whom the screen has drawn from the stage, there is probably not another player who, in the first appearance on the professional stage, played a lead in Broadway productions as did Miss Nesbitt. For it was at a performance given by a dramatic school that the Frohmans, with quick and experienced eye, picked Miss Nesbitt to play opposite James K. Hackett. To say that she not only qualified for this trying role opposite one of the best romantic actors of the stage, but prepared for the then going production in five days, speaks much of the woman whose intellectual and artistic impersonations on the screen have placed her easily among the foremost of finished photoplay actresses.

VITAGRAPH'S SCIENTIFIC DEPARTMENT

In order to register in a technically correct manner, the scientific and surgical work so essential to the realism of many pictures, now in course of production, and that show scenes requiring the aid of a physician, the Vitagraph company has decided to establish a scientific department, and has engaged Prof. Sig Stark to take charge of this important new departure in the field of motion picture production. Not alone will Prof. Stark have charge of the scientific and surgical work in pictures, but has been commissioned to establish a first aid department and will have a room which will be as perfectly outfitted for first aid and operating surgery as will be found in any hospital. As Prof. Stark is not a practicing M. D. an attending surgeon will be called in, in case of necessity and will be able to immediately administer necessary aid in the sewing up of wounds, etc.

This will give the working people of the Vitagraph plant a new confidence, should any of them be unfortunate enough to meet with an accident and will add materially to the efficiency of those who, from necessity, are compelled to subject themselves to danger. A large room has been given Prof. Stark, which will be lined with white tile, and every surgical instrument and appliance known to modern science kept on hand.

PATHE OFFICIALS HIGHLY PRAISE "THE GALLOPER" PRODUCTION

Pathe officials had their first look at Donald Mackenzie's production of "The Galloper," by Richard Harding Davis, this week, and the prevailing opinion expressed was that it easily is the best comedy-drama they have ever seen. Clifton Crawford as the war correspondent does some magnificent work and dominates every scene in which he appears with the pure comedy which is expressed in his every action. He is ably supported by Melville Stewart, Fania Marinoff, Jessie Ralph, and Rhys Alexander.

Mr. Mackenzie's able direction was apparent from start to finish, and he has every reason to be proud of his second production for Pathe's Gold Rooster Plays.

ARNOLD DALY USES GOULD HOME IN A COMING PATHE PICTURE

Arnold Daly, who is producing pictures for Pathe, under the name of the "Arnold Daly Series," sprang a new one this week in his desire for realism. Mr. Daly wanted to get a ballroom scene with all the realism of life in high society. Mrs. George Gould generously permitted the use of her palatial residence at 857 Fifth avenue, New York. Upper Fifth avenue opened its eyes to see a long line of carriages and automobiles discharging scores of men and women in evening dress at high noon before the Gould residence, and received by lines of powdered footmen in full livery. A number of persons well known in society consented to appear in the ballroom scene and doubtless when "Ashton Kirk, Investigator," the name of the picture, is shown upon the screens they will be easily recognized.

In the Wake of the Selig Special

BY NEIL G. CAWARD

San Diego, Cal. Thurs. Jul. 15, 1915.

Squedunk, Iowa,

Dear Jack—

MY gosh, Jack, i just thot about them carbons you was gonna order when i left. Spose you furgot to order em and you aint got no more by this time why then the house is closed, cause you cant give no show without no carbons. Order em rite a way Jack and ill pay for em when i get bak.

Well this a.m. when i and the missus woke up we was in San Jose what is down in what they call the frute country. They wasnt no eating kars on the train and so we had to get up early and go up town after sum eats. We walked and walked and walked before we kum to a eating house and by golly Jack whadda you think i and the missus brekfas kost me moren a dollar and all i had was some cant elope and sum ham and eggs and sum fryed putatos and sum biskits and sum flapjacks with sir up and sum koffee and sum brekfas food and sum oranges and peaches to finish up on, and the missus had the same.

Anyway Jack after we got out of that robbers joint this hear Herb Hoagland had went and hired all the st. kars in the place and we all got a board and went for a ride thru Santa Clara vally. A feller named Andy Hill got on our kar and letchured a bout what we was seeing and sum o the farms no biggern what Bill Higgens owns this hear Andy Hill said was worth 1 thousand dollars a acer clear, to the folks what owns em on acct. the frute what they raze. Ed Kohl what lives in Cleveland and runs a cuple of pitchur shows allowed as how that beat counting the box offis re seats and by golly Jack i believ it.

This hear Andy Hill what is a grate joker said as how moshun pitchur men being used to easy pickins ought to be able to do well as frute pickers, but it aint all as easy pickin as Andy Hill thinks is it Jack. Well we saw prune orchards, and cherry orchards, and appel orchards and lemon orchards and apricot orchards and peech orchards and evry thing. And we went thru Los Altos, and Los Gatos and Saratoga, where the Saratoga chips cums from Jack, and then to Palo Alto where this hear Leland Stanford university is lo kated and we got out o the kars then and went up to walk a round that place and Jack it was sum place. Why Jack they got a chappel what cost a hole millyun $ and its got fancy pitchurs all over the outside of it made out o Mozaik what is little bits o glass with gold smeared over 1 side and then the piece o glass is stuck into the plaster on the chappel. This place was all shook up when they had the earth quake in Cal. sum time ago and all this Mozaik kum to pieces but their fixing it up again.

Well Jack it seemed just like getting back home when we got back to the Pull man Kar and found this hear Sylvester what is the Porter of this kar a waiting for us. It was hot out doors in the son, but Sylvester had the curtains down in the kar and it was as kool as a ice house. I tell you what Jack this hear Sylvester nos his biznis.

The next place we stopped at was late this p. m. when we kum to a place called Big Trees where the trees is all red woods and sum o them grows to be 100 ft. high and is as big around as the box offis o the Metropolitan Jack, tho i no darn well you wont believ that. Wate till i get home and i show you sum postel kards o them and the missus she bot a dish made out o this hear red wood. A crost the krick that runs down between this hear red wood trees they got a swinging bridge, hung on a rope and its awful gigly but we got out on it and this hear Eddie Kull what is the Selig camera man he took our pitchurs out there and i send you 1 Jack so you can see how we look.

A bout a ½ hr. later we kum to Santa Cruz what it on the pacific Ocean and Jack they had a band down to meet us and a lot o ladies what is the wives o the Cummershal club with flowers and every lady on the train she got a big bunch o flowers and Jack sum o the flowers they gave the Missus was as big a round as a wash tub, tho i dont expect you to believ that neither.

Well Jack the train run out on a track rite a long-side o the Ocean and they got what they call a Kasino there what is full o postel kard stores and nick nacs and etc. Outside this hear Kasino is the Ocean a rolling in and sum ladies even was in swimmin and there was a lot o sand for the kids to play in and every thing.

When we started a gain we had only 1 eating kar on and gosh we was a hungry bunch, but about 8 oclock we all got fed and that nite they had a cabaray show in the Observatory kar and this hear Clarance Frambers and a Missus Clement and sum more folks did stunts and sum o it was pretty good Jack.

Next a. m. we go to Los Angeles but we didnt stop only a few minets and then we went on to San Diego and as we kept a getting later and later all the time it was 2 oclock when we got there. Rite away we took st kars and went out to the fair grounds and Jack this hear fair at San Diego is a lot better than the one at Frisco only not so big. The bldgs is all bilt o cement and steal instead o being just plaster like the other 1 and its pretty as fary land only at nite it aint so pretty as Frisco.

Rite in the middel o the grounds Jack they got the Cal. bldg what is a big tower with steps goin up in the middel and Jack for o you can klimb the steps and see out over every thing. Its about a millyun steps up to the 1st landing, but after you get up that far and see how nice every thing looks you keep rite on klimbing up a millyun more steps and the more steps you klimb Jack the further you can see. i and the Missus klimbed up to where we could see down to Mexico and we didn't klimb no further cause whats the use. Sum o the Selig party took a auto mobile over to Coronado beach and other places but i and the Missus went to a eating place called the Cristobel and stayed on the fair grounds. This hear eating place was all rite only every thing kost so much. Only Jack i guess they had to charge a lot cause the same nite we ett there the goV o Calif and the goV. o Utah was eating there 2.

Well after supper Jack i and the Missus went down what they call the Ishthmus what is a st all full o side shows like a karnival and we saw all sorts o things. One place Jack they had a lot o dancing girls and i wanted to go in there but the Missus she held on to my cote so in stead o going to see the dancing girls we went thru a gem mine and saw how the gems is dug out o the ground.

Now Jack its most mid nite and the train is goin to pull out for Los Angeles what we went thru this a. m. only we didnt stop only a few minits so i guess i male this letter here and i rite you again from Los Angeles after i seen the Selig studio and the rest of the pitchur places what they got there. Just think Jack tomorrow i and the Missus is going to see this hear Kathlyn Williams what we had in the adventures of Kathlyn and a lot more fillims. And Jack if this hear Tom Santschi is mean to her in real life like we seen he is in pitchurs ill bet you ill bust him 1 in the nose Any way i tell you all about it next wk when i rite you again. Yours Respy,

Ed.

PATHE PLANS NEW SERIES

It is announced that Pathe is contemplating a novel series to be called "Who Is Guilty?" or "The Struggle for Life," which will be along lines somewhat similar to the very successful "Who Pays?" series recenty released.

"Who Pays?" a series of twelve three-part dramas founded on social crimes and problems of very-day existence, enjoyed country wide publicity and there was an insistent demand for another feature along these lines. The new series will deal with actual problems of modern life, presenting them in a forcible and graphic way. Each chapter will be complete in itself, and the Pathe name is assurance of the quality of the pictures.

Louis J. Gasnier, general manager of the Pathe Exchange, is now making the necessary arrangements for this great series, and it is probable that the pictures will be released in the fall. They will be put out in conjunction with a strong chain of newspapers which will carry the story simultaneously with the showing of the pictures. Balboa is being considered as the producer because of the success with the "Who Pays?" pictures.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROVES FILM "GUARDING OLD GLORY"

During the time that F. O. Nielsen was in New York, he took the opportunity of exhibiting his picture entitled, "Guarding Old Glory," to Major General Leonard Wood, commander eastern division United States Army; Secretary of War Lindley M. Garrison; Secretary of the Navy Josephus Daniels, and other officials of the United States Army and Navy. As one of the most powerful instruments for the education of the American public regarding the defenseless position of the United States and its absolute unpreparedness in the event of war, Mr. Nielsen's picture was commended by every official of the United States War Department that had an opportunity of seeing it.

Mr. Nielsen was complimented both in person and in writing for the splendid patriotic work which he was engaged in, and these officials of the government are very anxious that every man, woman and child in the United States should have an opportunity of seeing these pictures as an object lesson.

Considering the tremendous public interest in the subject of preparedness for war, Mr. Nielsen's picture should be booked by every exhibitor in the United States and since this can be done and this tremendous lesson taught with these intensely interesting films, without any expense on the exhibitors' part, since his patrons will be glad to defray the expense of the showing, we believe that we are assisting a patriotic movement in making this suggestion to the exhibitors of the country.

METRO PRESENTS EMMY WEHLEN IN "WHEN A WOMAN LOVES"

Another celebrity of the theater to appear on the screen is Emmy Wehlen, a dainty little woman who has dramatic productions. Miss Wehlen has youth, rare beauty, and charm, which have endeared her to thousands who have seen her in musical and other plays. She has a sweet soprano voice, which, of course, will be lost in moving pictures, but her personality will reach beyond the screen, and that is what is most desired in her present work. The Metro Pictures Corporation picked her above all others for the production of "When a Woman Loves," now being made by the Rolfe Photo-Plays Company, in which she will make her debut in the silent drama and on the Metro program.

This play is an original drama by Charles T. Horan. It is peculiar in many ways, for it combines romance introduced in a novel manner, with problems delicately solved, and there are many strong dramatic punches.

A new box office record for the Majestic theater, Detroit, "the millionaire's picture palace," has been established by Essanay's six-part feature, "The White Sister," during its seven days' engagement there a week ago.

WORLD FILM CORPORATION ISSUES DETAILED FINANCIAL REPORT

The executive committee of the World Film Corporation headed by Milton C. Work, of Philadelphia, and including George B. Cox, George A. Huhn, Jules E. Brulatour, Joseph L. Rhinock, Briton N. Busch, has given to Lewis J. Selznick, its vice-president and general manager, the strongest commendation that any motion picture executive could ask for.

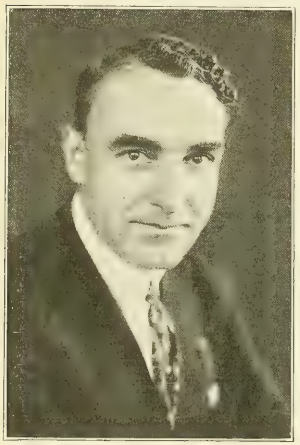
The letter in detail that was sent to the stockholders of the World Film is as follows:

This covers the first year of the operations of the World Film Corporation and its producing companies, of which it owns all the capital stock. The figures show that the total profits were $329,025.03, practically all of which was earned during the second half of the year. It is obvious that it requires considerable time to place in running order an organization so complex; it is, therefore, most gratifying that all expenses were met during the first six months, and that each monthly report during the second half of the year improved upon its predecessor.

The World has allowed the sum of $371,279.34 and the Peerless $80,264.65 for depreciation. The Peerless has not figured as of any value properties used in a completed picture which may be utilized in future plays, with great resultant saving in cost of production. The earnings of the World and the companies owned by it are now upon a basis of over $500,000 per year, and with the present line of business should steadily increase. The World will not, however, limit itself to the character of business carried on during its initial year. Contracts for foreign operations have been concluded, and the returns from this new field are just beginning to come in. These contracts are for pictures previously used in this country. From them the World, during its next fiscal year, will receive a minimum net profit of $200,000. As soon as business conditions abroad become normal this amount is sure to be greatly increased. A number of other new features, including a weekly release of highgrade comedies and a weekly news service are about to be introduced.

The most important, however, of the recent extensions of the World is a contract concluded within the past few weeks with the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, a $3,000,000 company, recently formed, with the financial backings of Messrs. Ladenburg, Thalman & Company, of New York, and managed by some of the most able film men in the country. For a period of ten years the Equitable will release through the World one feature and one comedy per week, the World to receive a handsome percentage of the gross receipts as compensation for the services of its matchless distributing organization. This contract means that the World, without any risk on its part, and without appreciably increasing its overhead, has acquired a new department which is sure to add materially to its profits. In accordance with the understanding reached at the time of the making of the contract, Lewis J. Selznick, general manager of the World, has been made vice-president and advisory director of the Equitable. This assures complete harmony between the two corporations.

APEDA STUDIOS ENLARGE



In order to accommodate the ever increasing demand for larger quarters, the Apeda Studios have moved into their own building at 212-214-216 West Forty-eighth street, New York City, where they have installed one of the largest and most up-to-date photographic establishments in this country.

Under the guidance of A. W. Dreyfoos and Henry Obstfield, the business of this concern has grown rapidly since its formation in 1908, when a little "one-room plant" at Fifty-fourth street and Sixth avenue marked the inception of the present organization. In three months time the progressive partners were compelled to desert their little living room for larger quarters at 38 West Thirty-fourth street, where the concern thrived for about a year, when the continuous growth of the business demanded still larger floor space.

About three-quarters of a large loft at 102 West Thirty-eighth street was then considered more than ample room for the transaction of the company's business but before long it was found necessary to take over the entire loft. Further enlargements in floor space rapidly followed each other until two lofts and an attractive show room on the ground floor of the Thirty-eighth street building comprised the company's plant. When no more enlargements were possible in this building, Messrs. Dreyfoos and Obstfield found it necessary to move again with the result that their establishment is now housed in its own building on West Forty-eighth street, where an output in excess of 10,000 photographs a day is being handled in as systematic and efficient a manner as can be obtained through the employment of the best laboratory experts and artists and the installment of the very latest mechanical equipment.

JOHN PRATT NEW LUBIN DIRECTOR

John Pratt, the new Lubin director, who filmed such famous plays as "Shore Acres," "The Garden of Lies," "The Fighting Chance," "The Nightingale," "Paid in Full," "Arizona," and "Soldiers of Fortune," has begun work on the great war play, in which Rosetta Brice, Richard Buhler, Francis Joyner and Charles Brandt play the leading roles.

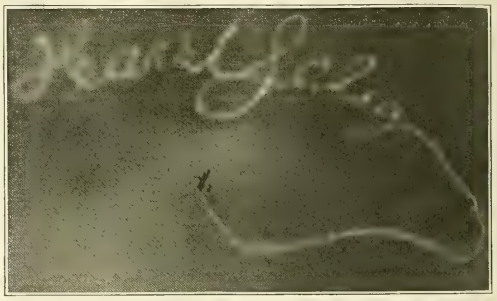
Jack Pratt.

Mr. Pratt, who belongs to the famous Pratt family of Massachusetts, was in the days gone by, one of the best known baritones on the American light opera stage. He appeared with Eddie Foy in "Hamlet on Broadway"; with Blanche Ring; with Lena Abarbanell in "The Balkan Princess," "The Girl Behind the Counter," and other Broadway successes. Three years ago he decided that there was more scope for his ability in the motion picture world, and he began his career as a director.

In the new Lubin war play, which is as yet unnamed, Mr. Pratt promises many surprises for the photoplay goer, both in photography and in acting. The play itself, written by Louis Reeves Harrison, while a war play, depicts only the effect of war—burning villages, scenes in hospitals, and the like. During the entire five acts, only one shot is fired. It is expected that this very unusual and stirringly powerful play will be released for the public before the end of September.

The Mittenthal Film Company, Inc., calls attention to the fact that the "Heinie and Louie" productions, which Motography stated in its issue of July 24, would appear on the Standard program, will, instead, be released through Pathe.

SELIG'S UNIQUE PUBLICITY



At Los Angeles during the recent national convention of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and again at San Francisco at the Panama Pacific Exposition the Selig Polyscope Company obtained some unique publicity as a result of a float entered by the management of Clune's Auditorium and a daredevil stunt by Aviator Art Smith.

Selig's "Rosary" float in the Elks Los Angeles parade.

In one of the illustrations the float which symbolizes the Selig Red Seal play, "The Rosary," is shown, bearing on its sides advertising not alone of the play but also of Clune's Auditorium and in flowered letters "B. P. O. E." During the entire Elk's convention and the week previous capacity business was reported by the theater running this Selig feature production.

The second illustration depicts Aviator Art Smith as he appeared when writing "Hearst-Selig" in the sky with his aeroplane, which bore a smoke-pot from which streamed the smoke that formed the legend as the daredevil aviator turned and looped in midair. The feat was performed over the Exposition grounds on Thursday, July 15, and was commented upon by the thousands who witnessed it.

Art Smith in his aeroplane writes "Hearst Selig" in the sky.

When the International Jury of Awards at the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco, Cal., gave to the Nicholas Power Company, of New York City, the Grand Prize for the most perfect motion picture projecting machine, it placed the stamp of approval on what is universally recognized to be one of the most wonderful machines of this character the world has ever seen.

Inceville Prepares For Billie Burke

NO QUEEN MORE HONORED

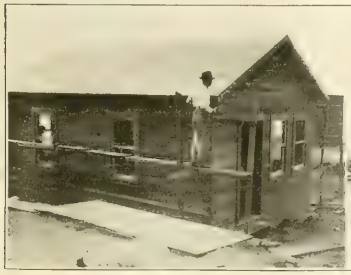
BILLIE BURKE is to be treated like a queen when she arrives in Los Angeles to make her debut on the screen in photodramatic productions of Thomas H. Ince. The magnetic little star is scheduled to reach the "city of films" during the last week in August and yet for the past six weeks, preparations have been under way for her reception and subsequent comfort. Mr. Ince has left no stone unturned in his efforts to provide the charming actress with every luxury that money can buy and hands can build, and he feels content, now, that she will find no room for complaint during her stay on the Pacific coast.

Of course, the captivating Billie will be whirled to Los Angeles in a private car. That is only in the usual course of events. Most big stars demand private cars, though all don't get them. But when she steps from the Ince limousine at Inceville and there learns with what care the director-general of the N. Y. M. P. forces has arranged her accommodations she is bound to revel in the realization that "a fuss is being made over me."

The most pretentious extreme, perhaps, to which Ince has gone for the complete comfort of Miss Burke is a magnificent steam yacht, designed for her transportation to and from Catalina island where she will reside. The yacht is schooner-rigged, measures 123 feet over all, and has been declared by marine architects to be one of the most graceful and generally beautiful vessels in the waters of the Pacific. It is the property of Carlyle P. Anthony, the Southern California millionaire mining magnate, who is an intimate friend of Producer Ince. Mr. Ince had but to ask for the craft and it was immediately loaned him by Mr. Anthony, who is now in South America.

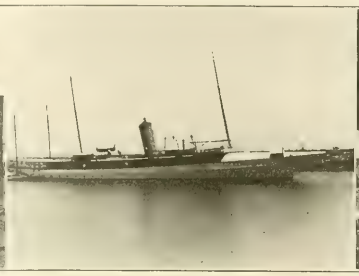
Next, in point of beauty, among the things Mr. Ince has engaged for Miss Burke is the bungalow. This is situated on the largest of the picturesque Santa Catalina islands, thirty miles from the California coast, and has been the home of Mrs. Octavia Middleton, a wealthy eastern tourist, who spends her winters in Southern California. The bungalow is typical of the style that predominates in the fashionable residential sections of Hollywood and environs and will, it is expected, prove a most comfortable, as well as luxurious, dwelling for Miss Burke. The actress will be taken there each evening aboard the yacht and brought back to the Long wharf, adjoining Inceville, each morning.

The finishing touches are now being applied to the special dressing room, which will serve Miss Burke as her quarters while she is engaged at the big plant. It faces directly on the ocean and will, therefore, be constantly cooled by the breeze that blows in from the water. Three rooms are included within the structure—a reception room, make-up parlor and bathroom. Each is being handsomely decorated and equipped with the popular wicker furniture, odd rugs and other appurtenances to lend charm as well as comfort. A piano and victrola will be installed for Miss Burke's amusement during leisure moments.



Miss Burke's leisure moments may also be passed, if she so chooses, in the water, for Mr. Ince has built a special private bathhouse for the star on the sandy beach which fringes Inceville. So anxious are they, even, to demonstrate their mettle as swimmers, that a number of the more atheltically-inclined actors at Inceville have volunteered their services as life-guards.

Truly, Billie Burke is to be treated like a queen.



WARNER OF STANDARD THINKS FIVE REELS ARE TOO MANY

President Albert Warner of the Standard Photoplay Distributors Inc. is a strong advocate of the four-reel picture as opposed to the photo-drama of five-reel length. As one of the first practical film men to foresee and profit by the handling of multiple reel subjects through exchanges devoted exclusively to them, Mr. Warner's judgment on the subject to which he has given to much careful thought and study is receiving careful consideration by the Standard program producers who are under contract to supply feature subjects to the distributing company in addition to the regular weekly releases.

"Having fought so hard for the feature picture in the days when it took a good strong argument to make film men see its wonderful possibilities, I have naturally watched its development with keen interest, not only from the manufacturer's and the exchangeman's standpoint but from the more essential view point of the theater manager and his patrons," said Mr. Warner at a recent meeting of the Standard program interests. "At one time I was strongly in favor of the three-reel picture —but I now see that it was because the subjects were either not big enough to call for more length or were not handled in a large enough manner. For this reason—the bigness of many of the subjects and their elaborate staging—I concede one more reel. But it seems safe to assert that, with very few exceptions, four reels are ample for the artistic presentation of a "feature" photo-drama and a very large percentage of the five-part productions now on the market would have been wonderfully improved, had they been planned by the scenario author and the director for four-reel subjects and confined to that length.

"However, the exceptions must not be overlooked. There are subjects so large from the standpoint of dramatic interest and entertainment value that six, eight, ten and even twelve or more reels are necessary for their perfect picture-interpretation.

"This, of course, brings us to the all-important point of the capable judgment of the producer—that faculty which is the determining factor in the success or failure of those who undertake the measurement of dramatic values with the great theater going public as their judge and jury. But why, when the motion picture producer makes his mistake, in judgment, does he make it—nine times out of ten—on the long side of the film? Granted that, during the excitement of the staging of a worthy picture and the attendant enthusiasm, the temptation is generally to enlarge, but knowing this, why is the check reign or the safety valve not more carefully adjusted?"

LASKY PRODUCTION OF "CARMEN" SETS NEW RECORD FOR FILMS

For the first time on any screen, the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company's production of Geraldine Farrar in "Carmen" was shown to a selected audience at the Isis theater in Hollywood, Cal., this week. In the audience were leading representatives of the motion picture industry in Southern California and representatives of the press.

The following article appears in the Los Angeles Tribune. It is signed by Monroe Lathrop, a well known member of the staff. It is:

Any lingering doubts of the skeptic as to whether the drama as we have long known it and its cinema rival have been or can be fused into something worthy the name of a new art must have been dispelled by a gathering late Wednesday night at the Isis theater in Hollywood.

The occasion was an invitation first showing of the filmed production by the Jesse L. Lasky Company of "Carmen," with Geraldine Farrar in the title part, which is now ready for early release. The spectators were Miss Farrar, Pedro de Cordoba, Wallace Reid and others of the cast, Mr. and Mrs. Lasky, William de Mille, writer of the scenario; Cecil de Mille, director of the production; Lou Tellegan, the Greek actor, who came to America as Bernhardt's leading man; Mrs. Morris Gest, Laura Hope Crewes, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Farrar, Raymond Hitchcock, Flora Zabelle, Louis Sherwin, dramatic editor of the New York Globe; Mr. and Mrs. Frank Mills, Tully Marshall, Marion Fairfax, Mrs. David Belasco, Frank Reicher, Nat C. Goodwin, Margaret Moreland, Blanche Ring, Frances Ring, Charles Winnegar, Thomas Meighan, Margaret Leslie, Orrin Johnson, Donald Brain and many other lights of the dramatic world who have moved, as William A. Brady wails, with the Rialto from New York to Los Angeles.

If there are any who have looked on the advent of Miss Farrar into the new field with suspicion as primarily a commercial exploitation, they will be convinced that time, opportunity and metier have come together in this case. There will be many to accord her absolutely first place among those who have devoted themselves to the camera.

"Carmen" is the last word as production. Its scenario treats the classic subject with fine respect and is technically superior, its scenery is what only California can supply, and the photography not only does justice to it, but works wizardly with the imagination, and the direction of the play is the crowning achievement of Mr. De Mille.

But Miss Farrar's is the real triumph. She is on the screen almost constantly, the pivot of turmoil, of romance, of intrigue, and if the play has incessant hold, which it has, it is because of the witchery, physical beauty and animal spirit with which she floods the rapid incidents of Carmen's pictured career. Miss Farrar's acting is unaffected and wholly devoid of stagy devices, and her greatest effects are achieved with the play of her plaint countenance, which records changes of mood with electrical speed and sharpness. The prediction may safely be ventured that she will put an end to the vogue of many a namby-pamby screen "star" by the comparison she will challenge.

Her's is a difficult pace to follow, but Pedro de Cordoba and Wallace Reid in the male parts ably meet the situation with acting of a high order, notable for restraint not often found on the screen. The "big scenes" in Carmen are the revels in the tavern, the duel in the same place, the crowds in the Plaza de Toros in Seville, the women's melee in the tobacco fight and the bull fight. All are marked by extraordinary direction, fine mass acting, exactitude of settings and sustained interest. The thrills in "Carmen" are intrinsic, not lugged in with cheap and vulgar obviousness. It is a new yardstick for cinema production—real drama in film at last.

BALBOA COMPANY ENJOYS PICNIC

Tom Doyle's cattle ranch among the foothills of Orange county, in southern California, was the rendezvous recently for the players and people connected with the studios of the Balboa Amusement Producing Company, of Long Beach. The big event of the day was a splendid repast, al fresco, under the live oaks and sycamores that surround the camp.

All sorts of outdoor sports were indulged in during the day. A talented lot of people like those clustering about the Balboa studios never permit time to drag heavily upon their hands. President H. M. Horkheimer of the company headed a baseball team in person and pitched it to victory.

Among those of national prominence in the amusement world who participated were Lillian Lorraine, Daniel Gilfether, Paul Gilmore, Lewis J. Cody, William Courtleigh, Jr., Corenne Grant and others. On several occasions, the Balboa players used the Doyle ranch for taking pictures. The owner liked them so well that he invited the whole company down. He proved himself a splendid host.

"DIAMOND FROM THE SKY" BRINGS EXHIBITOR CROWD AND A SUMMONS

Stories about "crowded houses" among motion picture exhibitors are so plentiful that they have become commonplace. But here's a new one. The Toronto Sunday World of July 25 prints the following:

"Canada, Province of Ontario, County of York, City of Toronto, To Wit.

Playhouse, College street, M. J. Thayler:

"Whereas you have this day been charged before the undersigned, Rupert E. Kingsford, Esquire, Police Magistrate in and for the said County of Toronto, for that you, on the nineteenth day of July, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and fifteen, at the said City of Toronto, did, contrary to law, permit the entrance to your moving picture theater to become obstructed by allowing the public to stand therein.

"These are therefore to command you, in his Majesty's name, to be and appear before me on Thursday, the twenty-second of July, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and fifteen, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, at the Police Court, City Hall, in the said city, on or before such other Justice or Justices of the Peace for the said City of Toronto as shall then be there, to answer to the said charge, and to be further dealt with according to law. Herein fail not.

Given under my hand and seal this twenty-first day of July in the year 1915, at the City of Toronto aforesaid.

(Signed) RUPERT E. KINGSFORD,
Police Magistrate."

The above is a copy of the summons served upon the Playhouse theater, College Street. It goes to show what a big drawing card "The Diamond From the Sky" is, and also shows that Lottie Pickford is just as big a favorite as her sister Mary."

Manager Thayler of the Playhouse answered the above summons and explained to the justice how impossible it was to keep the crowds from coming to see "The Diamond From the Sky." He pleaded his own case, simply reciting the facts. He explained that he had no control over the interests of his patrons. He described briefly the story of "The Diamond From the Sky" to his honor. The result was that the judge dismissed the case, arguing that it was perfectly natural and unavoidable for crowds to jam the lobby of the Playhouse under the circumstances.

J. E. ROBIN JOINS C. A. BAIRD

Joseph E. Robin, for a number of years widely known as projection expert and sales manager, particularly in connection with the Simplex machine, joined the business staff of the Baird Moving Picture Machine Company on August 2, as general manager of sales.

J. E. Robin.

From an apprentice stage electrician Mr. Robin has worked himself to high positions as electrical engineer and projection specialist. Besides having a high technical knowledge of electricity, chemistry and mechanics, he has a personality that ingratiates him wherever he travels and makes many friends for the company he represents.

In his boyhood Robin was an electrical prodigy. He had a journeyman's knowledge at 12, but was obliged to take his first job as an apprentice, which was as a stage electrician at the Bon Ton Theater in Salt Lake City in 1893. He later held many jobs as stage electrician in many cities. This naturally brought him in touch with the motion picture machine when it was first introduced in the American theaters. Becoming a motion picture operator was only a step and he has been connected with that branch for 15 years.

Robin first was a Biograph operator, then with Lumiere, later with Pathe and finally with the Edison Company. Then he was appointed projection expert for Kinemacolor, which was just becoming known. When the Simplex projector was introduced early in 1912, Mr. Robin joined that company as special representative and toured the United States and Canada for the next three years.

Since leaving Simplex he has been at the San Francisco Exposition, where he was appointed advisory engineer to the director of works and supervised the many projection outfits on the grounds. Mr. Robin has compiled many standard tables on projection, particularly the elaborate Simplex table. He is also a member of the I. A. T. S. E.

MOROSCO ENLARGES PLANT; IMPROVEMENTS THROUGHOUT

Owing to the increased activity of the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company, the studio facilities have had to be enlarged, and Master Mechanic Earl Olin has a force of men at work on a new storehouse and shop which will give over 10,000 square feet of additional floor space. The structure will be of corrugated iron, and of the latest type of construction throughout.

The laboratory is also undergoing many important extensions, notably the installation of two powerful Sirocco blowers of the most improved type, which will provide an entire new ventilating system equal to anything known to laboratory hygiene today. By this system the air the laboratory employes breathe will be completely changed every thirty seconds, and will insure wholesome working conditions, even with the night and day work which the increased output of the plant has made necessary.

Another improvement is the installation of a large new washer and drier. The new unit is about five times the size of the old, and effects a motor-driven air purification whereby heated air is blown through dripping water into the drying room for drying the film after it comes from the developing baths. Last week the printing room was augmented by the arrival of four new printers. They are equipped with several important improvements, one being a new and better style of light changes, and another a higher rate of speed whereby their capacity is increased.

GOEBEL TO REMAIN EAST

O. E. Goebel, who contributes the Premier brand of pictures to the Standard program, is establishing offices in New York City where he will conduct the business affairs of his company instead of in Los Angeles as he has done in the past. The Premier studio is located in Santa Paula, California, and has, until recently, been producing two-reel dramas for release on the United program. Several weeks ago Mr. Goebel was called east to take an active part in the organizing of the Combined Photoplay Producers, Inc., which is the producing group engaged in staging regular weekly releases for the Standard program. He remained in New York until a regular outlet for his pictures was assured by the contract which makes the Standard Photoplay Distributors, Inc., the distributors of the Standard Pictures and has now decided to make New York his business headquarters so that he can co-operate with that company in the selection of stories which meet the direct demands of the theater owners, as reported by the exchanges, and also be in a position to judge the output of his studio from the standpoint of one not too closely associated with the pictures during their production.

WINIFRED KINGSTON WITH THANHOUSER

With the addition of another reel a week to the output of the New Rochelle organization, Edwin Thanhouser has once more shot an arrow at the Broadway sky and brought down a star of magnitude to add to his stock company. This time it is the superb Winifred Kingston, the girl who set London on end. She will be best remembered in America for her work in "The Servant in the House" and in the all-star production of "Thais;" also as the leading woman with William Hawtry and Cyril Scott.

Winifred Kingston.

Miss Kingston has been in this country only six years, but her triumphs in London won her quick favor with American managers. There she held forth in leading roles at the Scale Theater for several seasons and it was about then that she created her sensation by her work in "Hypocrites" under Charles Frohman. When the management of Hilda Trevelyan, known as "The Maud Adams of England," searched Europe for an understudy for her, they signed Miss Kingston up for the honor as soon as they saw her.

In the films her work is not new to picture-lovers. Under the Paramount trade-mark she has played the leads in "Elixir of Youth," "Soldiers of Fortune," "Squaw Man," "Brewster's Million's," "Trail Divides," "Call of the North," "Capt. Courtesy," "Love Route."

Miss Kingston still retains some of the broad accent which we here call "Londonish." Though born in England and trained in Scotland and France, she loves America and Americans. She is an ardent motoriste, confessing to speed mania. In joining the Thanhouser organization Miss Kingston takes up an association which she describes as the "Nearest to the legitimate atmosphere that the films afford." It is likely that she will be seen in the first three-reel Thanhouser release, a story specially written by Phil Lonergan.

FAD FILMS ORGANIZED TO MAKE FEATURES AND COMEDIES

The Fad Films producers, with offices at 1431 Broadway, New York, announce that they will make feature and comedy pictures for a well-known program, starting with the first release that is now nearing completion, under Director J. A. Fitzgerald, the producer of the successful Peaceful Rafferty series of Irish comedy pictures for the World Film Corporation.

It will be the policy of this new company to make comedies featuring Tammany Young, the former Mutual-Reliance star, and the creator of Bill in "Bill the Office Boy" series by that company. Others that will support him are Marie Weirman, late of the Universal, Vitagraph and Lubin; Marie Rohmere, Sidney D'albrook, Lou Story, Billy Bowers, the famous tramp comedian; Charlie A. Mason, Robert Rice, who has been featured over the United circuit for years; Joe Shia, George Thelian, Julias Timer, and Frances Ward. They will also make features.

Prominent picture people connected with the company are, Frank P. Donovan, the former moving picture editor of the N. Y. Star, Photoplayers Weekly, and Hearst's papers, and a press and advertising man in the film world, who is known pretty nearly every where pictures are shown. W. P. Adams, the well-known writer and author, is head of the scenario department. He formerly had his own film producing company in France and Holland, and was forced to cease operations owing to the present war.

J. A. Fitzgerald, is too well known to need any extended mention here. He has made some of the best pictures of the year both in the drama and comedy line. He will have sole charge of all the productions.

The Fad Company will make pictures for other companies under a contract basis. For instance, if some one has a scenario and insufficient capital to produce it, the Fad Company will finance and make the picture for them. The name Fad stands for the three people mentioned above, Fitzgerald, Adams, and Donovan and it is their ardent hopes to make it the best known in the film world.

"SALVATION NELL" COMPLETED

The principals of the producing company of the California Motion Picture Corporation have just returned to San Francisco from New York City, where they have been engaged in getting "on the ground" scenes for the film adaptation of Edward Sheldon's "Salvation Nell." The production is now completed and, according to picture authorities for whom a private projection was provided by the producers, is destined to create a sensation in motion picture circles.

Greater attention, say those who have seen the picture, could scarcely be given details, than was accorded "Salvation Nell" by the producing company. An instance of the care taken in this respect is found in the Salvation Army scenes which in setting, costume and general action, have been perfected through advice from the highest officials in the Salvation Army. No less care has been taken in the tenement scenes, both interior and exterior, which contribute largely to the production.

A feature of the picture which is causing favorable comment, because of its dramatic aptness, is the injection into the story of a number of scenes from fashionable Broadway cafes, as a contrast to the squalor of the tenements.

Beatriz Michelena, who plays the part of Nell, has never had a role in pictures so well adapted to her versatile dramatic art. The intense situations of the play have given her an opportunity that has never before been hers since she first began to act for the screen. In arranging with Edward Sheldon for the picture rights to "Salvation Nell" it was specified that Miss Michelena, whose work Mr. Sheldon greatly admired, should take the title role.

Efficiency in Studio Management

By H. O. STECHHAN

"FOR a motion picture plant to be efficient, every one connected with it must pull together," says H. M. Horkheimer, who has developed a wonderful system of efficiency at the Balboa studios, in Long Beach. In fact, the results that he has obtained and the business he has built up are one of the marvels of modern film history.

H. H. Horkheimer.

Although the motion picture industry has become one of the largest in the world and represents more than a billion dollars, its producing end offers untold opportunities for improvement. Being young, many primitive methods obtain in it and there is a lot of waste motion before the finished product is turned out. That's why there is lots of room for increased efficiency in studio management.

"Getting results is another way to express efficiency," said Mr. Horkheimer when requested to outline just what he had accomplished in building up the Balboa Amusement Producing Company. "With unlimited capital, anyone can do business. But when you've got to spread a few thousand dollars over a big surface, it takes organization and that's what efficiency is.

"It's working toward a common end. In this business the goal is perfect pictures. No one man can produce them by himself. There are a dozen different departments that enter into a cinema production. As you reduce the possible friction among these you approach the maximum of efficiency.

"For instance: I have a fixed time each day for meeting my directors. We go over the work in hand. I have confidence in them, hence I never ask them why they are doing a thing while they are at work. I wait until the production is finished and then pass on it. In the same way, I have conferences with the various cameramen. I visit the laboratory and keep in touch with the wardrobe department.

"My effort is to promote a family feeling among all Balboa employes. They know I am always approachable and accessible. No matter what position a man holds, he can talk to me either offering suggestions or telling his troubles. I listen to each person and take his saying for what I think it worth. In this way I have gained much information that has helped to promote efficiency in the precincts of Balboa.

"I encourage all employes to use their heads about their work. For this they are rewarded. Original research is most desirable. William Beckway has made several improvements on the Bell and Howell camera which Don Bell, head of the manufacturing concern, has offered to buy. Robert Brotherton, our chief chemist, is perfecting a wonderful color process for films.

"For our actors, we have provided the most comfortable dressing rooms ever constructed. Their contentment and satisfaction is as essential to perfect pictures as the finest lens. We are beautifying the grounds about our plant, believing that they will then help to inspire the workers who make the 'pictures beautiful.' For artistic results, there must be harmony.

"While I do not outline to my scenario department what I want in the way of stories, still I am in constant touch with it. We consult together. I am in touch with the assembly room, the paint shop and the property storehouse, at all times. My experience has taught me that without co-operation, there can be no efficiency. When you have 250 people working in a dozen different departments, they are like so many cogs. To get results, all must turn smoothly.

"There are still lots of opportunities to enhance studio efficiency. We have made considerable progress, it is true, because of the loyalty of our people. I strive to impress each one that his interests are Balboa's interests and vice versa. Merely for making a mistake, our employes are not discharged. Insubordination is the one thing I will not tolerate, because the person guilty of it cannot be loyal. Therefore, he hinders efficiency.

"To date, no problems have arisen too hard for my assistants to solve. For instance: We needed a large supply of water, colder than could be drawn from the city mains, for use in the laboratory. A canvas of the men revealed a refrigeration expert on our rolls. He made a survey of the situation and on his recommendation a 16,000 gallon reservoir was erected. Our people have also remedied many other difficulties such as arranging diffusers and securing sets."

It goes without saying that such capable men are not forgotten by Mr. Horkheimer when there are promotions to be made. With his brother, E. D. Horkheimer, who is the company's secretary-treasurer, he makes a daily inspection of all departments. In this way, improvements are continually being made.

"No matter how capable one man may be," says Mr. Horkheimer, "he alone cannot make a big studio like Balboa efficient. Thorough team-work alone gets the maximum results. Concerted action on the part of all employees toward the common end is absolutely necessary. What we have done at the Long Beach studio has been made possible by the splendid corps of assistants. In the last analysis, I am firmly convinced that efficiency consists chiefly of having the brains to employ the right people."

The City of Los Angeles, as a tribute to David Wark Griffith, the producer of "The Birth of a Nation," arranged an extensive program of entertainment which took place at the vast Civic Stadium recently. This event was hailed as "D. W. Griffith's Pageant of the Photoplay."

Many Players to Compete

CARNIVAL PLANS OUTLINED

MUCH enthusiasm is being exhibited by the film actors in the big splash of fun outlined for the coming Carnival and Field Day at Brighton Beach, August 21, which will be a holiday for the entire trade. All the big stars will be there and take part in serious competition in crazy stunts. This isn't a private affair. In fact, the public is especially invited and it will have opportunity to enter some of the contests and meet at close range the stars of the screen. Over thirty events are on the program, with nearly 400 entries, and the contests are the more interesting because of the many lady entries. In the morning are the water sports which will begin at ten o'clock. There is a ladies' swimming race with Lottie Briscoe, Lillian Walker, Edith Storey, Jeanette Ehrman, Helen Constance, May Finnigan and Vera Hastings. The winner in the various contests will receive handsome prizes, eight cups having already been donated. Jeanette Ehrman has entered the tub race with eight men.

An exhibition of fancy diving will be given by Ida Schnall, whose reputation as a water nymph is well known. Chester Beecroft, holder of many medals in water contests, will do some fancy diving, as will also A. L. Lack. A 75-foot dive will be made by J. Albert Hall.

One of the most attractive features of the day will be the grand parade at 1:30 p. m., led by queens of the screen in gay costume on horseback. The queens so far selected are Mary Pickford, Lottie Briscoe, Mary Fuller, Lillian Walker, Anita Stewart and Beverly Bayne.

Immense floats representing some of the popular current feature plays will be elaborately decorated by several of the big film companies and smothered with pretty lady players.

The usual run of field day sports to commence at 2:30 will be participated in by the photoplayers and the ladies have entered in nearly all contests. It will surely be interesting to watch Anna Q. Nilsson, Edith Storey, Violet Merserau, Lottie Briscoe, Margaret Riccardo, Grace Wick, Augusta Bliss, Ruth Miller, and Rose Tapley in a ladies' horseback race, and likewise to see King Baggot, Harry Spingler, Guy Coombs, C. Fisher, Eddie Dugan, R. O'Connor, Tom Hagan, J. Williams, J. Beede, J. P. Ryan, A. G. Goode, Hector Dion on a bunch of animals furnished them in the men's horseback race. The real tough contest will be the obstacle race, for Joe Humphreys will never let slip the opportunity presented him, especially with Hughie Mack, Jack Hopkins, Wally Van, Thomas R. Mills, T. Myers, E. Waters, G. Dubois, J. Moran, A. Shannon and Vinton Ross entered.

And who ever expected to see Leah Baird and Kate Price in a three-legged race? That alone will be worth the price of admission. Elsie Macleod and Dolly Caine, Aleck Neil, Jr., and C. Frank, H. Connollan and V. Blair are also entered. And then picture Kate Price chasing a greased pig. The pig will be regularly made up with white grease paint and rouge. Others in this race are Margaret Johnson, Marcelle Schlessing, Vinton Ross, J. James, H. Kief, J. Ward, T. Devens, Mrs. A. Shannon, J. Kepple, F. Brule.

Edith Storey, Helen Constance and Maurice Costello will match their shooting abilities. In the automobile race are entered Arthur Ashley, Lawrence Marston, Tony Moreno, Walter Healey, Reggie Lyons, Willie Blackton and Wally Van, May Riccardo, Annette Agnelly, A. Chevalier and Louise Barry will prove their dexterity and capacity in a watermelon-eating contest. They will fast from Friday noon till the time for the event.

The goddess contest is a farcical event to be participated in mostly by young men who will endeavor to imitate the mysterious charms of Miss Anita Stewart in her appearance as "The Goddess." The imitators will be obliged to combine dignity with comedy with rare ability in order to win the prize. Earle Williams and Anita Stewart, who are at present appearing in the serial picture, "The Goddess," will act as judges.

The film making contest will prove a most interesting one for the public. Five or six different comedy scenarios will be transformed into pictures in a remarkably short space of time. These scenarios are to be furnished by writers in competition. From all scenarios received the best six will be selected and prizes awarded the winners. The scenes will be taken right on the grounds and the pictures directed by six directors all at the same time. The films will be developed, printed and ready to show in the evening between dances, and the public will decide which is the best. The director of the one so adjudged will receive a handsome prize.

The shore dinner will be served at 6:30 and afterward until midnight there will be general dancing with a prize dancing contest, in which Harry Morey and Flora Finch, Rose Tapley and John T. Kelly, Ben Wilson and Dorothy Phillips, Kate Price and Bill Shea, Naomi Childers and James Morrison will be entered.

FRANCIS WORCHESTER DOUGHTY SECURED BY DAVID HORSLEY

Francis Worcester Doughty, known to every reader of light fiction, has been secured by David Horsley to write the scenarios for the two-reel animal pictures, featuring the Bostock collection of performing beasts, which Mr. Horsley will produce and release on the Mutual program, beginning about the middle of September. He left New York this week for the Horsley studios in Los Angeles.

Francis Worcester Doughty is a national character. His novels, which have been published in almost countless number, have delighted readers for many years. He was born in Brooklyn in 1850 and when but twenty-two years old succeeded to the literary business of his mother, Sarah Parson Doughty, who was prominent in literary circles and contributed to almost all of the big publications of the day.

Mr. Doughty's first motion picture scenario was written in 1913. It was called "Hook and Hand" and was produced in five reels by the Solax company. After that time he wrote many photoplays, one of his greatest effects being "The Twenty Million Dollar Mystery," the serial story which he prepared in collaboration with Howell Hanchell.

ARTHUR JAMES AND MERRITT CRAWFORD JOIN METRO'S STAFF

Arthur James, formerly director of publicity for the Mutual Film Corporation, is now directing the publicity and advertising of the Metro Pictures Corporation in addition to being in charge of its scenario department. His resignation from the Mutual staff takes effect on Saturday, August 14. Mr. James left the Telegraph, where he was Sunday editor and the creator of Beau Broadway's scintillating remarks, to reorganize the Mutual scenario department. Plans were changed over night, and he was made manager of the publicity department instead of being sent to the Reliance-Majestic studio at the coast as was the original intention. During his reign over Reel Life, this attractive house organ was brought up to a more than paying basis; an unusual feat with a magazine instituted with the expectation of its being a dead expense as far as operation is concerned. The snappy, readable publicity which emanated from his office each week in large bunches speaks for the manner in which the news of Mutual activities was circulated. Mr. James' career has been a varied one, and decidedly full of pep and ginger. He handled the publicity campaigns of the American Tobacco Company and the Du-Pont Powder Company during their "trust" suits with the government, and put over thousands of dollars' worth of newspaper advertising under the guise of reading matter for the Singer Building. His newspaper experience totals up to eighteen years, includes the New York World, New York American, Evening Telegram, Globe, Mail, Telegraph, and covers writing baseball, politics, dramatic criticisms, and news of the sensational, international, matrimonial, social and garden varieties.

Arthur James.

Merritt Crawford.

Merritt Crawford, for the past fifteen months editor of Reel Life, is also now a member of the scenario staff of the Metro Pictures Corporation. Before joining Reel Life, Mr. Crawford was well known through his connection with the Telegraph and later as managing editor of the Motion Picture News. It is understood that his resignation from the publicity department of the Mutual Film Corporation takes effect on Saturday, August 14.

The announcement that Lewis J. Selznick is to leave the World Film Corporation is groundless. He will continue to direct the destinies of this corporation and will also act as vice-president and advisory director of Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation.

V-L-S-E FEATURES PACK HOUSES AS RESULT OF ODD ADVERTISING

After heralding the coming of the V-L-S-E feature, "The Rosary," with a large amount of advance advertising in the newspapers and on the billboards, Mr. O'Neil of the Palace theater in Manchester, N. H., caused a special set of scenery to be built, representing a choir chancel, and engaged Mme. Eckert, soloist, from the Boston Opera House, and John Foley, another well-known singer, in addition to the "sanctuary" choir of twenty voices. For the musical accompaniment, Mr. O'Neil installed a special organ. This proper staging of the feature photoplay caused a furore that resulted in most gratifying financial returns to the Palace.

Another novel advertising stunt was originated by the Orpheum theater at Eau Claire, Wis., while playing "The Island of Regeneration." For this feature the management fitted up a small island situated in the Eau Claire river, about one hundred feet from a passenger bridge to represent the island depicted in the Rev. Dr. Brady's story, and set up cutouts of Edith Storey and Antonio Moreno on the bank in an attitude as though waiting for the arrival of a boat. Above the figures a large sign announced that "The Island of Regeneration" was showing at the Orpheum theater. This unique publicity stunt made a big hit and drew enormous business to the house.

REUNION AT KEYSTONE

There was a grand reunion of the big factors in the success of the New York Motion Picture Corporation at the Keystone studios at Los Angeles the day following the signing of the incorporation papers of the Triangle Film Corporation, when Messrs. Kessel, Bauman and Sennett arrived from Colorado, where the $5,000,000 corporation was put over.

When the Chicago arrived in New York Friday, July 30, from Bordeaux, France, one of the first passengers to land was Emile Pathe, senior member of Pathe Freres Moving Picture Company of France, who was accompanied by Russell Hunting, mechanical director of the firm, and is expected to remain in this country for several months, making his home in New Jersey.

The Function of Feature Productions

By CHARLES J. GIEGERICH

THE principal feature in the selling plans of the Big Four draws attention to a really remarkable condition that exists in the exhibition end of the motion picture industry. This condition is pointed out in the V. L. S. E. advice to its representatives in the field, in the slogan—"Sell advertising to sell film."

A comparatively small percentage of the exhibitors of the country, yet realize the value to them in the proper publicizing of the features exhibited in their theaters. In most cases exhibitors book a feature and are then content with the display of a few posters outside of the house, and the arrangement of a few frames in the lobby, entirely overlooking the fact that if they book strong features, they can attract many patrons that do not ordinarily pass the theater.

The Big Four point out that during the 18 odd years of progress the bulk of the improvement in the art has been made by them. Practically all the advancement in pictures, is in the productions themselves. They have grown better in story, photography, motif, and action, and with each forward step they have grown more expensive to produce. The latter item, the cost of production, must be taken into consideration by the exhibitors. The public has been educated to expect great things of the silent drama, and if the manufacturer is to continue to produce high-class picture plays, he must be reimbursed for his investment by receiving a fair rental for his films.

In other words, exhibitors, if they want the best the market affords, must pay a fitting price for their features; and, to do this, they must adopt more advanced advertising methods.

The advancement in exhibiting circles has been confined almost entirely to the building of better theaters, with better appointments and greater conveniences for the patrons; but the matter of attracting greater patronage has been almost entirely overlooked.

The day has gone when a theater may depend upon the people who pass its doors or who live in its immediate neighborhood. At one time, a few banners and a couple of lobby stands were all-sufficient. Today the exhibitor must advertise his shows more extensively if he expects to continue to run a profitable business.

Through the newspapers he can advise every prospective patron of his film offerings, and if he has the class of pictures they want, people will come from far and near to view them. Every theater will find newspaper and billboard advertising very profitable investments, provided only the program they offer is of such quality that the people attracted will not be disappointed.

The motion picture art has reached a state of great dignity, and in offering their productions to the exhibitor, the Big Four state that they will stand on their merits alone, but advise their exhibitors, almost to the point of insistency, that the V. L. S. E. productions must be advertised in order to attract the maximum amount of business.

They point out that meritorious features will bring increased patronage at increased prices, if the public knows where and when they are being exhibited. They claim that the people attracted through this advertising will become part of a wonderful advertising force working gratis in the interest of the theater showing their subjects.

The V. L. S. E. point out that it is neither profitable to the exhibitor nor the manufacturer to expend large sums of money producing big, forceful picture plays, if they are to be presented in the same inconspicuous manner as the less important one and two-reel subjects. It does not pay either the exhibitor or the manufacturer to take a big powerful picture and put it in the theater, merely for the passerby or the regular patron of the theater to see.

The claim is made, and it has already been demonstrated by the Big Four in many sections of the country, that patrons will not only be attracted from distant points to a theater showing the V. L. S. E. subjects, but that these patrons are willing to pay an increase in admission prices.

The life of any business depends upon the new customers it creates, and the big, meritorious feature is vital to the industry in that it creates new patronage. If the big feature is used merely in the nature of a souvenir to the regular patrons of a theater, it is not serving its mission or returning the proper financial reward to the exhibitor.

The big feature has a distinct duty to perform. That duty is the promotion of new business, and while it is promoting that new business, it will return increased profits to the theater where it is properly advertised and presented.

The film manufacturer, to continue to produce the high grade, expensive picture plays now demanded by the public, must receive rentals commensurate with the increased cost. This money must come from the exhibitor, and the exhibitor in turn must receive it from the public, and to do this, he must attract greater patronage at better prices, through advertising the superior features offered in his theater.

The public demands good pictures, and the public has always been found willing to pay for what it demands. It is with this in mind that the Big Four have adopted the selling slogan—"Sell advertising to sell film."

W. N. SELIG TO INAUGURATE NEW IDEA IN COMEDY PRODUCTION

Since the time when William N. Selig first inaugurated the picture play serial idea with "The Adventures of Kathlyn," the motion picture market has witnessed a deluge of "perils," "adventures," "episodes," "chapters," etc.

But now Mr. Selig is about to introduce yet another new idea in filmland. It is not a "serial" this time, but a series of comedies. This innovation is a series of a dozen two-reel rural comedies. Each comedy contains virtually the same cast of characters, and each comedy is complete in itself, possessing an easily recognized plot. The same characters disport themselves in each one of the series, thus cultivating and sustaining continued interest in these real American people.

The rural characters have been drawn true to life and those who have read the scenarios pronounce the idea the best having to do with real American life since the time of Charles Hoyt. There are no "blood and thunder" or "falling-off-of-the-cliffs" situations in this forthcoming series, for the comedies under the unique name of "The Chronicles of Bloom Center," deal with ruralities of true Yankee persuasion, people you have seen, people you know, and the stories of their trials and triumphs, frills and foibles, are not overdrawn, and yet they are interesting, highly entertaining and, at times, appealing.

President Selig in a recent interview asserted: "There is a sad dearth of true comedy both on the stage and in motion pictures. The people are tiring of he 'slap-stick' near humor with monotonous chases, allegedly funny falls, and unfortunate paper-hangers, etc. We have worked for over a year in the endeavor to provide a series of comedies which will carry situations logically humorous. We think that we have succeeded in our efforts and we are sure 'The Chronicles of Bloom Center' will be cordially received by the exhibitors. These comedies will take us all back to our boyhood days. There is the county fair, the country circus, the 'Old Home Week,' the time when spiritualistic seances were all the rage in the rural communities and other convincing and yet funny plots of true American atmosphere.

"I thought so well of 'The Chronicles of Bloom Center' that I ordered a complete village erected at Los Angeles. It was complete even to the town pump. There is the general store and post office, 'Melodeon Hall,' the smithy, the church, the volunteer fire department and other rural essentials."

Postmaster Pash, Constable Plum, Phil Pickle, Mrs. Plum, the Ladies Art Embroidery Club, and other characters and organizations peculiar to rural America will appear in "The Chronicles of Bloom Center." The home talent theatricals, quilting bees and the general congregating of the villagers at the "station," when the "3:30" comes in, are all faithfully set forth by an all-star cast of character actors and actresses especially engaged by the Selig Company for the series. Marshall Neilan was the director in charge of the production. It is expected that "The Chronicles of Bloom Center" will be released in the near future and the Selig Company is preparing for special exploitation believing that the "Chronicles" will fill a long felt want on the part of motion picture exhibitors.

IRWIN OF V.L.S.E. THINKS SMALL THEATERS CAN SHOW FEATURES

Speaking on the subject of features, Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the V. L. S. E., says "The experiences of a little theater in a small Texas town with a Big Four feature, shows the bearing on the industry of the multiple reel picture play from a new angle, and a study of this case, gives rise to the question of whether the feature will not make paying propositions of many small houses that are now doing little better than paying expenses."

That feature pictures have a great bearing on the industry, goes without saying. But just what bearing, especially in the future, seems to be a matter on which many authorities disagree, judging from the public statements of many prominent men in the industry.

Predictions have been made that the vogue of the feature will die out, and that small reel subjects will eventually be found to represent the silent drama's proper sphere. Other men prominent in film circles have said that while the feature was here to stay, it had a field of its own and belongs exclusively to theaters of large seating capacity; and that the small theaters could not profitably exhibit them.

The experiences of the exhibitors showing big features may be profitably studied by all of the producing interests, for it is from the exhibitor that the manufacturer learns the trend of the business.

In this respect, the results attending the exhibition of a feature in a small town in the middle west, is interesting in its bearing on the relations of the big feature to the house with a small seating capacity.

In Navasota, Texas, a town of 3,000 population, the Queen theater, with a seating capacity of only 275, booked the Big Four feature "Graustark," paying a high rental for it. Following the advice of C. A. Meade, the V. L. S. E. representative in Texas, the manager of the Queen advertised the attraction in the local newspapers and raised his admission prices to 20 and 25 cents, with the result that on the very first day of its showing, the box office receipts totalled $212. This certainly proves that big features can be profitably shown in small theaters, if the handicap of limited seating capacity is offset by higher admission prices.

Considering the small fixed expense of a house with only 275 seats, daily receipts of $212 would make the showing of any feature a profitable investment.

This case indicates that the problem of offsetting the handicap of limited seating capacity, may be solved by the simple combination of strong features, proper advertising and increased admission prices.

In the small towns of the country where the luxury of a big theater is unknown, the introduction of big features will unquestionably give an added impetus to the popularity of motion picture entertainment, and for the privilege of seeing the big feature productions of the great producing companies, the people of these towns will, undoubtedly, give the theater their support to the extent of paying increased admission prices.

That "Hot Weather" Yelp

IN EVERY large city—or country town, either, for that matter—one can find the exhibitor who at this time of year will raise the cry of poor business, claiming that hot weather has ruined his patronage and that if the hot spell continues he will be forced to close.

Question him closely and you will discover that anticipating the hot season he has cut down his service, is putting on the cheapest sort of a show that he can possibly hope to "get by" with, that his advertising has been either dispensed with altogether or trimmed down to a few thousand dodgers which he has carelessly distributed by some small boys, and that the front of his theater looks as if it had already experienced a sunstroke.

With these facts all in your possession it is easy to arrive at the conclusion that the complaining exhibitors themselves are to blame for their poor business, and that their "hot weather" yelp is only an excuse for a lack of real showmanship.

In that same city you will find that the enterprising, hustling type of exhibitor is making regular daily trips to the bank, wearing one of those smiles that won't come off, and on being questioned will admit that business is fine.

The enterprising exhibitor, instead of sitting down to think about the hot weather, will set about convincing his patrons that his theater is the coolest place in the city. He will arrange the front of his house so that it looks to the passerby as cool and comfortable as a Kentucky colonel about to partake of a mint julep. He will see that his lobby is cooled by ice-washed air, that the cashier in his box office wears a smile indicative of how perfectly content she is with her surroundings, and that the usher in the doorway in white ducks fairly radiates hospitality and good nature.

Under the above conditions his patrons' first impression of the cool interior of the house is bound to be one of peace and solid comfort, and immediately upon entering their minds will unconsciously tell them that this theater is quite the most ideal spot they have yet discovered. The real showman will have further arranged for the proper mental effect upon his patrons by adorning his stage with green settings, whose vines and blossoms will soothe and refresh the jaded amusement seeker, and perhaps will install a gently splashing fountain at either side of his screen, thus lending still further to the patron's illusion of perfect content.

Instead of offering a desert drama as his feature production, with scorching sands and a thirsty hero, the wise exhibitor will book a multiple reeler the action of which is pictured amid cool woodland dells, through which one can obtain glimpses of a winding stream, bordered by tall trees and grassy meadows. He will follow this feature production with a travelogue showing the snow-tipped mountain peaks of some Alpine hamlet and conclude his program with a rib-tickling comedy that is played amid the breakers of some seacoast resort or on the fresh greensward of a spacious city park.

The exhibitor who is a natural born showman will make his patrons reluctantly rise from their seats to again encounter the heat without, for all the time when they have been fairly reveling in physical comfort, the thermometer has in reality stood at a point generally considered far from comfortable and it is only the character of the surroundings that has produced the illusion. By creating the illusion, however, the exhibitor has raised his patrons' opinion of the films as a summer amusement to new heights and thus benefited the whole industry by his foresight and keen showmanship.

"Hot weather" to the experienced exhibitor means better business than does any other season of the year, for he knows instinctively that with proper surroundings, proper film bookings and proper house equipment, he can coax the average passerby into his house and make him more comfortable than in any other surroundings. With the thermometer climbing the tube, it's too hot to go joy riding, too hot to sit in the park, too hot to shop, too hot to seek relaxation at the ball park or on the golf links, too hot to stay at home, and so with the right kind of a film house the enterprising exhibitor will convince his neighborhood that the most sensible thing to do is to spend an hour or two at the picture show.

THEY SHOULD THINK BEFORE WRITING

"MAKING the Most of the Movies—a Plea for More Generous Support of the Better Kind of Pictures."

That is the title of the editorial in Pictorial Review for September. It sounds good, doesn't it? It's a promising title—but that's as far as it goes. The editorial itself is a plea for censorship to the extreme limit. Editor Vance wants to see a board of censors established in every state, city, town and village. He recognizes the intelligence of the National Board of Censors in his opening paragraphs and condemns it utterly before he quits. And his reason is that he has seen "primitive passion rise rampant" on the screen.

We do not know how much or how little influence the Pictorial Review may have on public opinion. But we know we would not recommend its policy to the mothers of the growing children of this country. What intelligent parent today would keep children in seclusion, protected from all knowledge of the world, and expect to save them from temptation later in life? Ignorance is not innocence. The bar-room brawl, robbery and burglary, even murder, are real. We have them with us in gruesome reality in every morning's paper. Should we conceal from our children that such things exist?

The editor responsible for the Review's attack represents a single intelligence. The pictures he condemns have already been approved by a large group of other and presumably equal intelligences. One man who would successfully demonstrate the incompetence of the National Board of Censorship must first prove that his own mental equipment is superior to the combined brain power of the Board's whole censoring committee.

We admit there are some film productions that do not come under the jurisdiction of the National Board. That is another matter. But it is self evident that the exceedingly small proportion of such subjects does not justify the creation of a thousand censor boards. Ordinary police power and common law are ample to handle any possible situation arising from this source.

One official and officious censor, such as that in Chicago, is too much. Multiplication of censors would be quite intolerable. Editors of lay newspapers and magazines look at the matter as they do most subjects, superficially and without proper study. Writers to the public carry responsibility. They have no right to argue for so serious an innovation as universal censorship until they have at least realized what it means to a free country.

Jake Wilk, one of the oldest alumni of the Caward Art Scollege, has started a rival institution for the benefit of indigent authors.

Well, Jake, just to show you that we bear no ill will we hope the Authors Associated Agency becomes even half as famous and prosperous as the Caward Art Scollege. Believe us, it will be a long time, however, before you receive a $1,000,000.00 endowment as did the old original institution, unless, of course, the inimitable Lloyd decides to become one of your clients.

And there's always the danger that if you and your Agency become too famous, we may, ourselves, fill in an application blank.

HOW ABOUT IT?

With much interest we read that Vitagraph has established a Scientific Department and First Aid Hospital which, according to the honest press agent, will add materially to the efficiency of those who, from necessity, are compelled to subject themselves to danger.

Can you imagine a Vitagraph director encouraging a weak kneed thespian, whom he has just ordered to jump off the roof of a twenty-story building for picture purposes, but shouting "Don't be afraid, Joe, the Scientific Department will look after you when it's all over!"

Now if somebody would only establish a casket factory in the neighborhood of the studio we feel quite certain the players would all put more "pep" into their work.

At last it has happened. We knew it had to come sooner or later and have waited in breathless suspense to see which player and which company would be the victim. One of these magazine writers, who is breaking into the movie field by writing stuff for the magazines about this or that player, has at last slopped over by wishing upon Ford Sterling of Keystone the honor of being the dad of "little Billy Jacobs," despite the fact that Ford has nothing running around the house but his racing car.

Oh, well, Ford, cheer up. It might have been a lot worse. Suppose they had made you the brother of the Cherry sisters, or something like that. Gosh knows you ought to be proud over being merely THOUGHT the father of so talented a youth as "little Billy."

OUR BURG.

Chauffeur Law, the mechanical genius who frequently manipulates and controls the speed buggy of Joe Finn, takes us to task because we neglected to mention him in previous references to the car, which he solemnly asserts he has come to love like an engineer loves his engine or a stenographer her gum. All right, Law, here you are.

Roy McCardell, creator of "The Diamond from the Sky," stopped off in our Burg last wk., while en route to New Rochelle for a change of atmosphere.

D. W. Russel, a former res. of this Village, leaves this wk. for England, where he goes to rep. Dave Horsley. Watch your step, Russ, when the Zeppelins appear.

Does anybody know what's happened to Ben Beadell? We hain't heard of Ben in a coon's age.

Gosh how the grass is growing in Our Burg since the sun came out again.

If all the entries aren't closed in that Field Day and Carnival to be held at Brighton Beach, we want to nominate Don Meaney for the hop, skip and jump contest. From Essanay, Chicago, to New York; from New York to Universal City, Los Angeles, and from Universal City to the Quality studios is some jump, we maintain.

Our boss, Ed Mock, also wants in on the standing broad jump.

We've never seen him do it, but we understand he's there.

Give him a chance.

"The Battle Cry of Peace"

AND OTHER RELEASES OF THE WEEK REVIEWED

WITH a distinct mission to perform, one heartily endorsed by public men of note as necessary and noble, "The Battle Cry of Peace" will soon be released by the Vitagraph Company of America. But not until after it has told its story and made its appeal in the White House, Congress, the various Army and Navy clubs, and before the legislatures throughout the country. The picture's argument is, "Prepare for peace through preparedness for war."

For some time past newspapers, books, and certain prominent citizens of this country have told the people that the United States invites foreign attack through its crippled naval and military conditions. Commmodore J. Stuart Blackton of the Vitagraph Company conceived the idea of showing the people the danger of being unprepared for war, demonstrating at the same time that a larger army, an increased and better navy, and an adequate supply of munitions form a preparedness for war which develops into a preventive against it.

The result of Mr. Blackton's commendable and broad-minded initiative is "The Battle Cry of Peace." When shown before an invited gathering at the Vitagraph theater last week, it was ten reels in length. This will be cut down to nine reels or possibly a little less. Summed up briefly, the picture's lesson is that: "With a peace attitude backed by a formidable naval and military support, the United States can maintain the respect and harmonious intercourse of any country. The peaceful attitude without its warlike setting is a spineless and ineffectual defense against the attack of a nation desirous of taking our country with its wealth, resources and institutions."

"The Battle Cry of Peace" has a message for every resident of the United States, whether he be a naturalized citizen or not. As the production clearly shows, the advent of war here would mean the devastation or outright capture or both of the country's financial capital, New York City, and the commercial paralyzation of the entire nation. This means the breaking up of homes, the wanton killing of thousands, and the inhuman rule of the vices which are so prevalent during war times.

Reading matter is earnest but slow, poorly circulated considering the population, and often without effect at moving the people to a realization of our needs for a strengthened army and navy. Mr. Blackton quickly realized this on reading Hudson Maxim's "Defenseless America," and the two immediately arranged to collaborate on Mr. Blackton's plan of filming the propaganda. Nothing like this has ever been done before, and the results which it will in all probability produce will render unnecessary a repetition of such an appeal.

"The Battle Cry of Peace" is a visualized plea written on moving picture film. It was produced under the personal supervision of J. Stuart Blackton, who, in writing the scenario from the argument in Mr. Maxim's book, wove about the facts a strong, concise story; a dramatic framework through which the lesson of preparedness against war is driven home.

Under Mr. Blackton's direction finely drawn characters are portrayed by L. Rogers Lytton, James Morrison, Mary Maurice, Louise Beaudet, Harold Hubert, Captain Jack Crawford, Charles Kent, J. Swaine Gordon, Evart Overton, Belle Bruce, Norma Talmadge, and Lucille Hammill. In addition to these are seen: Hudson Maxim, in a prominent part; twenty-five thousand National Guard troops; eight hundred members of the G. A. R.; eight thousand supernumaries, and five thousand horses.

John Harrison, a patriotic young American, returns home one evening, fired with enthusiasm by a speech which he had heard Hudson Maxim, international authority on arms and ammunition, deliver at Carnegie Hall during the afternoon. He resolves to do his utmost towards acquainting others with the dangerous state of inefficiency of our army and navy, but more than once he is scoffed at by those who are such firm believers in peace that they see no use for war preparations. Harrison is engaged to Virginia Vandergriff, whose father is a peace enthusiast.

Emanon, a caller at the Vandergriff home and one of the organizers and leaders of the peace movement, is a member of a band of conspirators whose lobbyists have successfully blocked every effort made to appropriate money for a more adequate army and navy. When the Peace Movement reaches its height, the enemy opens fire upon New York. Standing out of range of the guns of Forts Hamilton, Hancock and Wadsworth, their ships bombard the city, destroying it, with the aid of their aeroplanes, and gaining complete control over the vitals of the nation—the districts in the East in which are located most of our factories, shipyards, ammunition and gun-building plants.

The inevitable wave of vice follows. Mr. Vandergriff is shot, and Harrison bayoneted in a vain endeavor to protect Virginia from a brutal officer who is attracted to her beauty. The climax is reached when Mrs. Vandergriff shoots her two daughters to save them from disgrace at the hands of the foreign soldiery. Several allegorical scenes follow, contrasting the crushed, bleeding Columbia that might be with the noble, supreme Columbia that should be.

The final scenes alleviate the horror of the drama of war previously enacted by showing the Harrisons and Vandergriffs seated comfortably at home, secure in the knowledge that no nation dares to even attempt to invade our shores, for the spirit of '76 has asserted itself throughout the country, recruiting our army to sufficient numbers and making our navy one recognized throughout the world as a fighting force which stands for peace—nay, commands it.

A few of the notables who appear in the picture are Admirals Dewey, Sigsbee and Marix, Generals Leonard A. Wood and H. C. King, Secretary of War Garrison, Hudson Maxim, the inventor, and Captain Jack Crawford, former scout.

"The Strange Case of Talmai Lind"

Reviewed by John C. Garrett

ON August 26 "The Strange Case of Talmai Lind," a three reel production, will be released by the Selig Polyscope Company. The story, which is a most unusual one, was written by Kathlyn Williams and is well adaptable for screen use, It is written around the life of a little girl, who is born a few days after her mother has been thrust into a cage with a lioness by her drunken husband. The same night that the child is born a little cub is brought into the world. The child has the body of a woman, but the nature of a wild beast.

Miss Williams, one of the world's best known screen stars, takes a double role. She portrays the character of Hilda Lind and later that of Talmai Lind, the daughter of Hilda and Carl Lind, which part is taken by Guy Oliver. These very popular Selig stars are most ably supported by an exceptionally strong cast.

Carl Lind is a collector and a tamer of animals. One day while under the influence of liquor he goes out to try to tame one of the lions. As his wife hears the animal roar and hears her husband's voice raised in anger, she goes out to plead with him not to strike the animal and he becomes infuriated and pushes her into the cage with the beast, locking the cage. Here Hilda faints and is unconscious when her husband, after realizing what he has done, goes in after her and carries her home.

Not long afterward a beautiful baby girl comes to gladden the home of the Linds and they call her Talmai. As the girl becomes older her parents notice that she has a very strange temperament. Whenever a certain lioness, which was born on the same night that Talmai was, is abused the girl seems to experience the pain at the same time.

Some years later Talmai is a beautiful untamed girl of the mountains and is always happy when alone with her own special lion. Amos Drew, an assistant lion tamer, falls in love with the girl. She repulses him, however. Drew tortures the lioness and this is all simultaneously experienced by Talmai, who attacks Drew and with all the fury of a beast scratches his face.

Paul Burnham, a young artist, who is engaged to be married, comes into the mountains to paint and here he meets Talmai. The girl is immediately attracted to him and they spend many happy hours together. Paul paints a portrait of her and on the day it is finished she passionately declares her love for him. Burnham starts to take her into his arms, but suddenly thrusts her aside and leaves her. Talmai is heartbroken and goes to her mother. She tells her mother that she has always been different from other people and now even the man she loves is afraid of her. Hilda Lind then relates to her daughter what had happened in the wild animal arena just before she was born.

Talmai later goes into the mountains and there spies Burnham and his fiancee, who has come to see him. Amos Drew in a drunken wrath goes toward the lioness' cage and after some time he deliberately fires his gun. In the mountain Talmai screams, clutches her side and falls senseless. Paul rushes to the prostrate form of the girl and she recognizes him, smiles and then passes away.

"Rags"

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon

"RAGS" is one of those screen triumphs which deserve to be knighted and set upon a pedestal as a goal for future dramatic efforts. In it Mary Pickford has her best picture since "Tess of the Storm Country." If there is anything to choose between the two, it is in the story of the latter, which is deeper and more pathetic than "Rags;" consequently affording Miss Pickford more opportunity for the style of portrayal which is her forte—the chaacterization of an impish, intensely human little girl, the more ragged and hoiden the better.

But considered alone and on its own merits, Famous Players' recent release, "Rags," is a truly artistic production. The artistry does not rest in the natural scenery or in the environment or wardrobe of the explosive little beauty, "Rags," but instead in the little momentary subtleties which make the picture fairly breath in spite of its flat length and breadth dimensions.

Critics are licensed to review and comment upon plays, but the real, dyed-in-the-wool criticism lies with the spectators in the theater. One of the best illustrations of this picture's worth is reflected in the banner attendance at the Strand theater, New York City, during the week in which it was shown. The Strand always has a satisfactory attendance because it is the Strand, but it takes a photoplay like "Rags" to crowd the house at each program performance, rainy and fair nights alike, and have the people emerge from the theater after the show commenting upon and complimenting the excellence of the production.

"Rags" dares anyone to lick her.

An appealing little figure with a world of expression at her command, Mary Pickford is the central figure of the story at all times. But the plot-constructive spotlight turned upon her does not amount to a fault-finding searchlight as is often the case when a play is built entirely upon one character. Little Mary's inimitable mannerisms hold their charm and originality to the last scene, radiating a spirit of fun and snap which contrasts well with the strain of pathos that here and there finds its way to the surface of the story.

In support of Miss Pickford is a well-chosen cast, the most prominent members of which are Marshall Neilan as Keith Duncan, Joseph Manning as John Hardesty, and Joseph Farrell MacDonald as Paul Ferguson. Another who had much to do with the success of the picture and who is unseen upon the screen is James Kirkwood, responsible for the masterly direction, the scenic atmosphere, and for much of the fine quality of the photography.

Briefly, the story is of a little girl known as "Rags" but named Glory by her mother who, after two years of miserable existence with her husband, a drunkard, died at the child's birth. In spite of her father's abuse and neglect, "Rags" loves him, and defends him against the raillery of the men of the little western village in which Ferguson and Glory's mother settled after their marriage in the East. In the course of events "Rags" meets Keith Duncan, a young engineer from the East, and they become fast friends. After her father's death in an attempted hold-up, "Rags" becomes the ward of her mother's former suitor, John Hardesty, a banker. Here Glory again meets Keith, Hardesty's nephew, and they come to an understanding whose course is in matrimonial channels.

"The Goddess"

CELESTIA'S disillusionment and the consequences of her public denunciation of Barclay and the other two financiers who had planned to use her as a means of bringing the world to their feet form the greatest part of chapter fourteen of "The Goddess," Vitagraph's continued photoplay in chapters. To the mobs falls most of the action in this episode, and better handled or more enthusiastic bodies of extras have never been seen on the screen. The air of realism with which each of their frenzied rushes and attacks is wrapped bespeaks the command and influence of a Napoleon of direction.

Another thrilling and cleverly handled feature of this release is Stilleter's death from a snake bite. A well-balanced suspense is created by alternating close-ups of Stilleter, blinded by the loss of his glasses, approaching, and of the snake, curled up in the grass. There is no doubting the ancestry of the reptile. Close-ups, both before Stilleter's approach and while it is crawling over the professor's body, show it to be a full-grown and able-bodied rattlesnake, its species betrayed by the set of rattles on the end of its tail.

In the opening scene Tommy is seen escorting Celestia to the secluded cave in which she was raised and which she was taught to believe was heaven. While he is explaining to Celestia that it is her duty to reveal her true position to her many followers, Professor Stilleter sneaks up behind the pair and deals Tommy a blow on the head with a rock. Celestia resists his attempts to drag her away. Freddy the Ferret, dozing in the automobile near by, is aroused by the girl's screams and hurries to her assistance.

He arrives on the scene just after Stilleter has hypnotized Celestia with the aid of his crystal globe. In the struggle which ensues, the professor's glasses are knocked to the ground, rendering him sightless. Freddy throws them away, and he and Celestia leave the man to his futile search for the glasses and climb back up the hill to the cave, in front of which they find Tommy, dazed but otherwise unnijured by the blow which felled him.

Stilleter, in his blind wanderings, steps upon a rattlesnake, is bitten by it, and dies. Immediately, the spell over Celestia is broken, and she embraces Tommy, assuring him that she no longer wishes to be a goddess, but instead, his wife. They hurry to the mass meeting at which Barclay is making his fianl campaign speech for the presidency of the citizen-owned corporation which is to supplant the present form of government.

Celestia rushes to the speakers' platform and interrupts one of Barclay's millionaire supporters to inform the people that she is not a goddess, that she was misled by the financial triumvirate, and that the object of the corporation is to further subjugate, instead of benefit, the working class. The financiers make their escape during the excitement which follows, but their absence is soon discovered and the crowd starts after them. Knowing that should the mob find his father it would mean his death, Tommy dispatches Freddy to him with instructions to meet him and Celestia at Gull Isle, where the elder Barclay can find seclusion and safety. The last scene shows the three financiers anxiously awaiting the arrival of their automobile, the shouts of the crowd pouring through the gates of the grounds telling them that their escape (should they effect it) will be a close one.

"The Diamond from the Sky"

"THE King of Diamonds and the Queen of Hearts," is the title of chapter seventeen of the North American continued photoplay, "The Diamond from the Sky." In this chapter there are thrills aplenty and the interest in the story does not lag for a single moment. Vivian Marston, the adventuress, has a chance to display her dramatic ability in this story of "The King of Diamonds and the Queen of Hearts," and her work is exceptionally good. She has at last, through her charms and wiles, captivated the heart of Arthur Stanley, now better known as John Powell, the millionaire.

Esther and Quabba are escaping down the rough mountain side in a buck board when Blair Stanley looking through a pair of field glasses sees them. He and Luke Lovell stumble across the rocky side of the mountain and after a long run manage to hide in a clump of bushes on the road just before the fugitives drive up. The driver of the buck board falls from his seat, a bullet from Blair Stanley's revolver having hit him. Quabba manages to give Blair a smashing blow and Esther, taking advantage of this moment, grabs the reins and they are away.

Down the dusty road they come across Marmaduke Smythe and they give him a lift. That night Smythe gives Esther the Stanley heirloom "The Diamond from the Sky."

asking her to deliver it safely to Arthur Stanley, the heir to the Stanley estate.

of his ranchmen together and they start out after the horse thieves. After a long chase Blair and Luke leap from their horses onto a passing freight train and escape from their pursuers.

In Los Angeles Vivian Marston is becoming more and more friendly with John Powell. One day after having been out to see Powell's new estate, Vivian upon stepping from the car is handed a card—"The King of Diamonds"—by a man standing by. A look of fear crosses the adventuress' face and she goes straightway to the hotel. Here she cuts into the card and finds a letter addressed to "The Queen of Hearts," telling her that she must aid in getting possession of "The Diamond from the Sky." Later she meets the men who had sent her the note and with whom she had formerly been connected in crooked deals and they tell her she must help them to get the gem.

John Powell receives word from Blair Stanley that he wants to board his yacht until his cousin arrives. Blair is given permission to be master of the yacht. He goes on board, dons some of Arthur's yachting clothes and then assumes the role of owner. Esther and Quabba arrive the same day and see the beautiful yacht lying in the bay. Esther, realizing she is not dressed properly, goes and buys a new outfit and after donning the new clothes she and Quabba start off for John Powell's palatial boat.

John Powell shows his new estate to Vivian.

Esther boards the yacht and seeing Blair standing down at the end and thinking he is Arthur rushes toward him. As she calls Arthur's name Blair Stanley turns around. The girl is stunned for a moment, but quickly recovers herself and runs for the side of the boat. Before Blair can reach her Luke Lovell fells him. Esther leaps into the water. We last see her unconscious form floating in the bay and the "Diamond from the Sky" clasped around her neck.

Lubin's "It Was to Be"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward

ONE of the most tensely dramatic, thoroughly interesting and best played Lubin features which this reviewer has been fortunate enough to see of late is "It Was to Be," a three-reeler scheduled for release on Thursday, August 19.

It is splendidly produced, acted by a cast that is satisfactory in every particular, and the story works up to a natural climax in the third reel that grips and holds one's attention throughout. Special credit is due the director for the remarkably realistic scenes he puts over in the last reel, during the period when his hero and heroine are undergoing the third degree grilling of the police. The action at this point is particularly spirited and convincing, and the lighting effect is worthy of note. A bit abrupt, however, is the scene in which the butler's guilt is discovered when the police search his room. After seeing the guilt apparently fastened beyond all doubt on Trevor, one can scarcely credit the police with intelligence enough to continue their search farther, in order to detect the real criminal in the person of the butler.

Ethel Clayton as Anne Winton is both winsome and capable. This Lubin lead will surprise even her warmest admirers by the fashion in which she rises to the dramatic opportunities afforded her in the big scenes of this production. Jack Standing as Trevor and Walter Hitchcock as Randall appear to splendid advantage in the roles assigned them, and the player who interprets the role of Rogers, the private detective, by his restrained yet forceful acting sidesteps the all-too-frequent fault of overplaying a role of this sort resulting in its becoming burlesque instead of drama.

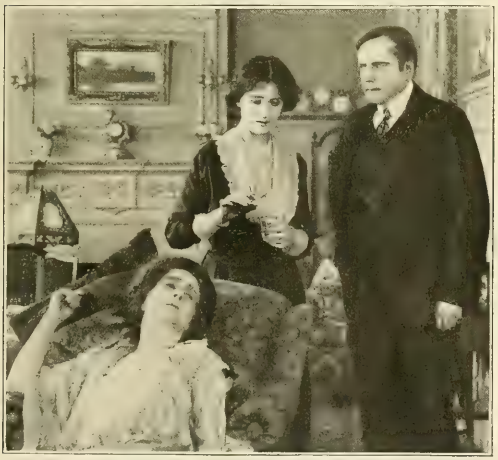
John Trevor leaves his native village to study law in New York without proposing to Anne Winton, the girl he loves, due to bashfulness. In his absence Henry Randall, who also loves Anne, wins her heart and hand in marriage, with the result that Trevor's heart is broken when he learns what has happened.

Years later, Anne is still honest and lovable, though her husband has become a greedy aristocrat whose only thought is for more wealth. When wealthy friends call at his home he berates his wife because she is not elegantly gowned and insults her before his friends. Trevor, now a wealthy and able lawyer, and still an admirer of Anne's is summoned into a business conference at Randall's home when the latter's associates insist that a man of Trevor's honor and respectability is just the man they need to put over a crooked business trick without incurring the wrath of the courts.

Ere Trevor enters the business conference, Anne has a few words with him which result in his telling Randall that he had rather be against than with him in the coming legal battle. As Randall suspects his wife of flirting with Trevor he hires Rogers, a private detective, to shadow her, and the latter reports to his employer that the wife visited Trevor's rooms, not aware that she went there to employ Trevor to institute divorce proceedings against her husband.

When Randall is found dead in his own home and Anne, who discovers the body, summons Trevor, the two are surprised by an unexpected call from Rogers. The detective putting a torn note together thinks he has found a motive for the crime and summons in the police, who give Trevor and Anne a third degree grilling lasting far into the night, and which ends with Trevor telling the minions of the law to arrest him for the murder, that he may save Anne from further torture.



While Trevor is out on bail and Anne is doing everything possible to aid his case, the police find a bag of rubies in the room of Randall's butler and obtain from him a confession that he killed his employer when surprised as he was robbing the latter's jewel safe. This confession, of course, clears both Trevor and Anne, and weeks later in a rose garden we find them renewing their vows of love and planning to start life anew.

The picture is a strong drama with just enough comedy to show up the tense situations and relieve the monotony. Nat Goodwin's personality and forceful portrayal win one's admiration for the ability and strength of the character he portrays.

James Rallston, an unprincipled character, is married to a wealthy widow, and being in financial distress, he plans to acquire her money.

He finds that by dosing her secretly with drugs she will in time become insane, and with the help of Miss Lane, a woman doctor, this nefarious plan is consummated. Mrs. Rallston is taken to an asylum by her husband, who makes arrangements with the unscrupulous keeper to secure an order for her committment. He tells the widow's daughter, Jean, an attractive little tot of five years, that she will never see her mother again. The child is brought up to believe she has no mother.

Fifteen years elapse and Rallston is seen amid the lavish surroundings obtained by his wife's money, on whose decease, which he is eagerly awaiting, he intends to marry Miss Lane, his partner in the atrocity. Mrs. Rallston regains her sanity but is still confined by Dr. Garside.

Rallston loses his daughter's fortune in Wall Street and now attempts to get her to marry Mr. Bigelow, an old friend to whom he has appealed for help. Bigelow, however, who has had his eyes and ears open, is suspicious of Rallston's conduct and finally comes to the conclusion that Mrs. Rallston is neither insane nor dead; therefore, when Jean comes to him for aid, he promises her that he will find her mother.

Bigelow (Nat Goodwin) forces up the price of stock and retrieves Jean's fortune. An animated and realistic Wall Street "fight" is shown in this scene. Bigelow is not long in become apprised of the whereabouts of Mrs. Rallston, and disguising himself as a crazy butler who recites Shakespeare by the yard, he joins the inmates at the asylum. Dr. Garside is completely fooled by the disguise, and Bigelow is successful in getting to Mrs. Rallston and informing the grateful woman that her unjust confinement is nearing its end.

Bigelow preparing to remove Mrs. Rallston from the sanitarium.

In an intense scene Bigelow snatches off his disguise and accuses Dr. Garside of his guilt. The cowardly doctor then takes to flight. Meanwhile, Mr. Rallston decides it is high time for him to reclaim his wife and he starts for the asylum in his touring car. The car becomes unmanageable and plunges down a steep embankment. When Miss Lane sees the dead body of Rallston being brought in, she confesses her guilt. The mother and daughter are at last united, and Jean marries the man of her choice.

Theodore Babcock portrays excellently the avaricious and heartless Rallston, and Julia Stewart, as Mrs. Rallston, shows her sorrow so well that we draw a sigh of relief when she is held safely in the arms of the daughter whom she has not seen since babyhood.

Other able members of the cast are Florence Malone as Jean, Carroll Fleming as her lover, Alex Calvert as Dr. Garside, and Clarissa Selwyune as Miss Lane.

Last and smallest, but not least, are the two clever child players, Madge Evans and Katherine Lee, who hold forth in their childish charm at the beginning of the story.

"The Toast of Death" vehicle for her talents. The part fits Miss Glaum like a glove, and she attains stellar honors even beyond those accorded her in the past, ere the picture is finished.

Supporting Miss Glaum are Harry Keenan as Yar Kahn, prince and commander of His Majesty's Bengalese Dragoons; and Herschel Mayall as Captain Drake of the Royal Singapore Blues. Both interpret the roles assigned them in a manner above criticism, but that is getting to be quite the case with the majority of the stars playing leads in photoplays produced under the watchful eye of Thomas H. Ince.

"The Toast of Death" is the five-reel Mutual Master-Picture released this week under the brand of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, and its story is laid in far-away India. Notwithstanding the fact that California was the locale of the production, a real Oriental atmosphere pervades the film, and it seems doubtful if Director Ince could have staged a more convincing picture in Bombay itself. Elephants, camels, long retinues of servants, Indian princes and potentates, English officers and troops of every color and variety, tropical vegetation, servants, thatched huts and regal palaces, are all there in profusion, each lending its bit toward the whole effect.

Mlle. Poppea of the imperial ballet is beloved by both Captain Drake and Yar Kahn, the Indian prince, though when Drake calls upon her immediately following a visit of the swarthy nobleman, the dancer makes it clearly evident that she loves him, and him alone, considering Yar Kahn as merely a fool who has been smitten by her physical charms. Later, however, the regal gifts of the Indian make their impression upon Poppea, and when the day finally comes when he asks her for her hand in marriage she ponders, "He is a prince. Why not?" Within the hour Yar Kahn rides away with her promise to wed him. Captain Drake is told, later on, that her marriage to the prince need not necessarily make any great difference in their relations, and he soon becomes an honored guest in the palace of the Indian potentate, for the latter little suspects that his white-skinned friend is making daily love to his wife.

Prince Yar Kahn is at length ordered to the command of a post located in the far south country, and reluctantly indeed he takes his bride there, for he realizes that it is a sacrifice for her to go to a lonely villa, far from the luxury, the gaiety and the European friends who have grown to mean so much to her.

With the passage of time Poppea finds herself unable to longer endure the attentions of her husband, whom she terms "a silly fool," and accordingly she writes a note imploring Captain Drake to come to her without delay. Feigning illness, he obtains a furlough and at once set out for the south country, being warmly welcomed by Prince Yar Kahn upon his arrival, though Poppea, in the presence of her husband, appears much surprised that this English captain has followed them to so uninviting a country.

The love trysts between Drake and Poppea become more and more frequent, until finally Yar Kahn discovers what is happening. Instantly all his wrath is aroused, and though at first tempted to kill them both, he decides with all the cunning of the Oriental to put them to a more severe punishment. Retiring to his study, he prepares two glasses of wine, in one of which he pours a deadly poison. Drake and Poppea are then summoned, told that one glass is harmless and the other fatal, and Yar Kahn declares that Poppea must choose between the two glasses and that Drake must drain the glass she chooses, while he will himself drink the other.

Ceremoniously the two men drain the toast of death, and a moment later Drake falls dead across the table. Horrified, Poppea faints and her unconscious form is borne without by the servants. When she regains consciousness, Poppea flees in terror across the sands and through the jungle, while Yar Kahn smiles grimly to himself and nurses a broken heart.

series from the pen of Henry C. Rowland, dealing with the adventures of Dominica Meduna of the Parisian underworld, the role of Dominica in the entire series being played by Nell Craig.

This forthcoming story of the series is in every respect the equal, if not the superior, of those which have preceded it, both from the standpoint of acting, photography and interest compelling plot. Miss Craig makes of Dominica a woman with whom one instantly sympathizes and in whose every adventure one is keenly interested.

She is aided by Ernest Maupin, who makes a truly villainous individual of Gaston Le Grand, the former police inspector turned crook, with whom Dominica severed relations in a previous story of the series.

Le Grand defies capture.

As the tale begins Dominica is discovered nursing a scar she received when she tried to prevent the theft of the MacFarland jewels by the notorious Gaston Le Grand in a previous story. She is surprised to receive a note from the prefect of police summoning her to his office that afternoon and at once decides to obey the summons.

The prefect of police asks her to assist him in apprehending the master thief who is responsible for a great number of petty crimes, and by way of revenge Dominica instantly consents to assist the police and proves her good faith by writing the name of Le Grand on the chief's scratch-pad, declaring him to be the criminal they must seek.

Discovering by a newspaper that Baron Von Hertzfeld is to give a house party in honor of a South American diplomat and that many valuable jewels will be worn by the women attending, Dominica suggests to the prefect that she go to the house party disguised as a newspaper woman as there she will almost certainly have an opportunity of trapping Le Grand.

The chief consents to Dominica's plan, and almost at the same moment Le Grand himself induces the South American diplomat, who is to be the honored guest of Baron Von Hertzfeld, to include him in his party, the diplomat believing that Le Grand is still in the police service.

With everything in his favor, therefore, Le Grand is introduced into the home of the baron and even shown the hiding place of the baroness' most valuable gems, this being a secret panel in the wall, for the baron believes him to be a detective disguised and there for the purpose of "guarding" the jewels.

When Le Grand discovers Dominica he knows he is in danger and accordingly takes advantage of a moment when she is alone to attempt to drown her in a fountain on the grounds, but ere he can complete his purpose her male escort returns and rescues her.

Le Grand has rushed back to the house for the purpose of securing the baron's jewels, but an alarm is raised and Le Grand is forced to flee, leaving the jewel casket behind him. As the picture closes an announcement is flashed on the screen to the effect that the final story of the series will be released a few weeks later.

he says that Marie has a caller and that he does not want to interfere. The irate parents enter the house, find Boyd there and immediately order him out and send Marie to her room.

Months later Allan's brother, Dr. Boyd from New York, visits him. He sees Marie's picture on the table and immediately tells Allan that Marie had been a patient in a New York hospital and had given birth to a baby. Allan doubts his story, but his brother shows him proof.

A year afterwards Allan returns to a new home with his bride. He has forgotten Marie and she having read the announcement of Allan's return home with his bride, goes to call on her. She tells the happy woman that Allan had once loved and then jilted her, adding that he was the father of her child.

When Boyd comes home he finds his wife unconscious, she having swooned from the shock she had received. In her hand she clasps Marie's card. After summoning a physician, Boyd is told by his wife what Marie had come for and confided in her. Boyd goes after Norman and together they call on Marie. Here Allan shows her a statement she had signed while in the hospital telling the name of her child's father. Roy Norman is the father of her child and not Boyd.

Marie writes to Allan's bride and tells her that her charges were false and that she and the father of her child are to be married the next day. Allan returns to his bride with his name cleared and his honor untarnished.

A new character is introduced in the person of Mme. Larens, a French modiste, to help in the abduction of Elaine, but as long as the mysterious Mr. Arnold is present it seems to be impossible for Del Mar to succeed.

Elaine and Walter Jameson are engaged in a tennis game when Mme. Larens enters upon the scene and tells Elaine that she has some beautiful Parisian gowns which she would like Elaine to see, and Elaine makes an appointment to come to her apartment to inspect them. Mme. Larens is seen by a mysterious naturalist, who suspects her and watches her very closely.

Elaine arrives at Mme. THIS is a comedy drama written especially for Viola Dana by Lee Arthur, and produced by John H. Collins. It will be the Edison release of August 27. While comedy predominates there are some serious moments of the heart interest type in this three-part feature. In able direction "The Slavey Student" has one of its strongest supports. The action taking place in the girls' boarding school, the country town and the city boarding house, is greatly strengthened in its quality to hold interest by the true atmosphere, which the director has succeeded in creating.

Alma, the little orphan girl who is working her way through school and becomes very popular with the other girls, is the part played by Viola Dana, whose work in this picture is consistently good. Marie La Manna, Pat O'Malley, Johnnie Walker, Yale Benner, and Harry Leoni complete the cast which does splendidly.

John and Alma Picket are left alone in the world when their mother dies. Through the sheriff, the girl secures admission to a boarding school, where she works as a maid to pay her tuition. John leaves for the city; seeking employment. At the boarding house he makes friends with a young fellow whom he knows as Crandall. The latter commits a robbery and he is traced to the house.

He leaves the bag containing implements such as are used by burglars, in John's room. A policeman searches the house, and on this evidence John is accused and sentenced to jail. One of the girls at the school receives a letter from her brother telling her that he will bring Roy Ashton, a new acquaintance to the school dance.

Marjorie offers to lend Alma an evening dress if she will go to the dance with Harry. Alma makes a decided hit with Harry and Marjorie is quite taken with Ashton. Shortly after this Ashton is caught trying to cheat at cards. In a letter to his sister Harry warns her against Ashton. She pays no attention to this and he continues to visit her. They decide to elope and marry. Alma is asked to act as Marjorie's "maid of honor."

This is a "Victory" feature, produced by the Messter Films of Berlin, and stars Henny Porten whose beauty and art in portraying emotional roles is of international fame. The leading part is highly dramatic and gives Mme. Porten unlimited opportunities for her remarkable histronic talent.

The other characters in the story, which deals with a woman whose love shows itself in sacrifice, and who asks in return only loyalty, are all convincingly interpreted. The husband, a society spendthrift, and the woman who maliciously destroys the happiness of another, are two parts which are especially well handled.

The theme contains many dramatic situations which are well led up to. The climatic scene is reached when the wife finds that her husband is unfaithful. In this scene the three figures which make up the domestic triangle are finely enacted. "The Ingrate" was artistically treated in its production. Tasteful interior sets play no small part in making this picture one which will receive only the most favorable comment.

haunts, an opium joint, and there is greeted by his former pals. A Chinaman comes into the place and offers Jim $500 apiece for every Chinaman he will smuggle into this country. Jim refuses this offer and tells them all that he is going to start out on a new road.

Jim leaves the opium joint and is standing in front of a house when he hears a woman feebly calling. He enters the house through a window and there finds a woman who is dying. She asks him to deliver to her daughter, Rose, from whom she has not heard for a number of years, a package and tells him where the girl was last heard of. Jim gets the package and just then the woman's nephew, who is dishonest and unscrupulous and who is after her money, returns with a detective. Jim in his hurry to get out of the house forgets his hat.

Tom Huntley, the woman's nephew, after finding his aunt dead, looks for the package, but cannot find it, but does see Jim's hat which the detective recognizes as the kind given to freed prisoners.

They go to the penitentiary and there get a description and photograph of Jim and follow him to the Western town, where he has gone to look up Rose. Jim is in a saloon in a Western town and sees a girl they call Rose, who the barkeeper tells him has no parents, but has been there for a long time. He gets to talking with the girl and later when he sees Tom and the detective coming hides the package in the walls of the saloon. Jim is arrested and put on the stage coach. The stage coach leaves in the midst of a heavy rain and as it is lumbering along the mountain side it tumbles into the river. Here the detective releases Jim, so he can go for a doctor.

Jim gives Rose the package thinking that she is the girl whom he is seeking and in it she finds a letter from her mother and a diary telling that the Governor of the State is her father. Jim takes the girl to the governor and a reconciliation is complete and the man quietly slips away.

While wandering about the docks Jim is shanghaied aboard a Chinese smuggling craft and manages after some weeks to attract the attention of a Government cutter. Jim escapes from the ship which is later sunk by shrapnel from the cutter.

The governor, who has been looking for Jim, sends for him and makes a proposition to him telling him he wishes him to engage in smuggling. Jim overcome with rage turns to go, but is handed a letter by the governor's servant and in this the governor tells him he merely wished to try him out and asking him to go to the library, where Jim finds Rose waiting for him. And then, Jim at last comes into his richly deserved reward.

"The Naval Battle of the Black Sea"

Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

A FILM which is undoubtedly the most remarkable of its kind thus far presented is offered by Pathe in this one-reel picture of a naval battle which took place in the Black Sea, between a fleet of Russian and Turkish warships. These scenes, photographed from the deck of the Russian flagship, and constituting about eight hundred feet of film, are to be released as a special edition of the Pathe Weekly.

In the engagement the Russian fire proved the more deadly and one of the Turkish vessels was sunk. George Ercole, the cameraman, was the only person on deck during the rapid exchange of shells, fired from the heaviest type of armament used in modern battleship equipment. Ercole won the admiration of Czar Nicholas by his courage at the battle of Przemysl, where he repeatedly exposed himself to the gunfire in order to secure pictures of the battle.

Though seriously wounded, he insisted on staying at his task. The emperor awarded him the honorary decoration and also granted him privileges such as are seldom enjoyed by a war correspondent. Ercole is rated as one of the best Pathe cameramen, and his reputation is borne out by these pictures, which, though made under the most trying circumstances, are clear and steady.

All the details of the conflict are shown. On the eve of the battle, the czar and his general staff inspect the fleet. The following morning the squadron leaves Sebastopol at Sunrise. In this scene the photography is excellent. Then the ships move, in line, toward their destination.

When the Turkish fleet is located, the order is given to clear the decks for action. In as short a time as it took to give the order, this operation is completed. The big guns move about until the range is decided upon. The range once found, firing starts. One broadside after another is hurled at the Turkish fleet. While the battle is in progress, fast destroyer boats speed about the field of action. A Turkish ship is sunk and the firing ceases. The vessel sinks until its decks are awash and sailors from one of the victorious ships approach the wreck, lower the Turkish Crescent, and run up the Russian emblem.

"Nearly a Lady"

Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

WHETHER on the speaking stage or in pictures, an Elsie Janis play would be incomplete without her famous boy impersonation. As this is embodied in her latest screen appearance, "Nearly a Lady," a happy combination of Elsie Janis, beautiful staging and unusual photography is bound to please. Miss Janis also performs some new feats, notably horseback riding and lariat throwing, in the picture, which is in five parts and was produced by Bosworth, Inc., for the Paramount program.

The star has the center of the stage nearly all the time, which is just as it should be, for without her engaging personality the story is not of much importance. There is some pleasant romance as well as plenty of good comedy situations in the story. The action is fast and carries one from the out-of-door country of the West to New York society life. This affords a striking contrast, which is made the most of by splendid locations and elaborate interiors.

Owen Moore as Jack Rawlins, Frank Elliott as Lord Cecil Grosvenor, Harry Ham as Jim Brooks, Myrtle Stedman as Mrs. Brooks, and Roberta Hickman, are all well-known screen artists, and they give exceptionally fine support to Elsie Janis as Frederica Calhoun.

Lord Cecil Grosvenor arrives in Montana and inspects the Calhoun ranch, as he contemplates buying it. Frederica

The unconscious Freddie is carried from the pool.

Calhoun is at once attracted to the Englishman. She breaks her engagement with Jack Rawlins because she believes herself in love with the newcomer. Jack decides to enter business in the city, and leaves for New York. He and Frederica part good friends. Lord Cecil is acquainted with Frederica but a short time when he proposes marriage to her. He is accepted.

Mrs. Brooks, Grosvenor's married sister, invites the newly engaged couple to visit her in New York. Frederica is overjoyed, and makes preparations to leave for the East almost immediately. The many social functions given by Mrs. Brooks are very alluring to Frederica. She soon changes from the "tomboy" to the society woman. Grosvenor meets Elaine, a chorus girl, and promises to escort her to the French ball. His fiancee learns this and in a borrowed suit of men's evening clothes follows him to the stage door, where he is met by Elaine.

It is quite late when she returns home. Mrs. Brooks is surprised to see a man enter Frederica's room. She peeks through the keyhole and distinguishes a man's back. Frederica realizes that explanations will be necessary the following day, so she writes a note to Grosvenor and secretly leaves the house. She visits Jack at his office and informs him that she is ready to marry him. Frederica, now Mrs.

DARWIN KARR

Essanay has engaged another popular leading man, and one of the best known photoplay actors in the country—Darwin Karr.

Mr. Karr has joined Essanay's eastern company, headed by Joseph Byron Totten, to take leading parts. His first photoplay for Essanay is "Hearts and Roses," a fascinating three act love romance in which he plays the leading character.

Darwin Karr.

Mr. Karr started his stage career with a small part in "The Missouri Girl," later taking the part of the heavy on the sudden departure of the regular villain. He later went into repertoire work for four seasons as leading man, and afterwards appeared in stock.

His advent in motion pictures was in 1911 when he joined the Edison Company. He climbed rapidly and was finally leading man with Mary Fuller. He also was featured by the Solax Company and took leading parts with Vitagraph before joining the Essanay Company.

He is especially proficient in military plays and in romantic dramas.

PICTURE IN WHICH EX-GOVERNOR SULZER APPEARS IS FINISHED

The much discussed feature film, "The Governor's Boss," in which ex-Governor of New York William Sulzer played the leading part, has finally been completed. This production has aroused a great deal of newspaper comment on account of the sensational character of the political situation depicted and because of Sulzer's presence in the film. It is a five-reel feature and has the great additional value of Sulzer's presence. In this production the ex-governor, who takes the part of "The Governor," does some very good work. He has been surrounded with a strong cast of well-known film stars and the production as a whole is well balanced and rings true. The fact that the ex-governor is now preparing to run for district attorney in New York at the coming election gives added interest to this production, and therefore should be one of the biggest box office winners offered.

J. N. NAULTY WITH TRIANGLE

The most important change in the line up of the Mutual Film Corporation since the annual election came this week when J. N. Naulty, formerly vice president and general manager of the Mutual, and a vital factor in the great success of that organization, resigned to become general manager of the Triangle, the new giant among the feature companies.

When it became known that Mr. Naulty would have authority in the conduct of the Triangle organization second only to its president, Harry E. Aitken, the men intimately acquainted with film conditions were willing to concede that the Triangle had taken an important step toward sure success. With David W. Griffith, Thomas H. Ince and Mack Sennett producing pictures for the Triangle, and with J. N. Naulty in charge of the marketing of the product, the combination impresses the film world as strong and a tribute to the organizing ability of H. E. Aitken.

Mr. Naulty, during his regime at the Mutual, was in active charge of the chain of branch offices maintained by that organization, and his branch managers give him their unqualified support. His successful experience, capacity for management and his ability to inspire loyalty in his subordinates will undoubtedly mean much to the Triangle.

Mr. Naulty left on a brief motor trip on Tuesday and will begin his duties on next Monday with temporary headquarters at 71 West Twenty-third street, New York City.

REICHENBACH ENTERTAINS

Present at the luncheon extended his friends by Harry L. Reichenbach, who leaves Metro next Saturday to join the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, were: Lewis J. Selznick, Arthur H. Spiegel, Felix Feist, Lynde Denig of the Moving Picture World, Robert Welsh of the Dramatic Mirror, A. MacArthur, Jr., of the Moving Picture World, John Semler of the Morning Telegraph, Charles R. Condon of MOTOGRAPHY, Arthur H. Leslie of the Leslie Syndicate, Wid Gunning of the Evening Mail, Mr. Rosenthal of the Equitable Pictures Corporation, and Lesley Mason of the Motion Picture News.

W. A GOFF COAST DIVISION MANAGER OF THE V.L.S.E.

Mr. Goff's exceptional work as first Cleveland Branch Manager of the V. L. S. E. caused him to be appointed the V. L. S. E.'s first division manager. While Mr. Goff enjoyed an excellent reputation before joining the V. L. S. E. force, his record in the Cleveland territory is one to be really envied. On the coast Mr. Goff will supervise the work of the San Francisco, Los Angeles and Seattle branches of the V. L. S. E.

Oklahoma

The members of the geology faculty of the University of Oklahoma at Norman, Okla., are making a collection of moving pictures of geological formations in the different sections of the state. A. W. McCoy, instructor in geology, who had charge of the annual summer trip to the Arbuckle mountains secured a number of film pictures of the Arbuckle limestone and other formations found in that range of mountains which he has added to the university's collection.

The pictures will be used by the members of the geology faculty in giving lectures. A number of the pictures will also be used in the preparation of bulletins by the Oklahoma geological survey, which has its headquarters at the university.

Texas

The editorial on moving picture censorship in the current number of the Saturday Evening Post is a direct slap at local censorship and looks like it might have been inspired, is the opinion of Elmer L. Scott, director of public welfare in Dallas, Texas. The editorial has created considerable comment in view of the censorship discussion in Dallas.

The editorial says that murder and other scenes are portrayed more vividly on the stage and escape uncensored, said Mr. Scott. "This is not true. Such scenes on the stage are done quickly and there is none of the drawn-out agony that frequently is portrayed in movies."

Moving picture men and the city of Dallas, Texas, represented by Elmer L. Scott, public welfare director, are hopelessly divided on the question of moving picture censorship, according to Murphy Townsend, attorney for the moving picture interests. One censor under the terms of a proposed ordinance, would be supreme. The owners of picture houses say that there should be at least three censors, if censorship there must be. A picture might be objectionable to one censor by reason of personal bias and yet would be approved by every other person in the city. They think that the rules for censoring adopted by the National Board of Censorship are good enough and do not want more rules piled up on top of these by local moral arbiters. The ordinance would provide that any operator violating it would have his license revoked forthwith. This is unfair and unjust the picture men claim. Then they want the censor, or censors—for they demand that there must be at least three—to be appointed by the mayor instead of from a number selected by the Board of Welfare. They want the censors to be an independent body and not under the Welfare Board, which they say is an appointed body and hence twice removed from the people. The end of the contest is not yet in sight.

A big producing film company to make moving pictures in Dallas, Texas, on a large scale, is contemplated in plans now being considered by J. Fred Rogers, who has gone to California to secure first hand information regrading the making of moving pictures.

The tentative plans contemplate a Dallas, Texas, producing company that will put out pictures of a superior quality, and, by their merit, immediately command attention and ready sales everywhere. Mr. Rogers will spend several weeks in California inquiring minutely into the moving picture business from every practical standpoint. The result of this investigation will determine whether or not the plans already tentatively formed, will be carried to conclusion.

The committee having the State Fair beauty contest in charge at Dallas, Texas, are receiving letters daily from rich and well to do farmers and stock men and also business and professional men, asking to be put in communication with the ladies posing for the moving picture State Fair beauty contest, with a view of matrimony. If the enquirers for beauties are in earnest and the beauty contestants are in a receptive mood, all of the single ladies entering the contest will be married before the contest is over.

Los Angeles

With the magnificent weather conditions now existing in this glorious section of the Golden West—California—the great moving picture producing organizations having studios on the West Coast have every incentive to work. Directors, stars, players, cameramen and hired hands are busy on "locations." Many companies are in the mountains and foothill retreats, others are at the beaches, of which there are some thirty-two near Los Angeles to select from, and others are putting on the finishing touches in interior sets. But everybody is busy.

It is this usual routine of weather conditions that have made southern California the most noted motion picture producing section of the world. It is reliably stated by facts and figures—and proven—that this section of the West is credited with more than sixty-five per cent of all motion pictures produced in the United States and Canada. Working conditions are favorable almost 365 days in the year, for there is hardly ever a day that the sun does not shine for several hours, even in the midst of the winter rainy seasons.

Nearly all the studios, however, have prepared for rainy weather and fog conditions by the building of magnificently appointed electric lighted and glass covered and incased studios, and the future will not cause heavy losses on this account, as did the past, when the manufacturers and producers were not equipped to meet such emergencies. Today there are perhaps more wonderfully designed and architectured glass studios used by producing organizations in Los Angeles and southern California than in any other section of the world.

It is reliably stated that representatives of the Equitable Motion Picture Corporation, the newly organized $3,000,000 concern headed by Lewis J. Selznick of the World Film Corporation, Mutual Film Corporation—An item of interest was the announcement to the public, made by President Freuler, of the revolutionary changes in the Mutual program. The film manufacturing companies now include American Film, Gaumont Company (formerly in close relationship with Pathe Freres of France), Bostock Jungle & Film Company, David Horsley Productions, Thanhouser Film Corporation and Mustang Film Company.

The entire aim of the new program is to furnish great diversity and, at the same time, make each picture—even if it is only one reel—a feature; in other words to put the same quality into a thousand feet of film as has usually only been done in 4,000 feet. Mr. Freuler quotes the philosophy of Henry Ford, whom he considers the biggest business man in the United States today, and cites his aim of reaching the masses with a properly priced article, as one that he (Mr. Freuler) intends to emulate. As there are 18,000,000 people who attend moving picture theaters daily and 95 per cent of the moving picture theaters are in the class that charge their patrons from 5 to 25 cents, Mr. Freuler is of the opinion his Mutual program is better adapted to the actual state of facts and, consequently, he will not endorse the theory that the whole tendency of the film industry is toward one dollar seats and more extravagent productions.

The former depletion in surplus account has largely caused the decline in market values during the last six months, but now that a regime of severe business economy has been instituted, under the new administration, the first attention will be given to rebuilding the surplus. While the feeling amongst those who know the inside affairs, is that the Mutual Film Corporation will shortly be on a sounder basis than at any time in the past, the present market is not expected to change a great deal in the next sixty days.

Triangle Film Corporation—The new corporation, embracing the New York Motion Picture Corporation, and talents of D. W. Griffith, Thomas Ince, Mack Sennet and H. E. Aitken, is capitalized for $5,000,000; par value of stock $5.00, which will be marketed and traded in on the New York curb. As the policy of this company will be practically opposed to that of the Mutual, a comparison of results obtained in the next sixty days will be of decided interest.

who is vice-president and general manager of the company, and Isadore Bernstein, director-general and producing manager of the Equitable, with headquarters in New York and Flushing, L. I., are now here looking around for a desirable location for the erection of a magnificent studio. Sites have been presented near Los Angeles, Santa Barbara and in San Diego, the southern exposition city, where the Lubin company have recently built an attractive studio, and the real announcement is expected soon. Mr. Bernstein, however, because of his several years' experience in this section, is pretty familiar with locations, and it is stated the selection of the new studio site will be practically left to him after the company representatives make their report.

The American Film Company of Santa Barbara sent a big company of special artists making the "Diamond from the Sky" serials to Los Angeles this week to secure feature scenes and exteriors for the twenty-second episode. The company, headed by Director William D. Taylor and Cinematographer Harry Gant, included Lottie Pickford, Charlotte Burton, Irving Cummings, W. J. Tedmarsh, Wm. Russell, and others, who used the Bostock Jungle Zoo of the David Horsley studios to secure adequate circus and animal settings for the big serial.

The Romaine Fielding Arizona Lubin company at Phoenix are busy these days securing extra-exclusive western pictures in which Fielding and Vinnie Burns are featured. Stars and players seem well pleased with the Arizona metropolis and report wondrous scenic effects.

Charlie Chaplin, the Essanay comic comedian, is much in the limelight these days. He is said to be one of the highest paid comedians on the coast and is unusually popular in Essanay productions, which are running at many of the leading picture houses of Los Angeles and the coast. It is rumored on the rialto this week that Charlie has been offered an inviting proposition by the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company for a series of pictures to be produced by that company.

The $5,000,000 Triangle Film Corporation recently organized by H. E. Aitken and which embraces the extensive interests and studios of David W. Griffith of the Reliance-Majestic; the Inceville and Keystone studios directed by Thomas H. Ince and Mack Sennett, and controlled by the New York Motion Picture Corporation—the Kessells-Baumann people—is attracting much attention among stars, directors and players these days. A number of new contracts have been signed up and leading players associated with these organizations feel well satisfied when they learn they have been selected for conspicuous parts for future releases through the Triangle system. The combined interests already have nearly one hundred prominent and representative stars, players and directors and cameramen signed up for term contracts.

The handsomely appointed studios of the Selig Polyscope and Selig Zoo organizations in Los Angeles report much activity. This is especially noted at the magnificent $1,000,000 Selig Zoo, which is the popular rendezvous these days for clubs, organizations, civic societies and others, for picnic parties, dancing in the big pavilion and the pleasures of being "taken in the movies," this being a special Selig feature when big crowds are needed to complete special sets.

The Oliver Morosco Photoplay studio has again become one of the busy places of this city, with a number of high class companies actively producing the modern pictures demanded by the Morosco clientele. With such noted people as Lenore Ulrich, Wm. Desmond, Maclyn Arbuckle, Maud Allan, Forrest Stanley, and others, in leading roles, the summer promises great results.

The big Mutual interests on the cost seem to have taken on an added swagger since John Freuler assumed the presidency of the Mutual Film Corporation and announced a continuance of the high class and interesting popular-priced pictures on the Mutual program. Exhibitors are familiar with the quality of Mutual pictures, and numerous contracts are being added to the attractive bookings by coast exhibitors.

Don Meaney, lately assistant director-general of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company Pacific coast studios, this week resigned and accepted a position of importance with Quality Pictures Corporation, and will in future be associated with Fred J. Balshofer, president and general manager of that company. Francis X. Bushman, Marguerite Snow and other favorites of that popular organization, which releases through the Metro program. Mr. Meaney has steadily advanced all along the line of the motion picture industry from press agent and publicity manager, scenario writer and producer, and is now conceded to be a top-notcher as an all-around business operator.

The great Universal City, the western motion picture metropolis, is now working twenty-six companies, producing every known and imaginable class of pictures demanded by exhibitors and fans, and the Universal releases are being eagerly sought in all parts of the country by those who want pictures that will interest and draw good houses. The year 1915 promises to be a record breaker with this big organization.

President Carl Laemmle and his official staff, Director-General Henry McRae, General Manager H. P. Caulfield, Publicity Director M. G. Jonas, and others, have taken the prizes for entertaining notables and prominent convention parties during the past few months. Almost every man of influence, his staff and organizations attending conventions in California have been guests of the Universal, and it has almost become a byword that if you have not visited the western motion picture metropolis, Universal City, you have not "done California." It's a great advertisement, perhaps, for the Big U, but it takes much of the flavor and dash away from screen pictures to see the players in the actual making. The glamor is removed when the spectator becomes to familiar with the stars and players. It takes the sensational and romantic realism away and leaves the player in a raw state of grease and paint.

NEW YORK NOTES

J. N. Naulty to Triangle. Arthur James to Metro. Harry Reichenbach to Equitable. Merritt Crawford to Metro. Jacob Wilk to Authors' Associated Agency, Inc., C. Mel Simmons to Triangle, and former N. Y. Mutual Exchange Manager Weiss to Triangle, form an interesting list of changes made last week.

P. J. Morgan, head of the Morgan Lithograph Company, is in New York on a business trip. He is making his headquarters in the offices of the New York branch of his concern, located in the Times Building.

Wid Gunning—he who specializes in anything pertaining to films, publicities for the Governor's Boss Film Company, runs the film department in the Evening Mail, and is more likely to be found in his office at 1 a. m. than 1 p. m.—is the late recipient of much publicity from the Universal Film Company. Its ads and posters carried a picture of Wid and a reprint of his review of a recent Universal Broadway Feature.

Bill Barry, advertising and publicity manager for the Nicholas Power Company, is now back at his desk (and Brighton Beach), having recovered from the slight illness brought on by a cold contracted a few weeks ago.

The Equity Motion Picture Company now has on hand several one-reel comedies, starring Billy B. Van, the president of the company. Their initial release date will be announced soon.

A. C. Langan, of the Sun Photoplay Company, reports good sales in England on "Salomy Jane," "The Nightingale," and "The Ordeal." The latter, especially, is going big in England.

Arthur E. MacHugh has left the United Booking Office Feature Picture Company, Inc., to join the B. S. Moss Motion Picture Corporation. This company, aside from managing four first-class theaters in greater New York, is about to embark upon the producing of films. Its first feature is to be "The Salamander."

Jacob Wilk, director of publicity for the World Film Corporation, is leaving this company to become general manager of Authors Associated Agency, Inc., which is agent for original and adopted photoplay material. It is located at 615 Longacre Building. E. P. Heath will take Jacob Wilk's place with the World Film Corporation.

CHICAGO GOSSIP

W. N. Selig is making preparations for another visit to the Pacific coast, where he can keep in personal touch with the production of the big multiple-reel subject, "The Garden of Allah."

George K. Spoor returned to Chicago this week from New York.

The International Motion Picture Association sent out a letter dated August 9, announcing that "At the last regular meeting of the International Motion Picture Association, held Friday, August 6, a resolution was unanimously passed thanking the General Film Company for their co-operation with the exhibitors in donating a full day's film rental to those who desired to give their entire receipts for the Eastland benefit performance."

F. O. Nielsen was found busily engaged in buying a new $4,000 pipe organ for the Kimball theater, 3318 Fullerton avenue, on Monday.

The Kimball is a most extraordinary house and if there are any other theaters with 300 seats in the United States that are putting on a similar program we would be glad to learn of it. The Kimball runs Paramount films four days in the week, Metro service one day, "Diamond from the Sky" one day, Celebrated Players one day, filling in this program with the regular Mutual program wherever necessary. We think this is a record as regards service for a small house. The Kimball is one of the most popular theaters on the northwest side and it is due to the exceptionally fine management that this house, with its small seating capacity, has been enabled to compete with the larger seating capacity houses that have gone up all around it.

Herb Hoagland of the Selig Polyscope Company is entertaining his father and mother from Easton, Pa., this week.

The Lockwood McGeary Company closed a contract to take several reels of commercial subjects for the city of Elkhart, Ind., last week.

Hans A. Spanuth of the Central Film Company states that his company sold eighty-six prints of the Eastland disaster throughout the United States. All the receipts from the sale of these films were donated to the benefit of the Eastland sufferers.

The friends of Paul R. Kuhn, formerly of the Nichols-Finn Chicago office, will be glad to learn that Paul is now in charge of the New York office of this company and is making a great many friends down there. We were sorry to lose Paul from this World's Greatest Summer Resort.

Herman L. Gumbiner has leased the northwest corner of Lincoln and Lawrence avenues and will erect a motion picture theater which will have a seating capacity of 1,500 and cost about $100,000. Mr. Gumbiner is the owner of the Bertha, Temple and Pauline theaters.

Just as the fire hydrant at Forty-fourth and Broadway is everybody's New York office, the news stand in front of the Mallers Building is the main office for motion picture exhibitors in Chicago. Bob Levy and Abe Balaban are to be found in this office after 2 p. m. Chris Whalen is in and out. Ralph Bradford signs contracts on his cuff, and pipe organs are not the smallest things sold on the curb. To believe Whalen some of the exhibitors can't get away from the central market idea.

Hayward Mack, who has just closed an engagement with the Edison company in New York, called at Motography's Chicago office on Wednesday of this week, while en route to Los Angeles, where he expects to join the already large colony of photoplayers. Mr. Mack was one of the original Imp stock company when that organization made its tour of the West Indies, remaining in the picturesque city of Havana, Cuba, for some three months. An announcement with respect to Mr. Mack's new connections will be made through our columns in the near future.

NOTES FROM ALL OVER

Dick Rosson, brother of Helen and Quennie, the juvenile lead, will join the Beauty pictures in Santa Barbara. John Dillon has been engaged to direct comedies, and Homer Scott, the camera man, will all go to the American in the near future. All are prominent in the film world. There will be three members of the Rosson family in Santa Barbara now.

Dallas Elks in Los Angeles for the national convention journeyed out to the Pallas Pictures studio to pay their respects to a lodge brother, Macklyn Arbuckle, whose big vaudeville success, "The Reform Candidate," is being picturized there.

Lois Meredith, the little actress who electrified New Yorkers by her work in "Help Wanted," at Maxine Elliot's theater recently, has been engaged to enact the leading role in Kalem's three-act "Broadway Favorites" feature, "The Legacy of Folly."

Henry MacMahon, representative of the newly organized Triangle Film Company, arrived in Los Angeles from New York this week and is inspecting the studios of the Sennett-Griffith-Ince companies at Edendale, Hollywood and Santa Monica. While in Los Angeles, Mr. MacMahon is the guest of Mack Sennett, managing director of the Keystone Film Company.

World Film Corporation will shortly present Mollie King in a photoplay entitled "The Code of the Mountains." This is a story of Kentucky life by Charles Neville Buck, the well-known dramatist of those parts, whose books and plays have won him a considerable reputation.

It is called the Hobart Henley company now. Henley has his own combination at the big U and is co-directing with Leon Kent, who was until recently with the Lubin company.

Rosetta Brice, the titian-haired beauty of the Lubin acting forces, has been selected to play the leading role, that of the Princess, in the great war play by Louis Reeves Harrison, now being staged by Jack Pratt, the new Lubin director.

For "A Child of the Surf," a two-reel Majestic feature now being made by the Reliance-Majestic studio forces under the direction of Jack Conway, a company motored to Portuguese Bend, on the Pacific, between St. Pedro and Santa Barbara. There the atmosphere of a fishing village was sought and found.

George Stout, business manager of the Keystone Film Company, spent a short vacation in San Francisco during the latter part of last week, combining business with a visit to the exposition.

Stella Razeto and her husband, Ed. J. Le Saint, who are now with the Universal forces, are building a beautiful new residence almost next door to the house occupied by Kathlyn Williams, and with Al Filson opposite. The situation is a charming one on Rowland Heights and the architect's plans for an unique and uncommon place.

The Balboa Amusement Producing Company has entered into a second contract with Pathe Freres for the delivery of eleven more photoplays a week. This covers a period of two years and supplements the five-year agreement made some time ago.

Norman Macdonald is this week featuring Kingsley Benedict in an unusual story of "Little Italy," entitled "The Vagabond Love." Mr. Benedict is well known both on the legitimate stage and in the picture field. He was the original Wilfred Varney with William Gillette in "Secret Service"; he played two seasons with Wilton Lackaye in "The Pit," and starred for two years in Joseph Hart's "The Futurity Winner."

Managing Editor Hampton Del Ruth of the Keystone Film Company, has had the suite of offices occupied by the scenario department completely renovated and refurnished.

Lillian Drew, well-known character actress with the Essanay company, has joined Joseph Byron Totten and his eastern company of Essanay players taking special photoplays requiring a setting along the Atlantic coast. Miss Drew is expected to remain with the eastern company until its return to Chicago in the fall, playing leading character roles.

The production of the four-reel comedy, "At Watt College," written especially for Carter De Haven and wife, by L. V. Jefferson, is well on its way towards completion. William C. Dowlan, director of the company, is bending every energy to complete the picture in record time.

Henry B. Walthall, leading man with Essanay, made his first appearance in person before the public since his advent in photoplay work when he appeared on the stage at the showing of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Chicago Tribune's benefit performance for the victims of the Eastland disaster. Mr. Walthall made a short speech at the intermission, in which he expressed his gratification at being able to contribute in any way toward alleviating the sufferings of those bereft by the terrible tragedy.

Peggy Burke in "Glorianna's Getaway," a Falstaff, pulls some great stuff in the sob line. Why wouldn't she when ladies of color invade her love affairs? Honest to goodness, a real, black ingenue.

In "The Message from Reno" Ruth Roland has a comedy part which will present her in a new light. This piece was originally produced for the legitimate theater by H. M. Horkheimer several years ago, when it scored a metropolitan success. Now it has been turned into a five-reel photoplay. Sherwood Macdonald is directing the screen version. Besides Miss Roland, the cast includes many other Balboa favorites.

Madam Nazimova, starring in the much talked of vaudeville sketch, "War Brides," with the members of her company, recently paid Mr. D. W. Griffith a visit at his Hollywood studios.

C. R. Seelye, assistant general manager of the V-L-S-E, is on an extended tour of the Eastern branches of the V-L-S-E. On this trip Mr. Seelye is brushing up the territories preparatory to the fall campaign that will be even more active than that conducted during the spring and summer.

Director W. Christy Cabanne, who is filming the Griffith-Douglas Fairbanks picture, "Blood Will Tell," is to be congratulated. He secured permission to use in some scenes the six armor battery automobiles that are traveling from their home in Lake Geneva, Minn., to the world's fair in San Francisco. These automobiles are mounted with machine guns, ready for war use.

Ollie Kirby, the actress who appears in Kalem's series, "The Mysteries of the Grand Hotel," is rapidly gaining recognition as one of the most capable players in the motion picture field. She is seen to special advantage in "The Substituted Jewel," the fifth episode of this series.

During the taking of a two-reel photoplay at the American studios last week, Harold Lockwood was stabbed by a fellow actor, the wound running two inches and going quite deep.

Syd Chaplin, Keystone star, has been sent to San Francisco with his director and entire company by Managing Director Mack Sennett of the Keystone Film Company. A two-reel comedy will be completed by Chaplin while in the exposition city. Charles Parrott is assisting Chaplin in directing the picture, and Phyllis Allen, Glen Cavender, Wesley Ruggles and others are working in his support.

Robust George Siegmann, who was recently injured in an automobile accident, has returned to the Reliance-Majestic studio in the best of physical condition. He has resumed his duties of producer.

Boyd Marshall shines as an athlete in "A Marvelous Marathoner," a Falstaff comedy. He is also an athlete shine, for he only wins his race because an old maid is chasing him. This is the first Monday Falstaff, the brand which is said to increase the "Mirth of the Nation."

Frank Mills, one of the most popular of Broadway's leading men, has arrived at Inceville and begun work in support of Bessie Barriscale in "The Golden Claw," under the direction of Reginald Barker.

Director Ray Meyers and a company are in the forests of Bear Valley, fifty miles north of San Bernardino, for the filming of "The Little Lumber Jack," a two-reel Reliance feature. Those who went with the Reliance-Majestic director are Paul Willis and Mildred Harris, the juvenile players; Bert Hadley, Mrs. Harris and the noted Indian player, Dark Cloud.

King Baggott is directing himself and a company of Imp players in "A Triangle of Crime," a two-reel drama by Dwight Cleveland. This is the first production under the direction of the famous star, and will probably be followed by others until it is decided as to just who will direct the company formerly directed by George A. Lessey. Mr. Lessey has left the Universal forces.

Lorraine Huling, Morris Foster and Morgan Jones are thanking Director Fred Sullivan for a three-day camping trip to sand Island, in order to get the real stuff for Phil Lonergan's unique drama, "Out of the Sea," a forthcoming Thanhouser release. In this Morris Foster gets plenty of play for his splendid dramatic power, and Miss Huling is in a very sympathetic role.

Jackie Saunders is appearing in a strong three-reel domestic drama, under the direction of Bertram Bracken. Her new vehicle offers Miss Saunders splendid opportunities. Playing opposite the Balboa girl is Lewis J. Cody, one of the best-known actors to be recruited from the legitimate stage recently.

"The Lady of Perfumes," the feature being made at the Balboa studios, promises to be a splendid production with two such stars as Lillian Lorraine and Henry King in the leading parts.

De Wolf Hopper, the famous comic opera star, is due to arrive at the California Griffith studios in the near future to be starred in Griffith features.

A pall of gloom envelops the greater part of Inceville this week, while all Incevillians are bemoaning the loss of "Mack," the "bulldog with a soul." Mack was the pet of William S. Hart, the great character actor of the N. Y. M. P. forces.

Tom Mix, the daring cowboy actor-producer of the Selig Polyscope Company, has become quite the rage in Las Vegas, N. M., where his company is now working. He has not only joined the Commercial, Elks and Fishing Clubs, but has also been appointed deputy sheriff of San Miguel, the county in which Las Vegas is located.

In a September magazine the statement appears that Ford Sterling is the father of "Little Billy" Jacobs, the child picture star. Clark Irvine wrote the article, but he avers that the compositor or proofreader or someone else made an error. Sterling has nothing running around the house but his racing car.

The Georgia Chamber of Commerce is at work on a 5,000 foot film, which will be shown in Georgia and throughout the United States to arouse interest in the varied resources of the Empire State. Views of public buildings, educational institutions and mineral resources, water power development, apple orchards, watermelon fields, cattle ranches and cotton fields will be featured, as will also the road conditions, showing the progress Georgia has made in the matter of road building. Two films will be made—one to run in Georgia to acquaint the people with the wealth of their state and arouse civic pride; the other will be run with a lecturer through the East and West.

Fred Mace, favorite Keystone comedian, is being urged to head a movement to start another photoplayers organization in Los Angeles. Mr. Mace was the organizer and first president of the Photoplayers Club, but after he left for the East that merry group disbanded. Mace possesses unusual ability to organize and hold together such a club and, though it is a big effort, it is hoped that he will be persuaded to attempt the task.

It is announced by the Famous Players Film Company that the date of the first appearance in motion pictures of the world's foremost character comedian, Sam Bernard, in a typical characterization, "Poor Schmaltz," originally scheduled for release in October, has now been changed to August 23. The Paramount Pictures Corporation ends its annual program during the week of the 23rd, and it was in order to terminate the first Paramount year auspiciously that Mr. Bernard's initial screen creation was substituted for this occasion.

With such well known and capable players as Eugene Pallette, Lamar Johnstone and Edward Sloman on the lot, the National Film Corporation's studio takes on the air of a talented corner of the picture making world. Mr. Pallette is to be seen in his well known role of a crook in "The Scar." He plays a crippled Italian. Mr. Sloman is a crook in another underworld story in which Mr. Johnstone appears as a young author who has lost his hold and gets mixed up with a gang of crooks. As members of the gang appear George F. Cummings and Earl Schaffer, excellent types for these characters, in which they specialize.

Mr. Mitchell is directing the first dramatic feature to be released by the National Film Corporation, "Captivating Mary Carstairs," adapted to the screen by A. W. Coldewey from the book of that name by Henry Sydnor Harrison, author of "Queed." In this story of five reels Miss Norma Talmadge, who recently arrived in Los Angeles from New York to enter on a two year contract with the National, is being featured along with Mr. Mitchell. Other prominent photoplayers in the cast are Alan Forrest and Jack Livingston, both of whom have been retained permanently by the National.

With five directors at work, scores of employes in all departments active at the plant, and with the expenditure of hundreds of dollars daily, the National Film Corporation, whose studio is at Santa Monica boulevard and Gower street, in Hollywood, a suburb of Los Angeles, Cal., is off to a good start in the motion picture fame.

A. W. Goff's exceptional work as first Cleveland branch manager of V. L. S. E. caused him to be appointed V. L. S. E.'s first division manager. While he enjoyed an excellent reputation before joining V. L. S. E.'s force, his record in the Cleveland territory is one to be really envied. On the Coast, Mr. Goff will supervise the work of the San Francisco, Los Angeles and Seattle branches of the V. L. S. E. organization.

Alice Washburn, until recently the famous character woman of the Edison Company, who is vacationing in Wisconsin, is receiving some notices in the Wisconsin papers upon the work she is doing while appearing in the picture theatres in the vicinity, and it seems the famous Edison character woman is going to become even more famous as a speaker than she was as a screen star. Miss Washburn is giving short talks on how films are made, though being careful not to tell too many of the secrets of the industry. Leaving enough to the imagination of our hearers, to whet their appetites for more. One Wisconsin paper in commenting upon her appearance in the city in which it is published calls her: "The Gloom Destroyer." "The Magnetic Laugh Getter," "The Female Wizzard of the Film," "The Queen of the Laughter Germ," "The Goldarndest Woman Yet."

SOME NEW THEATERS

Arkansas

The new motion picture theater at Crossett was recently opened to the public and was attended by a large number. The new building is equipped especially for motion pictures, and is operated by the E. S. Crossett Club.

Minnesota.

Plans are under way by Messrs. Lennon and Benz for the erection of a large photoplay house at Seventh and Wabasha streets, St. Paul. The theater will have a seating capacity of 2,500 persons.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

She, by mistake, is not met at the station and starting out on foot, is lost in the desert. Corse Hazard, a desperate character, finds her and takes her to his shack. Edna is about to give up hope when Jim Brandon, a young railroad agent wanted by the sheriff, comes to her rescue. He kills Hazard and is himself taken into custody by the sheriff and his posse. The whole party put up for the night at John Benson's ranch, and while the sheriff sleeps, Edna secures his handcuff key and frees Brandon. Later she receives a letter from him giving assurance of his determination to keep straight.

The Assayer of Lone Gap—AMERICAN—August 18.—Walter Spencer and Vivian Rich featured. Ned Evans, whose mother before he was born was terror stricken by a revolver, has had this fear stamped in his heart. He arrives in Lone Gap and there meets Bells Dugan. They become fast friends until a cowboy's prank reveals to the girl Ned's uncontrollable fear. Later the boy unarmed throws aside his fear, dashes at Buck, who is drunk and proceeding to shoot up Lone Gap. With one blow the two are in an antagonistic struggle. Ned after beating up Buck, wins the heart of Belle.

An Independent Woman—RELIANCE—AUGUST 18.—Jane Andrews, no longer young, takes up her government claim, resolving to be independent. While Jane's mother lies ill the hired man steals their money. Much against her will she is obliged to accept financial aid from Jim, a rancher. Later Jim proposes and while Jane loves him, her pride will not permit of her marrying him under the circumstances. She writes Jim a note to this effect and starts to leave the country. On the road she meets the parson. While talking with him her pride melts as she recalls the rancher's many kindnesses to her and her mother. Jane returns with the parson to the settlement. Jim wins her promise to become his wife.

The Lighthouse Keeper's Son—(TWO REELS) — DOMINO — August 19. — Owen Hanby, the lighthouse keeper's son, loves Mary Sands. She, however, marries Joe Benson, an artist, and returns to the city with him. Loie, a model of Benson's whom he has wronged, is avenged by entrapping the artist and Yvette, a French girl, in the studio and then sending for Mary. The young girl's romance shattered, she returns to her father. Mary makes it clear to Owen, that despite what has happened, she still loves Benson. Some time later, dangerously ill, and about to give birth to a child, the doctor tells Owen that her one chance is to see Benson. Owen is forced to kidnap the artist and they start back in a sloop. A heavy storm comes up, and Owen forces the one life-preserver on Benson and makes him jump into the water. Sobered by the other's self-sacrifice, and his tragic experience, he seeks Mary, and they are reconciled.

Little Hero—Cub—August 19.—Featuring George Ovey as Jerry, who is rescued from pummeling by Colonel Smilax, who takes him to his home and introduces him to his family. Smilax's daughter, head of a theatrical society, prevails upon the director to enroll Jerry's services. At rehearsals Jerry is the scene of attraction and especially so in the case of an old maid. On the night of the performance, the house is crowded and Jerry is stricken with stage fright. A policeman attempts to silence the crowd by mounting the stage, and Jerry gives vent to his feelings with the result that the officer lands heavily in the drum head. Later Jerry is taken to a safe cell in the police station.

Help! Help!—Falstaff—August 20.—The judge is threatened with the loss of all his servants but he pulls over a little law on them very effectively. He has the housemaid's suitor sent up for vagrancy, and as his chauffeur wishes to take a position with a speedy millionaire, the judge has the speedy one cooped up for a short time. He attends to the other cases in an equally competent manner, and now the judge is renowned for his ability to keep help.

The Root of All Evil—Majestic—August 20.—Farmer Billings and his wife Nancy, on the thirtieth anniversary of their wedding, are each presented with a check for $10,000 by a philanthropist who has offered a prize for the happiest married couple in Nevada. Mother Billings wishes to adopt a pet pig like Mrs. Vanderslip in the society columns, and Farmer Billings objects. After some trouble a divorce is secured, and the farmer and his wife live apart in a double house on a ranch. Billings advertises for a housekeeper, and a circus fakir and his woman pal take a chance to get some easy money. Mother Billings scents trouble and rescues her former husband from the grasp of the frauds. Billings now realizes that Nancy is his only soulmate, so he restores the pet pig to her lap, differences are forgotten, and the old couple are once more the happiest couple in Nevada.

A Bold Impersonation—(Two Reels)—Reliance—August 21.—Count Rene Reviere, a bankrupt Royalist, makes a bargain with the Duc de Mauriere that Raoul, the dissolute son of the latter, shall marry Louise, Reviere's daughter, if the Duke will loan him money enough to retrieve his estate. Boceni, a young Italian, an unselfish lover of the girl, promises to help her escape. At a theatrical performance Louise and Hawksford, an English actor, fall in love. Hawksford meets the girl through Boceni, and, learning of her plight, plots to impersonate the Italian at the engagement banquet of Louise and Raoul. During the feast, Raoul picks a quarrel with the actor who, he supposes is Boceni. In the ensuing duel, Hawksford is wounded. Louise seizes the sword, and gives Raoul a mortal thrust. The lovers escape on horseback, pursued by the vengeful duke. Louise and Hawksford leap from their horses into the sea and swim in safety to Boceni's yacht, where they are married.

Faithful to the Finish — Komic — August 22.—Colonel Boom has valuable fortification plans locked in his desk. Two spies are trying to lay hands on the papers. The spies overhear Fay, Boom's stenographer, rejoicing in the fact that her millionaire aunt has just died, leaving her a fortune, and that now she can marry Ed, the bookkeeper. Lieutenant Schnide, one of the consipators, decides to win the heiress for himself. He puts over a game on Ed, which causes Fay to break their engagement. Then he and his pal go after the plans. They are discovered, however, by the office boy, who notifies Col. Boom. The villains are arrested; Fay learns of Schnide's perfidy, and she and Ed are re-united.

The Fatal Hour—(Two Reels)—Majestic—August 22.—Hilliary Clark is robbed of a package of diamonds by his son, Edgar, and Edgar's crook accomplices. Walter, old Mr. Clark's favorite son, quarrels with Edgar, and his father takes away his revolver, emptying it of the shells, and letting them lie on the library table. At noon that same day, Walter, entering the library, discovers his father dead in his chair. He opens the safe and finds the diamonds gone. Just then Edgar passes through the hall and Walter fires through the curtain at the supposed burglar. Edgar, unhurt, slips the diamonds into the pocket of his brother's coat, and rushes for a policeman. Because of damaging evidence, both brothers are sent to jail. Later, a detective discovers that the sun, focused on one of the cartridges lying on the table, through the lenses of some spectacles had exploded it, and thus killed Clark. Walter is released and Edgar's guilt being uncovered, he is sentenced to prison.

Strange Mammals at Home — (Split Reel)—Powers—July 29.—This is a remarkable series of pictures prepared at the studio of Raymond L. Ditmas, curator of the New York Zoological Park. First comes a scene showing the strange woolly monkey brought by the Roosevelt Expedition from South America. This is followed by scenes showing a South American owl monkey, an animal which moves about in the treetops at night, hunting grubs among the orchids; a scene showing a Borneo galago, a lowly type of night monkey; then a flesh-eating tiger cat from Brazil, a raid on the chicken yard by a hungry fox, and a few other interesting animal studies.

Itching for Revenge—L-Ko—August 8. —A stranger shoots the village loafer in the bar-room and is about to be hanged. He works on the prosecutor's sympathies by relating the following tale: It seems that they were pals when young, until the girl appeared. The stranger won her and thought he was going to be happy, but his friend had put fleas in his wedding clothes, and because he made such a strange-acting bridegroom the girl threw him over. She then married the "friend" and the other swore vengeance. The tale moves the posse and they let him go. The village loafer comes back to life, and the stranger gets one look at the former sweetheart. One look is enough.

Universal Animated Weekly No. 179 — Universal — August 11. — Armored autos and trucks off for war game at Plattsburg, New York City; National guard officers distribute provisions to miners made destitute through closing of mines in Southern Ohio; newspaper editors hold meeting mile above sea level, Mt. Mitchell, N. C.; coast barrier saved noted summer resort at Seabright, N. J.; National Guardsmen from Connecticut, Massachusetts and Rhode Island reviewed by Governors at Quonset Point, R. I.; members of Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America assemble for annual convention at San Francisco, Calif.; South American envoys leaving State Department at Washington, D. C., after peace conference; U. S. cruiser, Tennessee, on way to Haiti with marines to reinforce Admiral Caperton in quelling uprising; 40,000 women of four nations, who make munitions for battling armies, parade in native costumes with flags, London, England; Lord Kitchener makes stirring appeal for volunteers at London, England; Camberwell sends 4,300 men to the front, London, England; cartoons by Hy. Mayer.

Tony, the Wop—Nestor—August 16.— Victoria falls in love with Tony's monkey, but her husband, Eddie, doesn't like Tony's looks. Tony is stopping in front of Eddie's home and Victoria invites him in to lunch. After lunch the monkey cannot be found, and Tony goes away broken-hearted. The nurse who is in charge of Victoria's baby, sees two evil-looking faces at the window, and thinks they are kidnapers. She snatches the child up and goes in search of a policeman. The monkey, who has wandered about until tired, takes refuge in the cradle. The two men just mentioned are countrymen of Tony's, and seeing the monkey in the cradle carry it away in a coat. Eddie sees this and is caused a good deal of distress until the difficulty is cleared up.

A Fiery Introduction—(Two Reels)—Gold Seal—August 17.—In his apartment Chalmers is busy on one of his plays, and waiting for an inspiration, he hears the cry of fire, and rushes out in the hall in his pajamas. He bumps into a girl, and escorts her to the roof. The two are mutually interested, and being oblivious to their danger, the firemen have to give them the gentle hint to move. After a search for more suitable raiment which results in the round-up of a scheming burglar and the rescue of Edward Dawson, the theatrical manager and his wife, Chalmers finds that the girl with whom he has been thrown, is Nora, the leading woman in his play, and reviewing the events of the night, they decide the introduction has been indeed "fiery."

The Country Girl—Imp—August 17.— Frances Berg leaves her country home to accept a position in the city with Robert Steele, a friend of her father's. In the city she starts going around with John Oliver, a man-around-town, and when Steele admonishes her she does not take kindly to his reproof. Frances learns that the mortgage on her father's house is to be foreclosed, and Oliver, seeing a chance to put her under obligation to him, gives her a check to pay off the mortgage. One night at a restaurant Oliver slights her and she leaves in a huff. Being locked out of the boarding house, she resolves to spend the night in the office. Oliver finds her there, but she protects herself with the telephone. The next day Steele denounces Oliver for his cowardice and pays him the amount of the check. The indications are that Steele is to make Frances his life-long partner.

Quits — Rex — August 17.—"Frenchy" has murdered his wife and is a fugitive from justice. He rescues the sheriff of Long Butte from the quicksand, and to pay the debt the sheriff promises him freedom. "Frenchy's" murdered wife also happens to be the girl who had rejected the sheriff. "Frenchy" that night finds the picture of his murdered wife and is horror struck. The next morning the deputies arrive and capture him. The sheriff forces the deputies to give the Frenchman a five minutes' start, after which he pursues. The party come up in time to see the fugitive supposedly shot out of his canoe. As the story ends, the face of "Frenchy" is seen peering from behind a boulder, full of mocking laughter.

Her Wedding Night—Joker—August 18. Featuring Fritzi Brunette. Mike Flinn is forced into the robbery game by his wife, who has read of a successful burglary and insists that Mike get out and not to return until he "brings the dough." He visits the bungalow of an amorous pair and puts a thorn in their happiness. He outfits himself in the bride's lingerie to escape detection, and has to suffer a series of saccharine ebullitions at the hands of the amorous husband before his identity is discovered. The bride has to suffer the irate bridegroom's wrath, and after a distressing mix-up Mike is landed in the cellar. After a hard night in which many unforeseen events happen, and Mike's wife appears on the scene to save him, all parties are reconciled.

Lord Barrington's Estate — (Three Reels)—Victor—August 18.—With William C. Dowlan. An eccentric old English lord disinherits his daughter for marrying a commoner. She and her husband die, and their child, Violet, is brought up in a convent. Dick Stanton, the old lord's grandson, living in America as a cowboy, inherits the estate on his grandfather's decease, and returns to England. In England he finds his grandfather's sister and her daughter Mildred living on the estate. Their livelihood depends upon Mildred's marriage to Dick. Violet meanwhile returns from school and discovers a later will, which leaves the whole estate to her. Dick, glad to be rid of the burden, starts to leave for the prairies, but Violet, who has come to love him, sacrifices the money, and meeting him at the door with suitcase in hand, they return together.

Ethel's Burglar—Big U—August 19.— Ethel lives with her old aunt and uncle. One night she discovers a burglar in the house. She denounces him for a burglar and tries to start him aright by giving him a letter to her uncle, asking for work. Ethel goes out of the room, and during her absence the burglar starts to rifle the cash box, but his better self prevails. He picks up a locket which contains a familiar face, and begs the girl to let him keep it when she returns. He then tells her the story of how he had saved a baby from the flames in this house years before. The baby proves to be Ethel. She goes to get him a good picture, but while she is gone her uncle comes down and has the man arrested. He is soon released, however, and promises Ethel to lead a straight life.

The Dread Society of the Sacred Sausage—(Episode No. 7 of the "Lady Baffles and Detective Duck" Series)—Powers — August 19. — The Prince of Chow-Chow, who has come to the beach for a rest, and to get away from his tormentors, the society of the "Sacred Sausage," is still within the reach of this pernicious crew, as is evinced by their frequent warnings. Being afraid for his life, he enlists the services of Detective Duck, "the man of forty faces." The famous "Lady Baffles" signs up with the gang. After a series of professional maneuvers, in which some canines play a prominent part, the malefactors fall into the merciless toils of the sleuth, and the supposedly captured Prince emerges from a sand pile where he has been hidden by Duck.

The Little Blonde in Black—(Two Reels)—Laemmle—August 19.—Featuring Robert Leonard. Mrs. Norchester, who has a valuable diamond cross, is at the Beverly Hills Hotel. The blonde has become friendly with Mrs. Norchester, who is suspected of being the tool of a band of crooks. Bob, a clubman, has become infatuated with her, and intending marriage, he helps her to get away after the dance on the night the jewel is stolen. They take with them Bob's pet terrier. The next morning he reads of the robbery, and finds she has disappeared. He is put under arrest for abetment, but later the girl comes to the station and is introduced as a member of Scotland Yard, and she discloses the jewel under the dog's jacket. Then she makes her marriage promise good.

The Substitute Widow—(Two Reels)—Imp—August 20.—Joan Faraday, penniless and jobless, starts to leave the Manhattan House, when a veiled woman, introducing herself as Mrs. Maud Burgess, a widow, gives her one hundred dollars to exchange places with her for a day, room and all, as she wishes to escape some spies. Having taken charge of the room, Joan picks up a newspaper which describes the latest exploit of "Gentleman" Hawkins in connection with the Maddock diamonds. Joan is about to leave when Hawkins himself is announced, and refusing to see him, he gets in by the fire-escape. In the struggle that follows, her veil falls, and the thief's amazement and curses are drowned by the police, whom the house detective has summoned. As the police are leading them away, Joan finds a letter explaining that the widow, really Ada Hawkins, anxious to lead an honest life, has, by substituting Joan in her place, given her husband's spies the slip, enabling her to restore the diamonds to the Maddock family.

Kids and Corsets—Nestor—August 20.—Wifey thinks that husband is too thick with Mrs. Smith, their neighbor. The children of the friends are quite chummy. Baby Smith finds one of her mother's corsets and goes next door to play. Later Mrs. Smith comes after her child, and hubby, who is shaving, tells her to come right up and get her. In the melee that follows, Mrs. Smith gets some lather on her face. Wifey comes in and seeing Mrs. Smith's be-Colgated phiz, accuses them of kissing. She also sees the corset on the floor, and a lively rough-house is in order. The husbands later decide to have things out between themselves, but ultimately the dove of peace smooths over all the hard places.

The Taming of Mary—Victor—August 20.—Harry Benton is engaged to Mary Schuyler, whom he adores. His attentions are so profuse that Mary becomes bored and tells her father that he is too mushy. On an excursion steamer Mary ignores Harry so much that he goes to her father for assistance. Father, against all tradition, aids him, and knowing that all girls like a hero, he prepares a fake fire in which Harry saves Mary all by himself. The fond parents congratulate the noble hero, and the lovers' embrace is most animated.

The Gopher—(Two Reels)—Bison—August 21.—Dr. Widtsoe's wife Vada has been carrying on mild flirtations with a friend. Dr. Widtsoe returns home one night and finds the "friend" dead on the doorstep, and his wife, seeing him with gun in hand, believes him guilty. Widtsoe learns for the first time of Vada's affair. The misunderstanding is complete, and he, in danger, leaves for the West. Widtsoe conceives and executes the plan of living under the ground, thus the cognomen of "The Gopher," and is also the inventor of an instrument for reading the subconscious mind. Vada goes out West for her health and is in a stage hold-up. The sheriff suspects Widtsoe of the robbery, and searching for him, meets Vada and makes advances to her. "The Gopher" gets both of them down in his underground home, and with his instrument the sheriff's past is revealed, showing him to be the murderer of Vada's former friend. The authorities finally get the sheriff, and husband and wife are reconciled.

Bobby Bumps' Adventures—Joker—August 21.—A highly amusing moving picture cartoon showing Bobby playing all sorts of tricks on his unsuspecting papa. Bobby helps himself to some gasoline from papa's auto, so that when he attempts to start it the machine refuses to budge. After this follows a series of incidents which result in the downfall of Bobby and his companion, Chocolate.

On the same reel is Seeing the Funny Side of the World With Homer Croy, a series of highly interesting pictures taken in Honolulu and Japan, depicting the curious and grotesque customs of the natives, and giving many glimpses of the wonderful scenery.

A Double Deal in Pork—Powers—August 21.—John Packer, who has made his money in pork, wishes to invade society. He meets Mrs. De Knickerbocker, who has a son, Tom. Mrs. De Knickerbocker is aristocratic but poor. She conceives the plan of marrying Tom to Nellie, the packer's daughter, but the young people are romantic and the thing is all off. The next best thing to do, Mrs. De K. thinks, is to marry the packer himself, which she does. The young people, under assumed names, meet at the seashore, and after Tom saves her from some thugs who are after her jewelry, true love has its course. Mr. and Mrs. John Packer arrive, and recognition, consternation, forgiveness and delight ensue. The old folks needn't have married at all, but the double deal in pork has been put through, nevertheless.

Dr. Mason's Temptation — Laemmle Drama—August 22.—Dr. Mason and his wife are expecting a visit from the stork shortly and as it is his wife's wish to be with her mother at this time, the doctor tries in vain to raise the money to move them to her home town. His friend, Dr. Crosby, in this town is anxious to have him for a partner, but cannot furnish money. Mason visits Abner Stebbins, a wealthy man of the village, but a loan is refused, and the doctor, seeing him deposit a large amount of money, gives him a potion that will keep him asleep that night. At nine o'clock, the time Stebbins is to take the potion, Mason gets a rush call and his wife finally gets him to go. He has an all-night watch, but saves the case, and returning home gets a telegram from Dr. Crosby promising money. Stebbins also gives him a fee, saying that he has had the first peaceful night in many a day.

A Tale of Twenty Stories — (Two Reels)—L-Ko—August 22.—Hank gets in a jam in the Hotel de Bunion with an ill-tempered husband and another two-hundred-pound gentleman. He pacifies the heavy one and has almost conciliated the husband, but the latter's wife loses her skirt, and circumstantial evidence points to Hank. He starts to retire, but is locked out in the hall in his pajamas, and commits reckless intrusion on many peaceful sleepers. Husband and a detective give chase, and on the edge of the roof, far above the sidewalk, there is a grand fracas, in which several cops are constrained to participate. Meanwhile

Four Years of Use "Just as good condition as when newly bought." "Never had any occassion to spend any money for repairs."

Chicago, Ill., May 19th, 1915.

The Precision Machine Co., New York, N. Y.

Dear Sirs:

It is a great pleasure for me to tender my idea on the machine in question as the magnificent services which I have procured from same absolutely demand it. It is, without doubt, the most durable moving picture machine I have ever operated in my 13 years of experience in this line of business. The machines are now completing their fourth year of professional services and up to the present date they are in just as good condition as when newly bought, and, furthermore, the writer, as well as the management, has never had any occasion to spend any money for repairs, repair parts, or otherwise. Not only can I, without default, pronounce the Simplex as being the strongest machine on the market, but it is also regarded by brother operators as carrying a very sharp, accurate and steady picture, and therefore, is considered a machine of superior quality and will surely meet with the approval of the most particular demands.

I am ready at any time to confirm the foregoing statements as I deem it a just duty to make assertions of this nature on features found in the Simplex Projector.

Yours very truly,

(Signed) MONTE A. GLOSS, Operator.

A Seashore Romeo—Rex—August 22. Ben and Dolly are very much in love, but Dad thinks Ben knows too much about athletics, and not enough about money making. At the seashore, Dad tries to keep them separated, but they trick him, and he goes out in search of the missing couple. Under a parasol very much similar to Dolly's, Dad finds a belle of the hotel and decides to have a talk with her. Ben sees him and resolves to show him that athletics have some value. Dolly pretends to be drowning, and Ben tells Dad that if he saves her it will be for himself, and then strides into the billows and pulls forth his laughing sweetheart. Dad then is completely won over by the daring youth.

Larens, an accomplice of Del Mar's, persuades Elaine to look at some Parisian gowns and in the act of trying these gowns on Elaine is captured by Del Mar, who has concealed himself in a closet. Elaine is taken to the secret arsenal and held a prisoner. Prof. Arnold assists her in making an escape and at the risk of her life she jumps into a boat. The water terminates in a waterfall. Jameson and Prof. Arnold, with the assistance of another man and a stout rope, form a "life chain" and rescue Elaine just as she is to be dashed over the falls to her death. The Prison in the Palace—(EIGHTH INSTALLMENT OF "THE BROKEN COIN").—Featuring Grace Cunard and Francis Ford. Sachio takes Kitty before the king at Grahaffen, and she refusing to tell what is on the other side of the coin (in reality she does not know) is kept a prisoner at the palace. Meanwhile, King Michael is anxious about Kitty and tells Frederick that if she does not return soon he will send out a searching party. One of Michael's secretaries, who is a spy, returns at once to Grahaffen to tell the king there that he will have to work quickly with Kitty. Roleaux escapes and hides in a car. Kitty hears the King plotting to start a revolution against Michael. Kitty finally escapes from the palace in an automobile just as Sachio and his men appear. Sachio has a row with the King, who gives him just twenty-four hours in which to get either the girl or the secret coins. As he has to make good or be thrown out of the diplomatic circles of Grahaffen, he starts after Kitty.

Just Jim—(FOUR REELS)—UNIVERSAL—August 16.—Jim, a smuggler, is released from prison. He decides to go straight and is entrusted with a package for the nameless daughter of a rich woman. He goes West and delivers the package to the girl and afterward sees that she is brought to her father, who is governor. Later Jim is shanghaied on a smuggling ship. He escapes from the ship and returns to learn that Rose returns the love which he has for her. For longer review see another page of this issue.

Room 22—(NINTH INSTALLMENT OF "THE BROKEN COIN").—With Grace Cunard and Francis Ford. Roleaux, who is under the car which Kitty has used for her escape, surprises her and they both have a merry ride back to Gretzhoffen. Kitty again puts up at the hotel and while she is out to get the other half of the coin from Frederick, Sachio's man and the spy from Gretzhoffen search her room. As the spy comes out of the room, the other man is attacked from the rear. There is a great commotion in the hotel over the murder and the officers arrest both Kitty and Frederick. Roleaux, in the meantime, has caught the apache of previous reels in Kitty's room, and the officers are ready to apprehend him, when the chief of police enters and demands that they all be taken to the room of the crime, and on arriving there they are staggered to find the room in good order and the dead man nowhere visible.

The Goddess—(TWO REELS)—VITAGRAPH—Chapter Fourteen.—By taking a short cut Stilleter plans to reach the cave before Celestia and Tommy. The psychologist is bitten by a poisonous snake and dies. His death frees Celestia from the hypnotic influence which Stilleter exercised over her. She is dispelled of her delusion that she is an angel, and agrees to marry Tommy. They arrive in the city and go to the mass-meeting held by Mr. Barclay, who is almost certain of being elected president in the coming election. Celestia ascends the speakers' stand and confesses that she was deceived and that her doctrine, which they had all accepted, is a fraud. The millionaires leave the meeting immediately, fearing that they will be mobbed. When the people learn that they have been hoodwinked, they determine to find the millionaires and kill them. Celestia and Tommy board a train for Gull Isle. The final scene shows the mob surging into the grounds of Gordon Barclay's home. For a longer review see another page, this issue.

The Stolen Voice—(FOUR REELS)—WORLD.—Robert Warwick featured. Gerald Dorville, a well known singer, loses his voice, even his speaking voice, and finally finds employment as a motion picture actor in the same studio with a shop girl, who used to wait outside the stage door for a peep at the famous tenor. While making a scene for an Indian story, Gerald saves his little sweetheart from being washed over a rocky falls in a canoe. Then the hypnotic doctor, who has woven a spell over the singer, dies. The spell is broken and the singer regains his voice. Of course, he weds the pretty picture actress.

Triangle's New York Home Selected

FRANCHISE APPLICATIONS POURING IN

NEGOTIATIONS were completed last week for the Knickerbocker theater in New York City. Through Klaw and Erlanger, the Triangle Film Corporation will have control of the time of this theater for one year, beginning in September. This will be the New York house in which the plays and comedies of the Griffith-Ince-Sennett combination will be brought out weekly. The film plays will be produced at the regular theater scale of prices graded from $2 downward.

The plan, as fully determined upon, is to offer prominent stars in two five-reel feature dramas which will be brought out under the supervision of D. W. Griffith and Thomas Ince and two two-reel comedies under the supervision of Mack Sennett. The definite date for the first week has not been settled, but the new occupants take over the Knickerbocker the first week in September, and will make extensive changes there before inaugurating the new policy. This is the first of the prominent theaters to be secured for the Triangle combination. The new company has also secured the Studebaker theater in Chicago and is expected to have houses in Boston and Philadelphia. With these houses as their nucleus the Triangle Film plays will be presented in a chain of theaters in all the cities and larger centers of this country and Canada.

It is estimated that by the time the applications for franchises are disposed of over 1,000 houses in this country and Canada will be included in the chain presenting Triangle film plays. These franchises are being negotiated for, prior to the opening of the Knickerbocker engagement, so that the new combination can be started at once. The Knickerbocker will be the original starting point for all the big plays in the eastern territory. The Studebaker will be opened in Chicago at about the same time and will be the point of origin for these attractions in the middle western territory.

The attractions selected for the Triangle opening bill next month at the Knickerbocker theater, New York, and Studebaker theater, Chicago, will be Raymond Hitchcock, with Mabel Normand and the Sennett Company, in the original farce, "My Valet;" Douglas Fairbanks and the Griffith Company in "The Man and the Test," a modern adventure story, and Frank Keenan in Thomas Ince's new Civil War play entitled "The Coward." No date has been set for the opening, but it will undoubtedly take place not later than the middle of September.

Fox Sends Brenon to Jamaica

GREAT PRODUCTION EXPECTED

WHEN Herbert Brenon sailed away to Jamaica on Wednesday, August 18, he was accompanied by the largest motion picture organization ever sent from this country. He will be gone three months and is expected by William Fox to bring back the greatest screen production in the history of filmdom. To do this he has absolute carte blanche as to the expenditure of time and money, and as to the development of the story, which is an emanation from Mr. Brenon's own fertile brain.

In addition to the one hundred principals in the company there will be twenty-two hundred and fifty supernumeraries, the costumes for all of whom will be specially designed and made for this production. It will be necessary to build an entire city on land and another under water for this superlative fantasy, a beautiful conception of re-incarnation, involving myriad fairies, elves, witches, gnomes, sprites and mermaids. The wonders of the forest and of the depths of the sea will alike be shown.

Naturally, the star for such a fairy tale of beauty and grace will be Annette Kellerman, whose success in Mr. Brenon's great submarine achievement, "Neptune's Daughter," will not be forgotten by the many who were fortunate enough to see it. The male lead will be played by William E. Shay, who starred with Theda Bara in Mr. Brenon's famous adaptation of "The Clemenceau Case," and also in Mr. Brenon's own photodrama, "Sin," the production of which he has just completed. Mr. Fox will do Mr. Brenon the honor of opening his new One-a-Week policy on September 6 with "The Two Orphans," which Brenon both adopted and produced.

Quite an imposing array of talent aside from the players will accompany Mr. Brenon. While working in Jamaica and the neighboring islands on the monster production, Mr. Brenon will also write and supervise the production of three other big features, the actual staging of which will be in the capable hands of Edward Morrissy, formerly of the Biograph Company, who has been so successful in producing one and two-reel pictures that Mr. Brenon has great faith in his future as a director of big features. The technical director, whose undertaking in his department will be only less stupendous than Mr. Brenon's will be George Fitch, who has been with Mr. Brenon for four years both in stage and screen work. J. Allen Turner will be the technical expert of construction on the settings and properties, and an army of carpenters, stone masons, scenic artists, etc., will assist. James McKay will act in his usual capacity of general "right-hand man" to the director. Mrs. Irene Lee, the wardrobe mistress, will take with her a great corps of seamstresses and a large portion of the steamer's hold will be occupied by her sewing machines.

Mr. Brenon's orchestra of a leader and seven pieces, without the assistance of whom he never takes even the smallest scene, believing that carefully selected music supplies the needed inspiration in the absence of an audience, will be important members of the party as, of course, will be the five photographers, headed by Phil Rosen and H. E. Butler. Frederick Church will be the business manager.

WORLD FILM WILL CONTROL THE NEW PARAGON STUDIO

The World Film Corporation will operate the new Paragon studio at Fort Lee. This statement made last week by Lewis J. Selznick, vice-president and general manager of World Film, answers the question that the film world generally has been asking ever since construction work was begun on the big establishment. World Film's control of the Paragon will be as absolute as that at present exercised in the direction of the Peerless Company, whose acting and administrative policies are formulated at World Film headquarters. But there will be no other direct connection between the Peerless and Paragon companies. The Peerless will continue to employ the directors, stars and supporting companies, whose efforts have helped to establish its success. The Paragon staff-directors, actors and studio employes will be exclusively engaged in the new studio.

After dissipating the atmosphere of mystery which had begun to envelop the Paragon studio Mr. Selznick definitely set at rest the rumors which have been circulated predicting a possible break in the relations of the World Film and other organizations with which it is now allied. He announced that as the World Film owns the entire capital stock of the Shubert Film Corporation and of the Peerless Feature Picture Company, which in turn owns fifty per cent of William A. Brady Picture Plays Inc., stories of a probable dissolution of the ties which bind together the interests of these concerns are mere vaporings. Instead of facing a limiting of its resources and a restriction of its activities, the World Film by reason of its control of the Paragon Company and its alliance with the newly organized Equitable Corporation is preparing to enlarge its scope. Three feature releases per week will now be the number on the World Film program with an excellent prospect of increasing this output in the near future.

The Paragon studio, at Fort Lee, N. J., will, when completed, be the largest motion picture studio in the East. It is being erected by the Paragon Films Company. The superficial dimensions of the studio are 160 feet. This vast building will enable spectacles of great magnitude to be staged in it.

The designs for the new Paragon studio were furnished by a well known architect, who is embodying in the building the most modern ideas of motion picture studio construction. One of the many novel features of the studio will be an enormous revolving stage. External to the main building will be an extension, giving an extra twenty feet of available space upon which seats may be erected. The camera being operated in the studio, exterior sets may be photographed outside, all around the building. Something like a space of 200 feet square will be available for these purposes.

Facilities for camera work of the most diverse character will be provided inside the studio. Camera men will be able to operate at any height or angle, and panoramic effects may be easily obtained, the lateral and horizontal motions of the camera also giving stereoscopic relief, as well as panoramic, when so desired. Attached to the Paragon studio will be a positive printing plant of one million and a half feet capacity per week.

Another important feature will be the installation of a special plant for the production of motion picture positives in natural colors, by a process which has been successfully established by practice to give the best and most pleasing results. In respect to photographic quality the Paragon studio has been designed and equipped to give the most perfect, artistic and technical results.

B. N. JUDDEL NEW MANAGER OF CHICAGO MUTUAL OFFICES

B. N. Juddel, of Minneapolis, who for the past three years has been in charge of the Mutual interests in the Mill City, arrived in Chicago the latter part of last week to assume charge of the Mutual Film Corporation's offices in that city. Mr. Juddel succeeds Roie C. Seery, who was the Mutual district manager, and Ralph Bradford, who was local manager, as the office of district manager has been abolished by President Freuler of the Mutual.

Mr. Juddel brings with him a most enviable record as an exchange man and undoubtedly has a thorough knowledge of film conditions, since on August 10, of this year, he celebrated his tenth anniversary as a film manager. During all that period he has been employed under John R. Freuler, now the president of the Mutual, and has profited by his teachings. He opened the Minneapolis branch of the Mutual in 1912 and was in charge until last week. Mr. Juddel is succeeded in that office by W. H. Stafford who has been his chief correspondent for the last year and a half.

WORLD'S TINIEST BALL TEAM

Little Will Archie announes that his "Pee-wee Baseball Team," composed of the tiny stars of the "Pee-wee Picture Players," will be ready in a few weeks to meet all comers on the diamond. Herbert Rice, who stands but three feet in height, will play shortstop. The debut of the above miniature baseball team will be made at Brighton Beach, August 22, when they will play the "Giants" of the screen. For the protection of the "Pee-wee's," Captain George Auger, who stands seven feet eleven inches, will be official umpire.

J. A. Berst Discusses Scripts

REAL WRITERS SCARCE

You cannot teach the art of photoplay writing by correspondence.

The photoplay writing field was never more fertile for those having originality.

Few having original ideas write with perfect technique and few with perfect technique have originality.

Inspiration is just another meaning for perspiration. It is more difficult to write a good photoplay story than it is to write a good magazine story.

Speaking for the Selig Polyscope Company, we find about one photoplay plot in one hundred submitted, is worthy of payment.

The photoplaywrights who combine proper technique together with original ideas of great worth, can be numbered on the fingers of your two hands, despite the fact that the new field of literary endeavor has been conscientiously cultivated for years.

"YOU cannot teach the art of photoplay writing by correspondence or lessons," is the assertion of J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of the Selig Polyscope Company. Mr. Berst granted an interview the other day on the subject of photoplay writing just after he had gone through a half hundred manuscripts all of which were not suitable for Selig production.

Colonel William N. Selig, president of the Selig Company, and his right hand man, Mr. Berst, compose two authorities on the art of writing photoplays. Both have had years of experience in reading and passing upon the stories of the ambitious writers and both are justly famed for their unfailing courtesies and for high prices paid those who meet the requirements of the Selig company with unusual ideas.

"The photoplay field was never more fertile for those having originality and appreciating the peculiar requirements of the screen," said Mr. Berst. "However, we find that originality is at a premium. The worthy ideas are few and far between. The talent for plotting does not seem to be general among the so-called free lance writers. That is one reason why the number of successful writers who have the plotting instinct is so limited.

"Another detail that I have noticed is that few having original ideas write perfect technique and few with the perfect technique possess original ideas. That is the reason why the larger film manufacturing companies maintain staffs of writers skilled in screen technique who whip the unusual ideas submitted by others into proper form for filming purposes.

"Inspiration is just another name for perspiration. Many writers tell the editor of their 'inspiration' when it is hard work that counts. A careful study of the character of releases put forth by the various film companies and a careful study of the motion picture as shown on the screen with an eye to the size of the cast, the methods of using sub-titles, their number, how the characters are introduced and how the plot is developed, is worth a great deal more to the would-be author than any 'lessons' on the subject. Experience may be a dear teacher but it is the best teacher in the art of writing picture plays.

"We find that about one story in a hundred submitted to the Selig Polyscope is worthy of purchase. The majority of the free lance writers endeavor to write technique when many of them should submit only the idea in a clear and brief form.

"The Selig Company is willing to pay good prices for photoplays suitable for one, two and three-reel productions. Good one-reel animal stories are also desired. Every person who attends the motion picture theaters has enjoyed the Selig Jungle-Zoo wild animal comedies and dramas in one and more reels. And yet it is a fact that few writers cater to our demand for wild animal comedies and dramas even when it is known that the Selig Company possesses the largest privately owned collection of wild beasts and birds in the world.

"The photoplaywright who combines proper technique together with original ideas of great worth are few indeed. Authors with both technique and originality can perhaps be numbered on the fingers of your two hands. These are the writers who ask for and can command the highest prices.

"It would seem that every other man or woman in the world were trying to write photoplays. Manuscripts arrive daily at all film company offices—they arrive in bales—and when it is considered the number of markets then it can be conjectured the vast qauntities of stories written.

"The market for photoplays is becoming more and more difficult and those who would succeed must put both time, thought and care into their efforts."

ROSETTA BRICE, LUBIN STAR, DISCUSSES MORALS OF ACTRESSES

"I don't suppose that I can say much more than has been said in answer to the base assertion by Robert C. Barston, secretary of the Morals Efficiency Committee of Los Angeles that 'Every moving picture actress loses her virtue when she aspires to enter the field,'" declared Rosetta Brice at Lubin's studio last week as she laid aside the script of the new five-reel feature in which she is to play the lead.

"But any real student of morals would never make such a declaration. Morals," continued Miss Brice, "are traits that each and every woman must define for herself. Certainly a woman's profession is not indicative of her morals; except perhaps that one profession which is older than all others, the one Mrs. Warren so strongly typifies.

"Two years ago I resigned from the Orpheum stock company at the Chestnut Street theater and came to Lubin's. Every day during those two years I have been working either at Betzwood or in the main studios at Twentieth and Indiana streets. I have seen more than two hundred persons, professional men and women and extra men and women assembled in the 'yard.' I have seen girls, young and pretty girls; make their start here in this plant and I have seen them win their way up the ladder; but not once have I seen anything untoward or any laxity in conduct between the men and the women.

"The women of the theatrical profession have always been cruelly misjudged for many, many years and simply because one or two have created comment and gossip. But should the whole profession be misjudged because of a few? If that were true the profession of law would be the most dishonorable of all professions, for every day there are stories, true stories, of men who discredit their profession by lending themselves to cases which are unfit and which scorn all rules and ethics of the profession.

"Doctors, too, would have no fair name, for in their profession are the quacks and those who are so evil that there is no description that properly fits them.

"I could name a dozen other walks in life in which it might be possible to label all members guilty because a few are lax. In this newest profession in the world, motion pictures, there is less laxity in morals than any other form of amusement work, I believe. That is due to the environment. Here every man and woman is active, mentally and physically, all day long. The bracing fresh air of Betzwood, the physical action that is necessary to make a scene 'go,' the constant outdoor work, all keep a person's mind clean and wholesome.

"Morals are a question of self. If one chooses to live clean and sweet, then his life will be clean and sweet. If one's nature turns towards the other and lacks will power, then I suppose, like the reed, he will bend with the wind.

"But when a man occupies the position of secretary of a morals efficiency committee, it seems to me that he must need many facts and figures and columns of statistics before he should dare to make such a broad assertion as that uttered by Robert C. Barton.

"The girl who means to be a success and the girl who is successful need have no more fear of entering the motion picture field than she need have to enter the profession of public school teacher, hospital nurse, or the department store. I have found that it is only the clean, wholesome young women who succeed and who last."

JESSE LASKY SUGGESTS THAT MANUFACTURERS WATCH EUROPE

"American manufacturers of motion pictures and photoplay productions should keep their eye on Europe," said Jesse L. Lasky, president of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, on his arrival in New York last week from Hollywood, Calif. One of the purposes of his hastened return to the East was to consummate arrangements that have been the subject of negotiations lasting over several months and which have a direct bearing on the future exploitation and distribution of American manufactured photoplays in Europe.

The importance of these negotiations may be best understood when Mr. Lasky chose to come East before the completion of "Carmen" and other photoplays in which Geraldine Farrar is appearing for the camera in the Lasky studios. Mr. Lasky, Samuel Goldfish, executive head of the Lasky Feature Play Company, and their business and allied associates will confer on a program for the invasion of Europe at the moment the great war is over.

"I do not think the importance of the European market to American manufacturers can be over-estimated," said Mr. Lasky. "When the war is over, millions of persons will swerve as one away from thoughts of strife to thoughts of peace and re-construction. History has proved that great popular forms of amusement form a very vital part of the lives of peoples in such conditions. The motion picture—the photoplay—particularly the American product, from which has been removed all taint of war and sordidness, will be received with the greatest enthusiasm.

'A great audience of tens of millions awaits the moderate priced entertainment as soon as the war is over. Here is a field so great and in which so much good can be accomplished by the proper kind of productions that the very size of the opportunity is a tax on the imagination."

JAPANESE PLAYERS ENGAGED

Immediately upon their arrival here for an extraordinary engagement, at the San Francisco Exposition, the Maida Imperial Dramatic Company was met at the pier by George Foster Platt, the Thanhouser director. In Japan Mr. Platt met the players, who for six successive seasons have been the favorites of the Mikado. While in Tokio Mr. Platt had ample opportunity to study the Japanese dramatic art, and when he heard that Mr. Maida was coming to these shores he laid plans to introduce them to the films. In this he succeeded and soon they were marveling at the wonders of the New Rochelle studios. Mr. Thanhouser was a gracious host and was particularly struck with the demure Miss Mitzu. The visitors finally accepted Mr. Thanhouser's offer and they are now at work under Director Platt, who is well versed in Nipponese customs and folk-lore. The first release is "In a Japanese Garden," scheduled for August 22. In this the Samurai code of obedience to the parent's wish is tragically illustrated, and it is interesting that Mr. Maida, who plays the Samurai, is one of that honorable class in actual life. When little Miss Mitzu accepts the attentions of a young naval officer, played by George Marlo, her father simply hands her a dagger and she knows it means that she must commit harakiri. Samurai descendants must do an elder's will.

EDNA GOODRICH, HOME FROM WAR, TO APPEAR IN LASKY PHOTOPLAYES

After a year's devoted service as a nurse in the hospitals in England and Belgium, Edna Goodrich, the famous American actress, returned to New York last week for two-fold reasons. Although she showed no evidence of the terrible strain under which she has been constantly for many months, particularly during the last weeks of her stay in England when her house near London was transformed into a hospital for convalescent soldiers, Miss Goodrich admitted a certain fatigue and the need of a rest here in scenes far from war's devastation. The other and more important reason for her return is that she is leaving almost immediately for Hollywood, Cal., to make her debut as an actress before the motion picture camera in the studios of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, at Hollywood, Cal.

Edna Goodrich.

Miss Goodrich's beauty has won world-wide fame for her. Like so many talented American actresses, she made her start in musical comedy, her first appearance being at the Casino Theater, New York, in 1900, in "Floradora." After a brilliant career in musical comedy she became leading woman for Nat C. Goodwin, and played with him at various times between 1905 and 1909. Subsequently, she was one of the leading dramatic stars in vaudeville.

Her photodrama debut will be an important event in cinematography. The Lasky Feature Play Company has a surprise photoplay in store for her.

"BIG STARS ARE ALL RIGHT BUT GET THE BIG AUTHORS"

"Big stars from the speaking stage," said M. Maurice Tourneur, director of the World Film Corporation, between scenes at the Fort Lee studio the other day, "are all right for the photoplay. I have no fault to find with them. They have done a big service for the moving pictures. They have made it possible for us to lift ourselves out of the nickelodeons or small stores class. They have lent tone to the screen. They have won, through the importance of their names and the attendant advertising possible with it, consideration for the film drama from the intelligent class of people, who otherwise would not have regarded it seriously.

"But the big call of the moving picture of today in its anxiety for its future must be for manuscripts. We have in the moving picture a new way of expressing our thoughts; therefore let us have new ideas to express as well. Let us not put on the same old stuff cloaked in a slightly altered garment. I am glad that I believe that the adapting of books and stage plays is only a temporary, as it is at present a necessary, evil. Our film stories must be written especially and originally for the screen and with the possibilities of the camera always in the author's mind.

"We must find a way—and there is only one way—to attract the most talented authors to the scenario field. If we offer enough money, we will command their attention and they will learn in time to realize the numberless possibilities of the screen and specialize in that direction.

"The so-called scenario writer of today, with but few exceptions, is a back number or should be one. He is a relic of a by-gone day with an entirely different demand, who has not kept abreast of the times and does not realize the changed conditions. Indeed, if he had, I doubt if he would have known how to meet them. He is of an inferior order of intelligence. He is a small peg in a large hole and does not fit it at all and cannot be made to. Far better would it be to find a peg which was too big and cut it down to the proper dimensions.

"Really when I see some of the stuff on the screen, I can only shut my eyes and clench my hands in mental agony. It reminds me of a very early picture in the first moments of motion pictures, which I found mentioned in an ancient catalogue the other day. It reads: '25 feet—Arrival of a train in a station—Full of movement—Very interesting.'

"The time is past when we were satisfied with movement alone. Now we want action. We must not confuse action and foolishness any more than we must mistake melodrama for drama. What is the sense of paying huge salaries to excellent actors just to make them jump through windows, chase over rocky roads, through dense underbrush or across muddy streams. If this must be done it is work for 'extra people' or 'supers.' Let us have scripts with the real actors acting with their brains, not with their legs."

V. L. S. E. OFFICES ENLARGED

The photographs recently taken of the executive offices of V. L. S. E. have already gone into the archives of that company, as records of the past, for with the varnish hardly dry on the office partitions it has already been necessary to start the work of tearing them down to enlarge the quarters.

The business of the Big Four has gone forward with such gigantic strides, that almost the entire seventh floor of the big Mecca building, New York, is insufficient to accommodate the working forces of the main office, and the re-arrangement now being made is designed to give temporary relief.

Since the inauguration of V. L. S. E. service last April the number of its branches has been more than tripled, and the capacity business being done by each office, indicates that even the present number of branches will soon have to be increased.

According to Consul General J. E. Jones of Genoa, Italy, the Italians are great supporters of motion picture shows and the business is developing rapidly in all parts of the kingdom. High prices prevail and extra prices are charged for viewing expensive films.

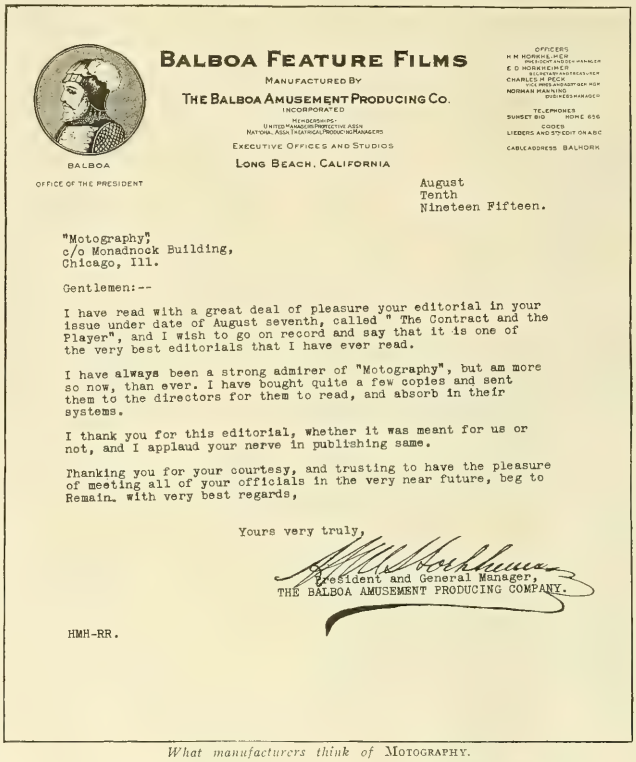
The George Kleine Company has removed its general offices from 166 North State street, Chicago, to 11 East Fourteenth street, New York City.

THOMAS INCE MAKES MANY ADDITIONS TO HIS BIG STAFF

Charles Giblyn, regarded by the profession as one of the best directors in the country, has been engaged, it was announced this week, by the New York Motion Picture Corporation to become a subordinate director under the personal supervision of Thomas H. Ince. He will sever his relations with Universal within the next few weeks and immediately begin his duties at the Inceville studios, where he will undertake the production of feature photo-dramas in which Broadway legitimate celebrities will be starred. His acquisition augments the list of Ince directors to nine, the others being William S. Hart, Raymond B. West, Reginald Barker, Walter Edwards, Jay Hunt, Richard Stanton, Scott Sidney and Charles Swickard.

With the help of almost unlimited funds, masterly stagecraft and renowned actors and actresses, Giblyn will be counted upon to turn out some remarkably finished productions for the Triangle.

That Ince has begun the introduction of innovations in his campaign to produce perfect picture-plays is further evidenced this week by the announcement that he has engaged Lee Bartholomew, formerly chief camera man at Universal, to supervise the development of negative film for the New York Motion Picture Corporation. Bartholomew already has associated himself with Inceville and the results of his work have manifested themselves on the screen in the projection room.



He is acting merely in an advisory capacity, the position having been created by Ince for purposes of better acquainting camera men and directors with many of the seemingly insignificant mistakes the camera is likely to make. He views the film in the projection room, immediately following its development and then, sitting in judgment upon its merits, prescribes any remedies necessary to perfection. Bartholomew is recognized as an expert of the first magnitude and Ince is satisfied that what he doesn't know about photography isn't worth knowing.

Still another indication that the great director-general of the New York Motion Picture producing forces is earnest in his desire to provide the acme of productions is furnished by the fact that he has engaged Henry Warnack and William Stoermer for his scenario department. Warnack is nationally celebrated as a dramatic critic and Stoermer is a promoter who has long been affiliated with theatrical enterprises. Neither will do any actual writing of 'scripts, but both will cooperate with Ince and his two staff writers — C. Gardner Sullivan and J. G. Hawks—in preparing the big vital plays to be produced for The Triangle.

Warnack's duties will be principally to analyze and comment on the strength and availability of plots, as well as to occasionally furnish a story or theme from his own fertile brain. Stoermer will act as Mr. Ince's proxy in obtaining rights to plays or books which the director-general may want to adapt and will also negotiate, in a large measure, for the purchase of submitted scenario-synopses. These two acquisitions to the scenario bureau at Inceville represent another new departure that will be watched with interest.

Building operation at Inceville continue to progress this week with the same speed that has characterized the construction department since the decision made some months ago to widen the scope of the plant. The new glass studio has been completed, the finishing touches are being applied to what will serve as Billie Burke's dressing room and a large corps of carpenters is now busy building a structure to be used as a tinting room. Heretofore all tinting of negative has been done at the Edendale factory of the company, but in future the work will be expedited at the Inceville studios. This step, it is believed, will facilitate the work for the reason that it will eliminate possible delays.

Henry M. MacMahon, general press representative of the Triange Film Corporation, was a visitor to the Inceville studios of the New York Motion Picture Corporation last week. Mr. MacMahon arrived in Los Angeles to inspect the plants of the three producers who will constitute the manufacturing end of the Triangle and to lay the foundation of his plans

Gentlemen:--

I have read with a great deal of pleasure your editorial in your issue under date of August seventh, called " The Contract and the Player", and I wish to go on record and say that it is one of the very best editorials that I have ever read.

I have always been a strong admirer of "Motography", but am more so now, than ever. I have bought quite a few copies and sent them to the directors for them to read, and absorb in their systems.

I thank you for this editorial, whether it was meant for us or not, and I applaud your nerve in publishing same.

Thanking you for your courtesy, and trusting to have the pleasure of meeting all of your officials in the very near future, beg to Remain, with very best regards,

Yours very truly,

President and General Manager,
THE BALBOA AMUSEMENT PRODUCING COMPANY.

for the nation-wide publicity campaign that is to feature the new program. He is a man of long and varied experience in theatrical and motion picture circles and is consequently well-qualified to undertake the responsible task that confronts him. While at Inceville he met and talked with a number of the more prominent stars now working there and obtained brief interviews with each of them.

EMERALD MOTION PICTURE COMPANY OPENS OFFICES

There is another new film company in Chicago. Its name is the Emerald Motion Picture Company, and it is a subsidiary of the American Standard Motion Picture Company. The offices of both companies are located at 164-166 West Washington street. Frederick Ireland, well known on the legitimate stage, where he has been a producer, manager and player for many years, is president of the new organization; Mr. Deltwin, a capitalist, is vice-president; Samuel Quinn, president of the American Standard Motion Picture Company, is secretary and treasurer of the Emerald concern, and M. G. Watkins, general manager of the American Standard, is also heavily interested in the Emerald, but not an officer.

Mr. Ireland is a true son of Erin, having been born in Dublin, Ireland, and is known well nigh around the world, since for many years he was producer and proprietor of a company that played long engagements in Melbourne, Australia, several cities in South Africa and in London.

It is understood the new company is to produce feature film dealing with the history of prominent Irish-Americans and the first four-reel production will have as its central figure none other than Patrick Henry. One-reel comedies are also to be made under Mr. Ireland's direction, these being extremely funny without resorting to slap-stick comedy. A more detailed announcement of the plans of the Emerald Motion Picture Company, as well as a mention of some of the players of note who have been engaged by it, will appear in a near issue of Motography.

Edwin Thanhouser's Future Plans

BIG THINGS AHEAD

With the new announcements from the Mutual Film Corporation comes one that tells of a tremendous increase in the activities of Edwin Thanhouser. When he took charge of the plant on his return from Europe a little over six months ago, his task was to produce four reels of negative per week. This he commenced to do without any preliminaries, making the full schedule from the first week that he took charge. Within a short while after he began preparations for the Mutual Masterpiece contribution, and put on another producing company without a second's hesitation in the system of the business. But he was even at that time planning ahead, and in a few weeks he had so shaped matters that further enlargement of his operations would simply mean the pressing of a button here and there. With the recent readjustment in the affairs of the Mutual, Mr. Thanhouser had an opportunity to demonstrate his mastery of producing organization. Up to this moment the output of the studio is just twice what it was a few months ago. The additional Falstaff comedy each week was quickly taken care of with the additions to the acting and directing forces, and the announcement is now made that the Thanhouser brand is to release a three-reel production every third week in addition to the regular output. This brings the total up to eight reels per week.

There are now the following directors at work: Platt, Moore, Sullivan, Ellery, Ward, Mitchell, Clarendon, Howell and Mayo. Another director will be engaged making ten in all. Three of these are comedy directors who have made good and are now producing only for the Falstaff comedy brand, two of which are released weekly. The operation of ten companies has necessitated a corresponding enlargement of the staff. Falstaff brand will now feature Lorraine Huling who will be surrounded by a quartette of fun-makers from the legitimate: Boyd Marshall, Riley Chamberlin, Claude Cooper and Arthur Cunningham. The Thanhouser brand will be supported by Florence La Badie, Mignon Anderson, Grace DeCarlton, Peggy Burke, Harris Gordon, Morris Foster. The entire company in stock now numbers sixty-four, among them being Carey Hastings, Ethel Jewette, Nellie Parker Spaulding, Inda Palmer, Frances Keyes, Ethyle Cook, Justus D. Barnes, Arthur Bauer, Morgan Jones, Bert Delaney, George Marlo, John Lehnberg, Wayne Arey, Ray Johnston, Ernest Howard and Sam Niblack. The juvenile company will be very much in evidence with the Fairbanks Twins, Helen Badgley, Leland Benham and Baby Stuart.

The presentation of legitimate stars, such as William Morris, Winifred Kingston, Julia Blanc, Reginald Barlow and Alphonse Ethier will be the work of such intervals as Mr. Thanhouser might find will be advantageous to the exhibitor.

In these enormous operations Mr. Thanhouser employs a well-nigh infallible scenario system, Lloyd and Phillip Lonergan heading an expert staff. But it is apparent that the Thanhouser resources are not yet taxed to capacity, for Mr. Thanhouser is now casting about for a place which will allow of considerable increase of scope during the winter. On the subject of production on so tremendous a scale, he says:

"My biggest work still remains on the horizon. In the great company with which I have surrounded myself I have all the elements of the systematic production of a consistently good output. It all fits into the same system of operation which I have always used. It means simply an expansion of its boundaries and the engagements of the additional staff to execute the work. My plans for future production embrace an enormous expenditure and the presentation of the best obtainable in stories and talent in a manner that must rival the greatest successes of the speaking stage. I am of the conviction that the time has passed when a producer could prosper notwithstanding a limited purse. Expense must be the third consideration, after story and cast. I propose to follow this policy in the Thanhouser and Falstaff outputs, and a careful survey of the situation tells me that my work will be representative of that of my confreres on the Mutual."

FANIA MARINOFF WILL STAR IN GAUMONT'S FIRST MUTUAL RELEASE

Fania Marinoff was born in Odessa, Russia, some twenty years ago, but all her stage appearances have been made in this country. She made her debut in Denver, and when but a child she played in a stock company performance of "Cyrano de Bergerac," in which Henrietta Crossman played Roxane. Later she toured the United States as leading woman with Max Figman in "The Man on the Box." One of her greatest successes was made as Esther in Hartley Manners' play, "The House Next Door," a part she played for three years. She was in the original cast of "Within the Law" and last season made a notable success in Rubenstein's clever play, "Consequences," and this spring played the part of Louka in Arnold Daly's revival of "Arms and the Man." Her dark beauty has always assured her especial success in Oriental roles, so that her portrayal of a South Sea Island princess in the star feature, "The Unsuspected Isles," will show her to her best advantage.

ALICE INWOOD, ENGLISH ACTRESS, WILL JOIN LINCOLN CYCLE CAST

After an exciting and heroic career in the fields of battle in Southern France, Alice Inwood, daughter of Lord Inwood of England, is now in America after a stormy trip aboard the St. Paul out of Liverpool.

She has come to play an important part in the Lincoln pictures and as such she will become a worthy support to Benjamin Chapin, the eminent Lincoln characterizer. The artistic strength of the cast chosen by the Charter Features is remarkable—each newcomer being a star worthy to sparkle alone.

Miss Inwood has had a rainbow-colored career. The daughter of one of the oldest families of aristocratic Britain, she early found herself drifting toward the arts. Her books have been among the best of their kind to appear in Europe. For instance, "The Hand at the Window" has recently run into its eighth edition, "The Fatal Thirteenth" has just completed its sixth edition, and "The Teeth of a Vampire" is one of the six best sellers across the waters.

Miss Inwood has been in America before and has, in addition, been known to motion picture lovers through her work with Thomas Ince and in the Reliance, Majestic and other motion picture companies.

Previous to the outbreak of the European conflict Miss Inwood scored successes with the Weston Feature Film Company of London as Queen Elizabeth. And in "The Battle of Waterloo" she was the one big outstanding figures. As Ann Hathaway in the "Life of Shakespeare" she made that fine figure of history take on new proportions.

Miss Inwood has had little fear in the many perilous undertakings she has gone through and she has many times dared death to make a thrilling picture. For instance, she has crossed the English Channel in a balloon and almost had her head knocked off in the explosion of a dynamite bomb near her dressing quarters. Then, too, in that masterpiece of European dramatic effects, "The Tragedy of the Alps," she climbed Mt. Blanc, the highest mountain on the continent, when the snows capped the peaks and the mountain slides made the nearby natives tremble.

Recently the English and French press devoted laudatory comments on Miss Inwood's courageous and noble service to the wounded soldiers. One of her most original ideas in connection with her aid to the sufferers was her "egg begging campaign." Rushing around from farm to farm in the rural districts she asked for eggs and it is said that one day alone she collected 8,000 eggs.

She was a familiar and a startling figure to the English farmers as she approached them in her tremendous Rolls-Royce. This car had been built for Gaby Deslys after her own design and its cost was $25,000. When, however, Gaby broke with her dancing partner, Harry Pilcer, for the romantic affair with Sir James Barrie, she was unable to pay and the Rolls-Royce Company found the car, "Peter Pan," on their hands. It was then that Miss Inwood purchased it and this tremendous eight-passenger white and black speeder with "all the comforts of home" attachments first became known to England.

Miss Inwood carries with her a scar of a wound received while in the trenches. But she is proud of it. For it is but another evidence that a great actress and a great authoress can also be a great patriot.

She has always been a lover of Lincoln and her addition to the cast which is playing the Lincoln Cycle is a striking tribute to the artistic intentions of the Charter Features Corporation.

The Cycle has its first release on September 13, "Old Abe," the first production, being all ready for the theaters.

JEFFRIES TO WORK WITH BUSHMAN

Francis X. Bushman, heading the company of Quality players, has departed for Big Bear Valley, where the production of "Pennington's Choice" will take place. Bushman is heading an all star cast composed of Helen Walcott, Roland Farris, Lester Cuneo, and Helen Dunbar.

A feature in connection with this story, that sport fans will be interested in, is the fact that James J. Jeffries, the prize fighter, will be seen in the production to good advantage in a number of training scenes, which will be taken at his camp in the Sierra Madres.

The story is one of the Canadian Northwest, simple yet thrilling to the extent that many unusual and hazardous deeds will be performed. The picture is of five reel length and will be directed by W. J. Bowman.

According to Consul Homer M. Byington of Leeds, England, it is estimated that there is over a million dollars invested in the motion picture business in Leeds. In proportion to the population the city is said to have more motion picture houses than any other in the United Kingdom.

In the Wake of the Selig Special

BY NEIL G. CAWARD

Los Angeles, Cal. Sun. Jul. 18, 1915

Squedunk, Iowa.

Dear Jack:

WELL i and the Missus has seen her and she's just as purty and nice as advertized. Its Kathlyn Williams im writing a bout Jack, but i guess you no that all ready becaus i wrote you last wk. we was going to see her when we got to Los Angeles where the Selig folks have their studio. i even had a chanct to dance with her Jack but you no as how i dont dance so i and she didnt trip the lite fandastic after all.

Gee i and the Missus has seen a lot since i wrote you last wk. After leaving San Diego we got to Los Angeles the next a. m. and was took up to the Clark hotel in auto mobiles what this hear Herb Hoagland hired and paid for so it didnt cost i and the Missus 0. The place was full o elks becaus they been having a convenshun in Los Angeles. i guess you no Jack i mean this hear sekret sciety o elks and not the animal kind, becaus they dont stay at hotels Jack.

Well any way after we got to this hear Clark hotel and had our brekfas and bote some postel kards we took some st. kars and went for a ride. Herb Hoagland he paid for the st. kars so that didnt cost us 0 and we went on what they call the balloon root ride what is moren 30 miles long. We went to the soldiers home and to Santa Monica and to Venice and to Redondo Beech and back again to Venice and etc. We stopt for lunch at this hear Redondo Beech and had lunch at the Kasino there and then went back to Venice where a lot of the party went in swimming in the Ocean, and sum more of them went in swimming in a big pool what they got in a bldg. there but i and the Missus didnt go, becaus what is the use becaus we got a regular bathe tub in our room at the hotel and this is only Fri any way an Sat nite is the time for bathes.

We kum back from Venice in the p. m. and after supper we went for a walk a round Los Angeles what is quite a town being moren 3 times as large as Squedunk with tall bldgs and every thing. Well next a. m. Jack we got a tele fone from this hear Don Meaney what used to live in our town and what is now one of the bosses out to this hear Universal City what you hearn so much a bout. Don he in vited i and the Missus to kum out and see him so we took a st. kar and went out and Don he met us at the corner by the bank and took us in his auto mobile out to this hear Universal City. its a grate place Jack and things is going on all over. i and the Missus seen this hear Francis Ford what is making the broken Koin and Warren Kerrigan and a lot more other actors and actresses what was all working in moshun pitchurs. After Don had showed us the Universal zoo he took us to lunch and then he interduced i and the Missus to Hen McRae what is the boss of the hole of Universal City and to Ford Beebe what is publicity mgr., and a mighty fine feller and to H. B. Caulfield what is bus. mgr., and to C. B. Haenkel what is editor of the cenario dept. and a lot of other good skouts.

Well Jack after weed said howdy do to all of them Don he took us in his auto mobile down to the Reliance Majestic studios and there he left us. i and the Missus went in and met this hear Spec Woods and a feller named E. C. Bidwell he showed us all over the place and we seen em make a lot of moshun pitchurs. 1 of them was 1 what had this hear Fay Tincher in and we met Ed Dillon and Georgie Stone what is a littel boy actor and just be fore we left i was interduced to this hear Dave Griffith what you hearn so much a bout. All of em was awful nice to us and we was glad we went.

Then Jack after weed had a ride on sum more st. kars we come to this hear Selig Zoo what we had kum so far to see. i cant be gin to tell you what a grate place this hear Kurnel Selig has got Jack becaus it is wunderful. Out in front is sum big white gates and in the middel of the gates is sum elefants big as life. i dont mean no real elefants Jack but sum elefants made out of stone and theres pam trees all a round and it looks might purty Jack. This hear Herb Hoagland gave i and the Missus some tikets Jack so as we could get in for 0 and we gave the tikets to the man at the door and went in. off to 1 side is a pen and in side the pen is 2 girafs and they is even biggern what Ring ling bros cirkus has got Jack. Then you walk up a walk and kum to a big low bldg and all a round on the in side of this bldg is animal cages and in the cages is lions and tiggers and lepards and other animals and gee Jack they is just hundreds of them. All over in side the grounds is nice grass growing all a round and flour beds and every thing and Jack it looks just like a big park in sted of being a working place.

Well Kathlyn Williams was there and she shook hands with every body and then she took a baby tigger in her arms and then she had her pitchur taken in moshun pitchurs for this hear 7 Suffern sisters what is the pitchur being made on our trip. And after that Jack i and the Missus walked a round and kum to a place where director Geo. Nicholls was making a moshun pitchur called a man with the Iron hart and we watched him make it, only the man didn't have no iron hart at all. Next to that place director Daly was making a pitchur called neath Calvary's shadow and this hear Fritzi Brunett was the leading woman and i and the Missus was interduced to her.

Tom Persons what is the boss of the hole place was there and he was awful nice to every body and i and the Missus met Martha Mattox what is the old made in the Bloom Center pitchurs, and Marion Warner and Vivien Reed and Frank Wing, who is a grate feller, and Cora Drew what is a famous character woman. Then this hear Littel Olga what is a animal tamer she performed with her animals in a big cage and sum elefants did some cirkus stuff and there was some trained ponies and etc.

And then Jack as though that wasnt enough the Selig co. gave us all a bankwit on the lawn and it was awful good and then they took us all over to a big dance place and there we met all the big Selig stars, Kathlyn Williams and Bessie Eyeton and every body and then every body danced.

As i or the Missus neither one danced we left kinda erly and met Don Meaney and his Missus, who is a awful nice lady and we went out to the home of Vilet McMillan who is a Universal actress and we had a nother dinner at her house and mr Folgers, this hear mr Folger in reel life is Miss McMillan's husband and after a dinner we all got in a auto mobile and went out to the beech and to Nat Goodwins kafay what is a grate big saloon and dance hall rite on the edge of the Ocean. There was hundreds of people there and we had sumthing to drink and then we went to a nother kafay called Baron Longs and there Jack i and the Missus seen this hear Chas. Chaplin, the famous funny feller o the Essanay cO., and he looks just as komical off the stage as he does in the pitchurs. Ford Sterling and sum other keyStone actors was there too and we seen em all.

Next a. m. Jack i and the Missus got up erly and went up this hear mt Lowe. i dont no why they call it mt Lowe becaus its awful high, but any way you ride in a st. kar up and up and then get out and ride up a in cline what goes up 3 thousand ft. rite strait up, and when you get to the top you get off and get on sum more st kars and ride up and up sum more till you are moren 7 thousand ft up and there is a hotel. they got mules there and if you got time you can ride the mules up the mt still further only i and the Missus didnt have no time.

We kum bak thru Pasa Dena and went to the Ostrish farm where they got moren 1 thousand ostrishes and then Jack by the time we had supper it was time to go to the train a gain. i and the Missus is on the way bak now becaus this is as far as we go but i rite you a gain from Salt lake city. How is every thing Jack. Count the money careful and chek it up against the tikets. And Jack dont furget them carbons.

Yours Respy.

TOM TERRISS

Tom Terriss, as a producer of moving picture plays in which he plays the principal roles, bids fair to equal his great success on the speaking stage as a portrayer of roles from Dickens' novels. For the Shuberts he produced Dickens' "Chimes" and "The Mystery of Edwin Drood." The latter play was pronounced by the Moving Picture World as of equal rank with Dante's "Inferno" and "Quo Vadis" in its comprehensiveness and accuracy of detail and in its delicacy of interpretation. Mr. Terriss is now producing and appearing in photoplays in his own company. The Terriss Film Corporation, with studios at Yonkers, N. Y. The plays are released through the exchange offices known as the Picture Playhouse Film Corporation.

Tom Terriss

Not all his life has Mr. Terriss been an actor. From a youth he has been filled with the adventurous spirit and this has led him into many strange lands and varied occupations. With two companions he made the first trip astride a bicycle through Morocco and Algeria to the Sahara Desert. He wrote an interesting book, called "Three Men Awheel Through Algeria," about that experience. He was for awhile a member of the London Stock Exchange.

After leaving the exchange, he took up acting for good and all. Before this he had been on the stage only intermittently. This was his forte. With his wife, Elaine, he toured all over the world, achieving success wherever he played. For the last three years, he has, with the exception of the last few months, devoted his talent to the portrayal of roles from Dickens' stories. His Scrooge in "A Christmas Carol" made him world-famous. Last year he completed a very successful tour of the United States and Canada, playing such diversified parts as Fagin in "Oliver Twist," Sydney Carton in "A Tale of Two Cities," Trotty Veck in "The Chimes" and of course, Scrooge in "A Christmas Carol."

At the end of this tour, Mr. Terriss made an arrangement with the Messrs. Shubert to produce for them in moving pictures some of his most famous characterizations. "The Chimes" and "The Mystery of Edwin Drood" were big hits and made a deal of money. On behalf of his own company Mr. Terriss has already produced four pictures.

MADAME SCHUMANN-HEINK PAYS VISIT TO METRO STUDIOS

Among the many visitors at the Quality Picture Corporation studio in Hollywood, Calif., last week was one of national fame. Madame Schumann-Heink, the world famous opera star, paid a visit to Francis X. Bushman. Madame Schumann-Heink expressed her admiration for the well known film star and the accompanying photograph shows the noted diva and the great film star together at the Hollwood studio.

PATHE TENNIS TOURNAMENT

The Pathe office force is all "het up" over a tennis tournament which has been arranged to take place at Lee Woodruff's courts at Brighton Beach on Saturday, August 28. Mr. Woodruff has generously offered the use of his courts for the occasion, and it is planned to have a swim and dinner after the championship has been decided.

There are twelve entries and it is whispered that several of the boys have got something up their sleeves in the way of real tennis ability. General Manager Gasnier will probably be present to award the prizes, and Pearl White may take her life in her hands and referee.

It is said that in Genoa, Italy, great attention is paid to hygiene and most of the houses advertise the purification of the air by germicidal preparations.

Thoroughness in Production

BY RICHARD STANTON

I CANNOT claim that I have ever had many difficulties to contend with as a director. I have had good camera men, a vital necessity. I have had the advantage of being associated with one of the biggest producers of all time, Thomas Ince, who has backed me up in all my efforts, and I have been supplied with good photoplays and have been allowed to use my own individuality; therefore, I believe that my producing days have been cast in pleasant ways.

Richard Stanton.

I cannot even say that I felt much embarrassment even with my first picture, for I had been at the game a long time as an actor and a student of the photoplay.

My picture experiences go back to the time when I was asked by Mr. Melies to take the part of an Indian chief in a picture at Santa Paula; this was while I was with Kolb and Dill and during one of the periodical "off" seasons. I was vastly amused, but thought it would be great fun just as long as my friends did not hear of it and josh me. I duly played the part and evidently made a hit, for Mr. Melies wanted me to stay on, and already I had become enamored of the open air life.

Rhea Mitchell and Richard Stanton in "The Phantom Extra."

I stayed with the Melies outfit for many months and then met Thomas H. Ince, became associated with him, and have been with him ever since.

For a long time I both acted and directed, but now that the company is making features with stage stars, I am producing only. I have very decided ideas concerning directing, and aim for originality in my photoplays, especially for striking effects, things which compel the attention and fill the eye. In my last play, "Aloha," in which Willard Mack starred, I believe that I obtained some unique camera effects and some gorgeous scenery, and I was fortunate in having such a fine artist as Mr. Mack and also Enid Markey, who has come to the front very rapidly as an actress.

I am a believer, too, in big effects and of working up to a strong and thrilling climax. Anyone who has been associated with Mr. Ince must feel the same way as I do. I have always been very successful with crowds, and it is no secret that I am supposed to possess considerable nerve in collecting numbers of people without much cost to my company. I thoroughly enjoy doing this.

Harry Keenan and Richard Stanton in "The Phantom Extra."

I quite believe that the day of the better photoplay has arrived and that shoddiness and careless directing is passing quickly. The public know now, and the papers have published so much of the inside workings of the studios that they cannot be fooled any more. They want the real thing. This is particularly true in regard to the sets which are used, and mere painted canvas will not pass as it used to do. At Inceville all the scenery is made of solid material, and time is taken in its building, and this is of the greatest help to the director. Then again, only recently the larger studios have made a big clearing out of incompetent actors and actresses, one studio having sent off some fifty people and another forty odd. For perfect success we must have thoroughly competent artists, those who look well on the screen and who know their business. I, for one, am glad to see this come about, for I have prophesied it a long time.

To sum up the present situation in the photoplay, thoroughness is the prevailing note and it means the life of the motion picture.

A director must have the respect and friendship of his artists and I have always tried to keep on the best of terms with the artists working under me and at the same time to maintain my position and this is not a difficult matter. I want people to be on time and to be interested in their work and not forever wanting to get away for something else. We have a splendid stock company here, artists who are really interested and who are capable and it makes the work of a director, hard at best, much easier.

I have been asked how many hours I work a day. I find it hard to answer; it would be easier to say how many hours I work a day and night! This must be so with a conscientious producer who must perforce study out what he has to do for the following day in order to get the best results. I find little time for amusements or for reading of an evening, and that is one reason I live near the ocean; I get the benefit of the bathing and the air and sharp walks along the "front." I seldom feel very tired and believe that anyone can sleep well near the sea. I rest without dreaming and need less sleep than if I lived in a city.

In Italy, which is a great music loving country, great attention is paid to the orchestra which plays in the motion picture houses. In some of the better houses fifteen or twenty musicians furnish music.

PARSONS OF NATIONAL IS ENGAGING PROMINENT STARS

Laying the foundation for a successful enterprise in the production of photoplays takes many angles, one of the most important of which is the selection of capable people to make up the several companies. President "Bill" Parsons of the National Film corporation and Managing Director Bruce Mitchell are paying particular attention to this feature of complete organization of the National, the youngest concern in the motion picture business, and in this respect are building substantially for the future. They are surrounding themselves with some of the best known and most capable actors and actresses in the profession.

The acquisition of Miss Norma Talmadge, "the International Darling," and her sister, Miss Constance Talmadge, is regarded in film circles as a keen stroke of business, but efforts to make National films big assets for the exhibitor did not stop there. Prominent players to support Miss Talmadge have been engaged and others are being added to the force.

Eugene Pallette is among the principals permanently engaged by the National. He is credited with being the cleverest player of crook roles in the motion picture field. He received most of his training under the direction of D. W. Griffith and his principal directors. Mr. Pallette's first work in National films was an Italian crook in "The Scar," a two-reel production, the first work of Director Garcia with the National.

Hazel Buckham is another photoplayer of note to join the National forces. She is one of the best known leading women in pictures, her experience having taken her into many dramatic roles with the Kay Bee, Broncho and the Universal. Miss Buckham has been in pictures four years and has had a legitimate stage experience covering most of her life. Edward Sloman, also a member of National stock, will be best remembered for his work in "The Trey of Hearts," series for the Universal. He has made a reputation as a screen actor, especially in the portrayal of "heavy" characters. Lamar Johnstone has been added to the staff of National leading men, coming from the Selig Los Angeles plant. His work for the screen is well known and admired by fans who appreciate the artistic. Mr. Johnstone will play opposite Miss Buckham in dramatic stories to be produced by William Seiter.

Alan Forrest and Jack Livingston, the first leading men to join the National after the acquisition of Norma Talmadge, are among the best known leading men of the screen and special stories are being prepared to show them at their best. They are now engaged, with Norma Talmadge and Managing Director Bruce Mitchell, in the filming of scenes in "Captivating Mary Carstairs," the first pretentious release to be made by the National.

REMARKABLE LOBBY DISPLAY

On this page is an illustration of the handsome lobby display of the Portola theater, San Francisco. What in this photograph appear to be church windows are really the cardboard cut-outs that are part of the lobby display for the Selig V. L. S. E. production, "The Rosary."

It will be noted that the cut-outs were hung high in the lobby, banked in front by potted plants, and even the beauty of the display as shown in the photograph, taken during day light, was greatly enhanced at night when the electric lights behind the cut-outs were turned on. These cut-outs have transparent colored paper, representing a church window, and the lights filtering through this harmonious display of colors, gave an effect as charming as it was appropriate to this Big Four production.

FIRST SHOWING OF STANDARD; NEW FILMS PLEASE OFFICIALS

More than six weeks ahead with releases, the Combined Photoplay Producers, Inc., of which L. G. B. Erb, J. A. Golden, and H. M. Goetz, are the leading spirits, held the first weekly exhibition of Standard Program pictures in New York for the benefit of the committee empowered to select the productions that will make up the weekly program. This committee is composed of representatives of both the producing group and the Standard Photoplay Distributors, Inc., who look out for the interests of the exchanges.

At the first meeting of the committee of selection, the officials of both the Combined Photoplay Producers, Inc., and the Standard Photoplay Distributors, Inc., were all present with the exception of Al Lichtman, of the latter company, who was on his way East from San Francisco. They were all enthusiastic about the high quality of the pictures examined and the simple manner in which their scheme of selection worked out. The following productions were scheduled for the first week's releases: "Man and the Law," two part Ideal drama; "The Vivisectionist," two part Empress drama; "The Black Statue," single reel Moonstone comedy: "The Law of Nature," two part Pyramid drama; "At Twelve O'clock," two part Rainbow drama; "Trilby," single reel Superba comedy; and the Standard Review, a weekly magazine in one reel of pictures.

SCHMID ON VACATION

Armed to the teeth with essentials for a vacation, such as cigars, cigarettes, citronella oil, a package of celery salt, bathing suit, a trusty canoe blade, etc., Pete "Celery" Schmid, the boy press agent of Bosworth, Inc., departed for regions unknown after a fond look at Longacre Square and particularly the Heidelberg building.

SEERY NEW TRIANGLE MANAGER; BRADFORD GOES TO MINNEAPOLIS

Roie C. Seery, who for some time has been district manager of the Mutual Film Corporation, with headquarters in Chicago, last week severed his connection with that film concern and immediately was chosen to guide the future destinies of the Triangle Film Corporation in Chicago and the middle west.

Mr. Seery is one of the best known exchangemen in the entire film industry, having been connected in some form or other with the film game since 1908, and an exchange manager in Chicago since 1909, besides having been closely affiliated with C. J. Hite during the latter's career and a stockholder in both the Thanhouser Syndicate Film Corporation and the Syndicate Film Corporation. Mr. Seery assumed charge of the Triangle offices the latter part of last week and will be at home to his innumerable exhibitor friends on the thirteenth floor of the Mallers building as soon as the new Triangle offices, in course of preparation there, are completed.

Ralph E. Bradford, who has been Chicago branch manager for the Mutual Film Corporation since May, 1914, severed his connection at the same time as Mr. Seery and on Wednesday, August 18, left for Minneapolis, where he becomes northwest manager for the Triangle Film Corporation. Mr. Bradford has been one of the most popular exchange managers in Chicago, having entered the film game in 1911 as booker for the Majestic Film Exchange when that concern was organized by C. J. Hite. He was born in Bremen, Ohio, in 1885, graduated from the local high school, after a course in the public schools of that city, and later took a business course at Cambridge, Ohio, after which he entered the employ of the Pennsylvania Railroad as clerk to the trainmaster at Cambridge in 1904. While thus engaged Mr. Bradford learned telegraphy and was shortly afterwards appointed an opperator for the Pennsylvania road, serving at several different stations, and in 1906 he became a train dispatcher. A year later he moved to St. Louis where he was in the employ of the Western Union and in 1907 came to Chicago where he served as train dispatcher for the South Side Elevated Roads from 1907 to 1911.

Ralph Bradford.

Mr. Bradford was intimately acquainted with C. J. Hite, since he was born within twelve miles of the city where Mr. Hite originally lived, and came to know the latter intimately when he conducted a business enterprise in Bremen, Mr. Bradford's home town. In 1911 Mr. Hite, who was then establishing the Majestic Film Exchange with Roie C. Seery as its manager, suggested to Mr. Bradford that he enter the film business and become booker of the new exchange, an offer which Mr. Bradford accepted. When the Majestic Exchange was absorbed by the Mutual Film Corporation, both Mr. Seery and Mr. Bradford were transferred to the Mutual offices and in May of 1914 Mr. Bradford succeeded Adolph Eisner as manager of the Chicago office, a position which he held until last week, becoming exceedingly popular with the Chicago exhibitors and one of the best liked and most capable of the local exchangemen.

Mr. Bradford is vice-president of the Reel Fellows Club of Chicago and numbers his friends by the hundreds. All of them will unite with MOTOGRAPHY in wishing him the best of success in his new location in Minneapolis, feeling sure that he will make good with a capital "G."

FAMOUS PLAYERS SIGNS MARSHAL NEILAN ON A LONG CONTRACT

The Famous Players Film Company, in many of whose recent productions he has appeared to advantage, has now secured the permanent services of the popular leading man, Marshal Neilan, who within a comparatively short time after his entrance into the motion picture field has risen to an estimable place in the ranks of film favorites.

Mr. Neilan has been presented by the Famous Players in conspicuous and leading roles in "The Love Route," "May Blossom," "Rags," in which his capable support of Miss Pickford was favorably noted by all the trade-paper critics in their reviews of this subject, and in a forthcoming Pickford production, "A Girl of Yesterday," will be again seen in a similarly important part. Mr. Neilan also played the title role in one of the early Lasky productions on the Paramount program, "The Country Boy." In all of these various plays he has displayed a fine dramatic sense, strong personal force, and that other essential of screen acting—magnetism.

The consistent approbation with which his previous appearances in the Famous Players' releases have met throughout the country has now induced this concern to place him under permanent contract. His past experience, comprising, as it does, every element of dramatic work, ranging from stock to support of Broadway favorites, enables him to undertake with an adequate measure of ability, any screen role, however difficult. When added to this, his youth and photographic attractiveness are considered, it may be reasonably assumed that Mr. Neilan will be conceded a valuable acquisition to the regular organization of the Famous Players Film Company.

HARRY SPINGLER LEAVES FOX TO JOIN IMP UNIVERSAL BRAND

Harry Spingler, who during the past ten months has created the leading juvenile roles in "The Plunderer," "A Gilded Fool," "Samson," "The Idler," "From the Valley of the Missing" and "The Thief," all sponsored by the Fox Film Corporation, has severed his connections with that concern and will in the future be seen as leading man in features released under the Imp-Universal brand. Mr. Spingler will be directed by Ben Wilson.

GAUMONT GETS "SILENT BILL" HADDOCK

"Silent Bill," as he is familiarly known, has closed a contract with Gaumont and will direct feature productions for that company. He has had much experience in feature plays and will find himself at home in the Flushing Studio where he has already commenced work.

ANOTHER NEW LUBIN DIRECTOR

Lubin of Philadelphia announces the engagement of Edward McKim, who was identified with various different companies, and whose last play, "The Confession," in five acts, was filmed by him in the record breaking time of twelve days and scored an instantaneous success.

Edward McKim

Mr. McKim was born in Pittsburgh, and made his professional entrance on the speaking stage as Philistus in "Damon and Pythias." His success on the speaking stage was such that soon he became leading man for Mary Wainwright and made a tour of the country in Shakespeare's "Twelfth Night."

After being leading man in various plays, especially leading man in "The Man of the Hour," Mr. McKim turned his attention to the direction of photoplays, and succeeded in making an enviable record for himself. At Lubin's he makes a specialty of comedies, but not of the "slapstick" kind.

Before the war, films were obtained from the great supply houses of Europe and United States for the cities of Italy, but now Italian producers are turning out a large number of very excellent films.

MOROSCO STUDIO ENJOYING A THOROUGH HOUSECLEANING

The Oliver Morosco studio is behind the bars this week. In other words, its handsome concrete walls are encased in an open-work scaffolding while a large force of masons add still further to its charm by glazing it with a snow-white cement. The effect under the bright California sun is dazzling, and can be seen for miles. The plant is more than living up to its reputation: "The prize studio of Los Angeles."

While this beautification is going on without it is also to be decorated throughout within. Next week the entire laboratory force goes on a week's vacation, and during their absence the studio will be holystoned, massaged, manicured and painted from the highest point of the scene dock to the lowliest lath in the drying room drums.

With Earl Olin's men rushing the large new storehouse through, the Oliver Morosco establishment in its new dress will have the bustling, gala appearance of a boom-town in the old days.

"OPTIGRAPH" WINS GOLD MEDAL AT SAN FRANCISCO EXPOSITION

On Thursday, August 12, the Optigraph portable motion picture projector carried off the honors at the Panama-Pacific Exposition by being awarded the gold medal.

This remarkable little machine is without a doubt one of the most practical portable motion picture projectors ever displayed. In this machine the trade recognizes a long-looked-for medium through which the educational and commercial fields will reap immeasurable gains. The Optigraph has been on the market for the past eleven years and there are literally thousands of these machines in use today; but the 1916 model Optigraph is so far in advance of any of the other models that there is practically no comparison. It has also been approved by the National Board of Fire Underwriters for use in the home, church, school, hall and office. The Optigraph Company, Chicago, Ill., is the sole manufacturer of these machines.

"BIRTH OF A NATION" PASSES FOUR HUNDREDTH PRESENTATION

With the passing of the old theatrical season last week, D. W. Griffith's great spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," established the year's record for continued performances. On Friday night the four hundredth presentation in New York City was reached.

The new season starts this week with the big production remaining one of the most talked of attractions on the list. This starts the twenty-seventh week of the engagement at the Liberty theater. There are so many elements of appeal in Griffith's epical treatment of the subject that it looks as if it will establish the record for all offerings in New York before its run is terminated.

Starring Harry Mestayer, Kathryn Williams and Tyrone Power, the Selig Company will soon begin work on the second greatest and most expensive pictures ever attempted in the production of "The Crisis." More than $100,000 will be spent on this film masterpiece.

Equitable Ready for its Debut

ITS SUCCESS SEEMS ASSURED

OF THE army of new entrants into the realm of filmdom, one of the most serious is undoubtedly the newly formed and already active Equitable Pictures Corporation, closely allied with the World Film enterprise and so grimly determined, that ere the forthcoming week has waned, an announcement is promised that will be both startling in its inception and broad in the vogue it will create.

Felix F. Feist, perhaps best known from his favorable work at the head of an important Chicago film exchange, is general manager of the new Equitable, and an harmonious affiliation of ideas, conjunctional belief in the future of the film industry and deep mutual admiration and respect for each other's accomplishments and ability, link Feist and Lewis J. Selznick together in what will prove to be tremendous efforts, if the plans of the organization materialize as intended.

The Equitable Pictures Corporation, now in the seventh week of its actual existence, is following a plan heretofore unattempted in the history of this new and uncertain science. The Equitable, before one release sees the light of screen day, will have in its possession ten pictures of which there can be no uncertainty of quality and calibre. Six directors, men of tradition in the trade and men whose work has created places for them in an overtrodden field, have been actively engaged in productional activities for the past seven weeks and will continue for the forthcoming five weeks, and the result of their efforts, if their efforts reach the standard Equitable has set itself, will then reach the market.

There will be no costly and heart breaking "failures" released owing to the lack of releasing material. There will be a sufficiently large supply of pictures on hand to constitute the first eight releases, ere one picture is sent through the wide channels of the mother company, the World Film Corporation.

Four of the first ten pictures to be released have already been selected by the examining board of the Equitable. The initial release, although unseen as yet by the trade reviewers, is said to be a magnificent production of "Trilby" with a powerful combination of noted players, headed by the distinguished actor, Wilton Lackaye, and the queenly Clara Kimball Young, and having in support a cast of players, unsurpassed in point of histrionic ability.

"Trilby" will be released September 21 and then will come the work of Ince, Seay, Cullison, Golden, and McNamara.

Among the directors already at work and completing or having completed their first efforts are John Ince, of the famous Ince trio and lately one of the shining luminaries of the Lubin forces; Webster Cullison, who, on the sands of the Arizona desert, is grinding slowly toward the completion of "The Bludgeon," in which Kathryn Osterman will be seen; Joseph Golden, a pioneer producer whose rise in filmdom marks every milestone from property man, salesman, director, executive, manager and film deliverer, and who is known to men throughout the trade for his long and ardent attention to production with Edison, where his greatest works still stand as monuments of keen efficiency, and Walter McNamara, whose "Traffic in Souls" and "Ireland a Nation," attracted such widespread attention, now busily engaged on "Human Cargoes" for Equitable.

Beloved by all and heading, to the minutest detail, the every productional effort of Equitable, comes Isidor Bernstein, creator of Universal City, maker of empires and dealer in system and efficiency on a wholesale scale. Mr. Bernstein will be directing genius of the Equitable and while his specific duties are manifold, the exhibitor who contemplates dealing with Equitable can rest assured Isidor Bernstein will be present, in spirit, on every screen showing an Equitable product.

The executive staff of the Equitable Corporation boasts a number of men of precedent in filmdom and commerce.

Arthur H. Speigel, whose flourishing merchandising plants through the middle west denote him a man of acumen, success and more than a fair share of judgment, is the guiding spirit at Equitable and shares the suite of General Manager Felix F. Feist.

The entire exploitation department is in the hands of Harry L. Reichenbach, whose method of aiding exhibitors and exploiting features in the manner most beneficial for the buyer of films, was so effective while with the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company and the Metro Pictures Corporation, that this method is standard now throughout the country. Mr. Reichenbach will install, at the Equitable offices, one of the most far reaching systems of dissemination ever attempted by a producing and distributing company.

Among the principal features to be innovated by Equitable, is the idea, developed by Mr. Feist and Mr. Selznick, of using the leverage of local exhibitors' advertising to aid the exhibitor, without expense or trouble to the exhibitor. This system has been used to advantage by several large national advertisers and will be adopted just prior to the first Equitable release.

Not one dollar of Equitable money will be squandered in publications with waste circulation. The hundreds of thousands of dollars required to conduct a campaign in the Saturday Evening Post and other periodicals, outside of the recognized motion picture trade papers, will be turned into screen value and absolute direct aids to the individual exhibitor.

The news service will begin within the week and the money saved on this direct method will, according to General Manager Feist, be guided into local channels with immediate results to any exhibitor on the regular Equitable roster.

TURNER AND DAHNKEN OF FRISCO BUILDING NEW PICTURE THEATER

The Turner and Dahnken Circuit of San Francisco has just completed arrangements for the immediate erection of a new theater in Oakland, to take the place of the Oakland Photo-Play, on which the lease will expire at an early date.

A lease for 15 years has been secured on the property of the James K. Moffitt estate, southwest corner of Eleventh and Franklin streets, the lot being 100 feet on Franklin, and 175 feet on Eleventh street.

For months, this concern has been negotiating for a site at Fourteenth and Franklin, and the change to the location secured came as a great surprise.

Plans for a high-class motion picture theater are being prepared in the offices of Cunningham and Politeo, the architects who designed the Imperial and Alcazar theaters in San Francisco.

This house will be the largest and most modern on the Pacific Coast, with a seating capacity of 4,000.

There will be but one balcony and no stairs, the balcony to be reached by inclined planes only. Between the main floor and the balcony a large mezzanine floor is to be arranged with reception rooms for ladies and gentlemen, ladies' dressing room, men's smoking room and a nursery.

The theater will be constructed exclusively for moving pictures, the stages and flies being eliminated. An organ that will cost not less than $25,000 will be installed, and the house will be built to accommodate this instrument.

The operating room will be a model, built on the lower floor, thus giving a straight throw to the screen.

The interior will be most modern, with special attention paid to the lighting, heating and ventilating systems. Fresh air will be brought from above, cleansed and warmed and completely changed twelve times an hour.

The foyers and lobby will be entirely of marble and tile. An innovation here will be checkrooms where hats, coats or bundles may be checked free.

The auditorium will be wider in the rear than it is in front, thus affording an unobstructed view of the screen from every seat and facilitating the planning of the aisles. The aisles will be bordered with white tile through which light will shine in sufficient intensity to enable patrons to see their way.

The exterior is designed in modern art and reflects to a marked degree the influences of the Panama-Pacific Exposition in architecture. The front will be illuminated by indirect lights, producing a soft effect that will enhance the beauty of the designs and colors employed.

FIVE STRONG V.L.S.E. FEATURES ON THE SEPTEMBER SCHEDULE

For release during the month of September, the V. L. S. E. has so far scheduled five productions, three five-reel subjects and two six-reel features. These five subjects form a perfectly balanced program in which will be seen a galaxy of stars, including Marie Dressler, Robert Edeson, Richard C. Travers, Stella Razeto, Guy Oliver and Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew.

The first release of the month will be Robert Edeson in "Mortmain," a five-part Blue Ribbon feature, that will go into screen evidence on September 6. "Mortmain" is an intensely tragic drama, that is as sensational as it is unique and weird. The story evolves about the researches of modern surgeons, and in its production, the Vitagraph Company called to its aid, many noted medical men in order to secure an atmosphere of perfect realism.

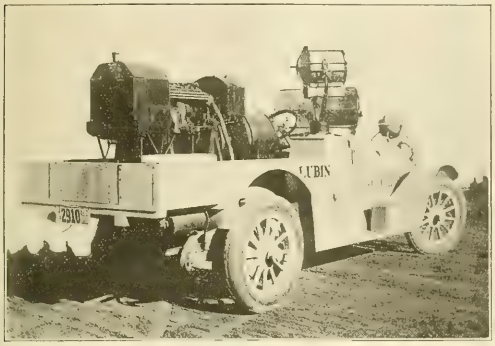
Mr. Edeson, who plays the title role, will be seen in one of the strongest parts he has ever created. The character is that of a man who, through an accident, loses one of his hands. The hand of another man is grafted in its place, and it later develops that the hand in question is that of a murderer. This fact and other contributing circumstantial evidence, make a play of powerful dramatic quality.

On September 13, the Essanay Company will release the six-part feature, "The Man Trail," in which Richard C. Travers plays the leading role. "The Man Trail" is a story of the lumbering camps, and the principal scenes were taken in the lumber country in Tennessee. This fact gives to the production all the necessary local color demanded of a play of this type. The story from which the production was adapted, appeared in serial form in Adventure Magazine, and was selected by the Essanay Company for production, because of the exceptional possibilities it offers for screen production. The play deals with that interesting rugged life of the woods, and illustrates the adventures of a city bred man in the crude life of the logging camps.

The Selig Company's contribution that will be released September 20, is a six-part visualization of Anna Katherine Green's celebrated novel, "A Circular Staircase," in which Stella Razeto and Guy Oliver will be presented.

The Selig subject is reported to be one of the strongest picture plays of this kind the Big Four has yet released. The novel from which it was adapted enjoyed the greatest success and is still a big seller. This, like the other Anna Katherine Green stories, has lent itself readily to the requirements of motion picture production. It is a strong story, full of that heart interest so necessary to arouse the sustained, undivided attention of picture patrons.

On September 20, the second Blue Ribbon feature of the month will be released. This is a five-part production, "Playing Dead," in which Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew will make their first appearance on the V. L. S. E. program. It is a comedy-drama of the type that has endeared the Drews to picture play patrons.



On September 27, Marie Dressler in "Tillie's Tomato Surprise," is scheduled for release by the Lubin Company. The Big Four had intended to release this production in August, but in response to the many requests received from exhibitors all over the country, to the effect that the August program of the V. L. S. E. was of such strength that this feature could be postponed until the following month, it was decided to hold the production for September release. Exhibitors have stated that they look for this Dressler comedy to be a smashing big success, and according to reports from the Lubin studio, Miss Dressler has given to the camera the greatest comedy of her career.

It is possible that the productions so far scheduled may be increased by the addition of another Liberty Bell feature; but this has not as yet been definitely decided.

LUBIN HAS A NEW ASSET— PORTABLE LIGHTING PLANT

For the first time in history an independent traveling power plant complete has been built by Lubin for the purpose of taking moving pictures at night. The plant is mounted on a big Mitchell motor car, making it possible to take his entire lighting system anywhere that an automobile can travel, with a cable of two thousand feet, which makes it possible to get into places which have heretofore been considered impossible. The generator has a special switchboard on which the different lines or circuits can be run in place where artificial light is required for photoplay work. The plant is also equipped with a thirteen-inch navy searchlight, projector type, which can be used in connection with the other lights when necessary.

Lubin's portable lighting plant.

This searchlight is mounted at the right of the driver so that it can be operated without leaving the seat of the car, either while the car is in motion or on a stand. The capacity of this searchlight is 4,500,000 candle power and when in operation requires twenty-five per cent of the capacity of the plant to operate the same.

The first big picture in which this plant will be used to great advantage will be "The Great Divide," which the Lubin Company will have Romaine Fielding produce. This will be one of the biggest features ever attempted. A part of it will be taken in and around Phoenix and the remainder in the Grand Canyon of Arizona.

MARY PICKFORD COMBINES PATHOS AND HUMOR IN "THE FOUNDLING"

Quite inexhaustible, it appears, is the peculiar artistic faculty of Mary Pickford for creating characters that are idealized and yet wholly true to life. In rapid and uninterrupted succession, this inimitable star has provided a series of individually distinctive and collectively astonishing film successes. Following her triumphant appearances in "The Dawn of a Tomorrow" and "Rags," Miss Pickford will next be presented in another unusual role, as "The Foundling," the Famous Players' release on the Paramount program September 6.

"The Foundling" is a characterization of tender appeal and wistful pathos. Miss Pickford's masterly ability to melt pathos with humor is strikingly displayed throughout this entire five-part feature. She plays so effectively on the heart-strings of her spectators that the smile and tear pursue each other constantly. A capable cast, including Frank Mills, Harry Ham, Gertrude Norman, Donald Crisp, and Edith Chapman, renders the star adequate support.

Essanay has an unusually strong list of releases for the next month, most of the photoplays having been written by authors of national prominence. Perhaps the most noted is the three-act comedy-drama, "The Woman Hater," written by the well-known Chicago and Washington society leader and literateur, Hobart C. Chatfield-Taylor, author of "The Crimson Wing."

MILDRED HARRIS

"Motion picture acting is my life's work. That is why I take it so seriously, the same as one seeking success in any other profession would do. Regardless of the importance of the part I am playing or rehearsing, every ounce of energy I possess is put into it. I am never idle—one cannot afford to be in my calling. When not at work in the studio I study, study, study. It is the greatest recipe for success I know of."

Mildred Harris

So spoke Mildred Harris, charming young actress of the Reliance and Majestic studios, who, despite her youth, enjoys a distinct reputation as a screen player, and whose numerous appearances in photo-dramas have been acclaimed by millions throughout the two hemispheres.

Mildred was born in Cheyenne, Wyo., November 29th, 1901, and at ten secured her first position as a screen player with the western Vitagraph company, playing important parts in several successful productions. A year later she joined the forces of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, scoring successes in numerous Kay Bee and Broncho pictures.

Then followed a short engagement with the Oz Film Company, where Miss Harris won universal approval for her work in Frank Baum's fairy tale, "The Scarecrow." From the Oz, this dainty little actress entered the Hollywood studios, where she has appeared in a countless number of Reliance and Majestic productions.

PRESIDENT FREULER TALKS OF MUTUAL'S DEBT TO EXHIBITORS

"Millions of dollars are invested in the small motion picture theaters of the United States by men confiding in the business, present and future.

"The makers and distributers of films owe these men a distinct debt of service."

On this text President Freuler of the Mutual Film Corporation this week discussed Mutual policy and its expression in the new $8,000,000 Mutual program. He has interesting and significant views on the use of features and the feature picture market.

"The Mutual Film Corporation has set itself the task of making the millions that the theater owners have invested earn a fitting progfit," said Mr. Freuler. "We might well call the Mutual's big program investment of $8,000,000 for the year a 'profit insurance.'

"These exhibitor investors have put in their money in the honest expectation that they would get a dependable supply of film and the hope that the film furnished would be of a quality to insure a healthy business and a good profit.

"Our program, 'the new $8,000,000 Mutual Program,' is to fit into the fourteen or fifteen thousand motion picture theaters that need our assistance and need it badly.

"There has been a tendency for programs to stay on one level and not a very high level.

"The exhibitor searching after quality went to buying features he could not afford—features on which he did not make a profit more than one time in five. He has been paying big prices in the feature chase after quality, frequently paying as much for one feature as for a week's service in the regular program.

"I have so often seen the typical experience. The exhibitor used to say, 'I can't afford it. Here's all those high priced features coming along. I'll have to have them and I can't afford them. I'll lose money if I book them and I'll lose business if I don't.'

"The answer to the exhibitor's perplexing problem is the new, better, stronger Mutual program. To get feature quality it has been necessary to build the new program on the same talking points as those which sold him the over expensive features that betrayed him into the loss of profits. It has been necessary to bring into the program the real quality the exhibitor recognized as necessary, but out of his reach except at prohibitive cost. There you have the reason for the Mutual's new all-star, all-feature program, a film service giving the exhibitor Broadway stars, wonderful two and three-reel productions, sparkling comedies, compelling, gripping dramas, a snappy weekly news pictorial, a split-reel carrying a cartoon comic from the pen of a famous newspaper artist, and industrial, educational and scenic subjects—a well balanced program 'diet' for the fans, something for the exhibitor to shout about."

AARON GOLLOS TO FILM ELGIN AUTOMOBILE RACES

The exclusive right to film the annual Elgin Road Races, to be held at Elgin, Ill., on Friday and Saturday, August 20 and 21, has been secured by President Aaron M. Gollos, of the Photoplay Releasing Company, Mallers Building, Chicago, Ill. These road races, as the film world well knows, are annually participated in by some of the greatest automobile racing drivers the country knows, among them being the winners of the Vanderbilt races, the stars of the Chicago Speedway, as well as the drivers who took part in the Omaha, Des Moines and other speedway contests.

Mr. Gollos has been positively assured that every precaution will be taken to see that the exclusive right granted him to film these races is carefully guarded, and exceptional precautions are being taken to prevent other cameras getting anywhere near the race course. From the success which Mr. Gollos had with his Chicago Speedway pictures, their remarkable photography and thoroughly interesting nature, it seems safe to predict that the Elgin Road Races will be one of the most attractive topical films ever offered the public and undoubtedly Mr. Gollos will receive offers from state rights buyers all over the United States, once it is known he will handle the film.

CHARTER FEATURES EXPLAINS NATURE OF LINCOLN CYCLE

The Charter Features Corporation, of 110 West Fortieth street, New York City, which is promoting the Cycle of Lincoln Photoplays, has issued for the confidential reading of its associates in both the exchange and exhibition end of the industry, a twenty-four page pamphlet which it terms "A Blueprint of Activities," and which, in the opinion of all who have seen it, is one of the most tasty, well arranged and comprehensive bits of literature devoted to the life and career of Abraham Lincoln, America's martyr president, that has ever been printed. Typographically this bulletin is perfect and the matter contained within it will interest everyone in the life and career of the great emancipator who was assassinated just as the Civil War was brought to a close. In referring to its Cycle of Lincoln Photodramas, the Charter Features Corporation points out that in the making of this Cycle capital and brains have joined hands (for the best of ideas must be developed with money) and instead of hastily slapped-together spectacular productions that mean little more than any other big features, the Charter Features Corporation has evolved a series of big features centering around the strong dramatic moments in the life of President Lincoln. After explaining the serial idea of motion picture production, as illustrated by such a serial as "The Goddess;" the series idea in production as illustrated by the "Who Pays" series; the production of stock plays as illustrated by some of the Famous Players offerings, and the making of single feature productions such as "Cabiria," it is explained that the Cycle is something entirely different and may perhaps be described as a succession of multiple reel features of individuality, utterly independent in appeal and yet which fit into the unity and comprehensiveness of the whole. The Cycle will consist of a series of productions, each four to nine reels in length, and yet each a distinct play of individual big feature proportions, making up a unit of the whole cycle.

Benjamin Chapin.

As the trade well knows Benjamin Chapin, who has dedicated his life to the portrayal of Lincoln, whom he closely resembles, has been engaged by the Charter Features Corporation to enact the role of Lincoln in this Cycle of Photodramas. Though there are over 350 actors who have tried to play Lincoln on the stage and innumerable hundreds who have impersonated him in vaudeville and on the platform, Benjamin Chapin remains the only man who has achieved marked success in any and all of these fields. With him it has been a work of love, for it is for the good he could do and the doctrines he could spread that he portrayed Lincoln, and during the score of years he has been presenting the character Chapin has been called time and again before the leading universities to lecture on Lincoln, and his interpretation of the character has been endorsed by such celebrities as Mark Twain, General Frederick Grant, son of U. S. Grant; John Hay, who was Lincoln's private secretary, and innumerable others who intimately knew the great emancipator.

The first production of the Cycle of Lincoln Plays is entitled "Old Abe," and will be released to theaters the country over early in September.

MISS FARRAR'S PROTEGE OFFERED RARE OPPORTUNITY

Geraldine Farrar, prima donna of the Metropolitan Opera company, who has been at the studios of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Co., at Hollywood, Cal., all summer appearing in "Carmen" and other productions before the camera, will leave a rare remembrance when she starts back east again. This memento of her first visit to the Lasky studios will be a living one—none other, in fact, than little Miss Marjorie Daw, a fourteen year old girl who looks forward to the prospect of a life engagement with the Lasky Company.

Geraldine Farrar and Margery Daw.

Miss Farrar says her little protegee has within her that spark of dramatic genius which tends towards the making of a great actress, and has recommended Miss Daw so strongly and urged her case so persistently that at the very first opportunity, Miss Daw was given one of the leading roles in a Lasky production and her work more than pleased the prima donna and the executives of the company.

The little miss is Marguerite House but better known at the motion picture studios by her adopted name, Marjorie Daw. Miss Farrar noticed Marjorie on the stage of the studio in Hollywood, and was attracted by her beauty and simple unaffected girlishness. Later the diva saw the child in a scene before the camera and called her to the attention of Jesse Lasky, Samuel Goldfish and Cecil B. De Mille, the heads of the motion picture concern, with the result that Marjorie Daw was given an important part in "Out of Darkness," a big feature production in which Charlotte Walker is the star and which will be released September 9.

According to Consul General J. E. Jones of Genoa, Italy, motion pictures are well advertised all over the kingdom. Since the war began some of the managers show daily position of the various armies by the aid of a map and tiny flags. This method of advertising attracts many people to the motion picture houses.

"RIALTO" AND "CLIPPER" CHOSEN AS NEW MUTUAL BRAND NAMES

"Rialto Star Features" and "Clipper Star Features" are two brand new brand names on the Mutual's brand new $8,000,000 program.

The Rialto brand is the appellation chosen for the three-reel Broadway star features produced by the Gaumont Company for release on the Mutual's regular program. This new name puts an end to the fuss over the "Knickerbocker Star Features" brand. "Rialto" occurred to the Mutual chiefs as a happy thought after much prayerful consideration. It is calculated to carry all the atmosphere of Broadway with it and to breathe a perfume of class around it.

"Clipper Star Features" will be the name for the three-reel releases of the same high quality made by the American Film Manufacturing Company, Inc.

The first release under the Rialto brand will be "The Unsuspected Isles" with Fania Marinoff, famous Broadway star, as the lead. This star three reeler will be released on the regular program to Mutual exhibitors September 8, and without extra rental charge. It is an expression of the new Mutual policy of an all-feature program, as announced by President John R. Freuler.

Particular significance is attached to this release under the Rialto brand because of the condensed quality offering. So many features which could more artistically be presented in less are padded to four reels. The sponsors of the Rialto brand promise a meaty, virile three-reel feature, every reel and every scene full of dramatic potency.

Next on the list of three reelers will come "Shorty's Ranch," a Broncho release with enough thrill in it to entertain even the most jaded film fan's appetite. It will be released September 15.

Then comes a "Clipper," in "The Great Question," produced by the American Film Corporation for the new Mutual program. In "The Great Question," Harold Lockwood and Mae Allison are starred. This is the first time such a prominent star as Harold Lockwood has appeared in a three-reel production.

BLANCHE RING WILL STAR IN FILM VERSION OF "THE YANKEE GIRL"

Following the announcement involving the acquisition of Blanche Ring, the well known theatrical star, for the screen by Oliver Morosco, it is stated that the vehicle selected for Miss Ring to make her motion picture debut is "The Yankee Girl," in which play she scored a big success on Broadway and throughout the country.

In the title character as Jessie Gordon, Miss Ring appeared in "The Yankee Girl" during the latter part of 1901 and played the same part at the Herald Square theater, New York, opening in February, 1910. After registering one of the biggest hits of the season at the Herald Square, the star again started a tour of the country in this piece, meeting with popular favor wherever presented.

"The Yankee Girl" was one of Miss Ring's biggest successes on the legitimate stage and because of its particular adaptability for the screen, experts have agreed that it will be equally popular as a photoplay. The subject affords the star real opportunities to display the reason for her prominence in the theatrical world and will be produced on a lavish scale, in order to give her the proper settings.

The Question of Efficiency in the Studio

EVERY big business, sooner or later, gets around to the subject of efficiency. In spite of our American extravagance, we have a thrifty instinct. If that wasn't true we wouldn't have the money to be extravagant with. Whenever we see overhead expense mounting to the skies, even if we have no trouble in taking care of it, we begin to fuss. We imagine we could get the same results with half the expense, if we had time to study the situation. Not having time, we hire an efficiency expert.

There is a lot of waste in a big motion picture studio. Most efficiency experts would call it a stupendous waste, a calamitous, destructive waste. There is a waste of negative film that totals a respectable sum in a year; but it is the waste of time that is most impressive. The things that are done over and over again before they are right; the things that are done and never used; the time that is spent in doing nothing, just waiting—these would drive an efficiency advocate to apoplexy.

Those efficiency experts are beginning to cast covetous eyes at the motion picture business. They see what they take to be a wonderful field for their services—a virgin territory for their occupation. Soon they will be swarming down on the producers' studios like a bunch of old-fashioned housewives on a bachelors' tenement.

And they are persuasive talkers, these efficiency men. They can convince you in ten minutes that the money they can save you will amount to more than your earnings. They could show any big film manufacturer that he was throwing away a million dollars a year, more or less. More than that, they could demonstrate—on paper—that they, personally, could save him all this discarded value with a dose of SYSTEM.

Now, in arguing along this line to business men in a good many kinds of industry, the efficiency men would be absolutely right—or at least right less a discount for the exaggeration of enthusiasm. But the motion picture business, the studio end of it anyway, is something else.

We do not mean to say that the average motion picture studio might not respond to a vigorous application of system. Rather we think it would. Probably there is a good opportunity there for really remunerative work.

But the man who does that work, the efficiency expert who is turned loose in the studio, MUST BE A MOTION PICTURE MAN. The fellow who has reduced costs seventy per cent in a boiler factory and fifty per cent in a bicycle shop and thirty per cent in an insurance office will not do. His talk may be convincing; but trust him not. Oh, he can reduce costs, all right. There isn't any limit short of a hundred per cent to the amount he can cut off the expense sheet. But unless he is himself a producer of experience he will play more hob with the product of the studio than an intoxicated camera man.

Motion picture production is a purely commercial proposition — OUTSIDE THE STUDIO. Commercialism INSIDE the studio is fatal. Make Gabrielle d'Annunzio punch a time clock and pay him by the hour; install an accounting system in Sarah Bernhardt's boudoir; turn a business systematizer loose in a picture studio. There you make dynamic the ever latent antipathy and antagonism between art and business.

The studio's improvement in commercial efficiency will come, if at all, through a slowing down rather than a speeding up process. It will come through greater care and forethought, a more thorough advance analysis of the work to be done, a more accurate canvass of the necessary properties and scenes and business. It will not come through the revolutionary experiments of the accredited efficiency engineer.

A good part of the present studio waste is imaginary. The effort is not really wasted at all. All the discarded negative and rejected rehearsals merely signify that the producer is making the best film he can. He might easily cut fifty per cent, perhaps, from the cost of this repetitive process. But in doing so he would cut at least twenty-five per cent from the quality of the film.

In any other business no doubt the efficiency expert is a good thing. In this business put the problem up to the director and let him work it out his own way without interference or argument.

MOTION PICTURES AND EYE STRAIN

THAT old, old complaint about motion pictures causing eyestrain cropped up again last week and was once more laid to rest. A young man wrote to Dr. W. A. Evans, health editor of the Chicago Tribune, saying that after attending a picture show he noticed a dull pain in the back of his head and seemed to feel an eye strain. He asks if there is something the matter with him or if the trouble is with the pictures.

In part Dr. Evans writes: When motion pictures first began to grip the people the eye specialists were certain that they would ruin the people's eyes. The flicker, the rapid jerking, and the bright shine did present an ominous combination. Then there was the use of one sense, the sight, as a line of approach to the brain, instead of sight and hearing, as in the ordinary theatrical production. Finally, the presentation of a picture play with an involved plot causes the persons in the audience to concentrate their minds closely, to watch closely, and to see quickly. The old slapstick plays were easy. The plays at present in vogue are trying on the concentration.

Everybody goes to the pictures. Everybody has the habit and has had it for years. The boys who get a headache from it are the exceptions.

What is the reason? A man with good eyes or with properly fitted glasses does not get a headache when he looks out of a car window. Objects appear to move rapidly, to jerk and jump. The lights change rapidly and violently.

A man watching a moving crowd does not get a headache if his eyes are good or his glasses fit. Objects are moving in and out of focus constantly. The eye does not try to change its focus for every jiggle on the screen any more than it tries to focus on every object out of a car window or on every man in a street crowd. Never under any ordinary circumstances of ordinary vision is the image on the eye mirror limited to the one sharply focused object on which attention is centered. In addition to the one well-focused image there are always out of focus images of other objects.

Having been accustomed to this, the eyes refuse to overstrain themselves on moving pictures. However, if the eyes are not right, or if the glasses do not fit, the pictures do cause eye strain. Conversely, if the pictures cause eye strain, then the eyes should be tested.

One of this week's press sheets informs us that individual stenographers have been engaged for each of the Keystone scenario writing staff. That helps, in a measure, to explain where the comedy originates, we suspect.

Perhaps, though, some of those stenos are not as comical as ours.

Still, it is doubtful if there's a single steno alive who doesn't at some time or another, hand her boss a good laugh.

Over on the sixth floor of the Mallers building, in Chicago, a gang of workmen began this week tearing out a partition and arranging two new rooms for what is alleged to be the new film storage quarters and shipping room of the Pathe Exchange.

The same day a little bird whispered in our ear that Vic Hoddup, the Pathe manager, had a raise.

Putting two and two together it's easy to figure out that the new quarters aren't a film storage and shipping room at all, but a place for Vic to store his money.

If this lad keeps on rustling business and getting raises we suspect they'll have to change the name of the Mallers building to Hoddup's Hangout.

HOME RUN MARY!

In that galaxy of stars published in the last issue of Motography in which the various photoplayers were shown specially posed for the various sports and games in which they are to participate on the day of the big Field Meet at Brighton Beach, we carefully omitted the one of Mary Fuller shown at the left. And there was a mighty good reason. Just lamp the way Mary holds her racket, and then tell us whether she's trying to hammer out a home run, drive a nail or swat a fly. We've seen a lot of tennis stars at play, but never one who held his racket as Mary does. Perhaps, though, it's a new system, positively guaranteed to secure hits off the pitching of even a Walter Johnson, so we'd better keep still and let Mary retain her secret. Anyhow we wish her the best of luck and shall root for a homer every time she comes to bat. "'Ata girl, Mary! Pickle it! Right on the trade mark! Whee!"

"The House of a Thousand Candles"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward

SELIG'S "The House of a Thousand Candles," the five-reel Red Seal play to be released through V. L. S. E. on Monday, August 23, is a million candle power production. The story is so skillfully told and capably acted in pictures, that it seems safe to say that the film will be giving joy to thousands a year from now.

The neighbors become more neighborly.

The production is based, of course, upon Meredith Nicholson's novel and play of the same name, which has been adapted for pictures by Gilson Willetts and produced by T. N. Heffron. Especial praise is due the director and adapter for the clever way in which they have combined to maintain the mystery element in the story until the very last. If one has never read the book or witnessed the play it is certain he will never suspect the denouement of the story, and his surprise will be as keen when Squire Glenarm appears alive and well in the fifth reel, as was that of Jack Glenarm, the squire's nephew.

Harry Mestayer is seen to far better advantage in the role of Jack Glenarm than he was in his previous appearance as a Selig star, for this boyish, rollicking, daredevil sort of a youth is just the type of character suited to Mestayer's peculiar abilities and he is at his best when permitted to romp through a part. Grace Darmond is both winsome and sweet as Marian Evans, and Edgar Nelson as Larry Donovan will win his way straight to the hearts of any audience by his plump roly-poliness and care free laugh. Forest Robinson makes of Bates the sort of butler one reads of but seldom encounters, and George Backus is convincing as Squire Glenarm. The two heavy roles fall to John Charles as Arthur Pickering, and Effingham Pinto as Don Jose. Both are capable, though at times Mr. Pinto comes dangerously close to burlesque by his exceptional vindictiveness, or at least he seems too vividly temperamental for even a hot-blooded Spaniard.

A word of special praise is due the Selig company for the gorgeous set prepared for the library of the House of a Thousand Candles. It is without doubt one of the most elaborate that has ever been erected in the Selig studios and so skillfully painted that it looks real. The odd and bizarre effect given by the arrangement of the hundreds and hundreds of tallow candles is indescribable. As some one has said, "It has to be seen to be appreciated."

The story is well known to the majority of exhibitors, but briefly tells how Squire Glenarm, owner of the House of a Thousand Candles, upon learning that his nephew, Jack Glenarm, prefers to stay in the city, where he has become infatuated with Carmen, a cabaret singer, rather than come to his uncle's home for the summer, arranges to first compel the young man's appearance at the country estate, and secondly to force him to like it there. The squire is anxious to arrange a marriage between Jack and Marian Evans, the daughter of a neighbor, and feels sure that if Jack is compelled to live near Marian for a few months, he will fall a victim to her charms.

Accordingly Squire Glenarm apparently dies, leaving his fortune to Jack upon the understanding that Jack reside in the House of a Thousand Candles, without leaving the grounds, for a period of one year. Pickering, the lawyer who executed the will, knows the Glenarm fortune consists of stocks and bonds and, finding they have disappeared from their hiding place in the cellar, he sets about the task of finding them with the intention of keeping them himself. Jack finds a note left by his uncle in which it is stated the fortune is hidden in the house and that he must "study architecture" in order to come into possession of it. Ultimately Jack breaks the terms of his uncle's will by leaving the grounds to attend a mask ball at the home of Marian, but returns in time to surprise Pickering in the act of stealing the document which tells where the fortune is hidden.

Both Jack and Pickering are astonished, as they struggle, to behold the sudden opening of a secret panel in the wall and the appearance of Squire Glenarm himself. It is then disclosed that the squire's death was only a tale for the purpose of testing Jack and causing him to come to the country estate for the purpose of meeting and falling in love with Marian. Of course it has also disclosed the treachery of Pickering and that unhappy individual is led away to jail as the film comes to an end.

"A Yankee From the West"

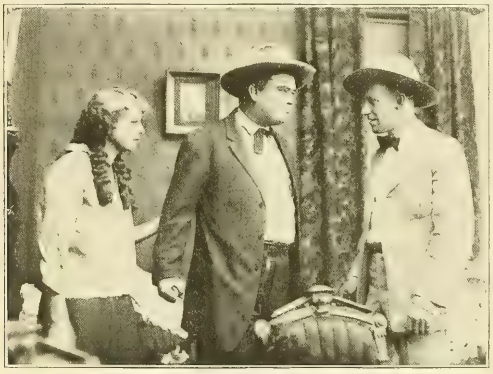
SIGNE AUEN is featured as Gunhild, a Norwegian girl, in the four-reel Mutual Master Picture to be released on August 10. Miss Auen, who is one of the most able actresses on the motion picture stage, does not have a great opportunity to display her dramatic ability in this picture, but her portrayal of the simple and trusting Norwegian girl is very good. The picture has many satisfying qualities, and Wallace Reid as Billy Milford, alias "Hell-in-the-Mud," gives Miss Auen able support, and the acting of the rest of the cast is noteworthy.

The play is a heart interest drama dealing with the life of a young college graduate, who after leaving college becomes station agent in a Western town and there, after leading a wild life he meets a young Norwegian girl. She inspires in him a wish to enjoy the real things in life.



Billy Milford, better known as "Hell-in-the-Mud," is sitting in the office of the Addertown railroad station dreaming of his college days when he notices a very pretty little Norwegian girl standing on the station platform. There are a couple of hangers-on making fun of the girl and Billy goes to her aid. After finding out that she wants to go to her uncle's restaurant and saloon he escorts her there.

Later "Hell-in-the-Mud" realizes that his interest in the girl has grown into deep love. His pal, Jim Dorsey, also loves the girl, but she repulses his advances. The superintendent of the railroad hears that Milford has been leading a wild life and so he sends a man to take his place. Dorsey, for secret reasons of his own, becomes a friend of the newcomer and through him learns that the superintendent and the paymaster are on their way up the mountain to pay the men. He tells Billy of this and he goes with Dorsey and they hold up the superintendent. The money is taken to Billy's cabin and there hidden under a board in the floor. Billy and Dorsey return to the saloon and here Dorsey suggests that they part. Milford goes in and is drinking when the superintendent, the new station master and the sheriff enter and accuse him of the theft. Milford denies this, but Gunhild pleads with him to prove his innocence, so he leads the men to his cabin. Here they search the house from roof to floor and are just leaving when the sheriff stumbles over the loosened board, but upon investigation nothing is found under it. Dorsey had returned to the cabin and had taken the money and hidden it.

Gunhild, confident of "Hell-in-the-Mud's" innocence, pledges her love for him and he goes East to live down the past. Taking advantage of his pal's absence, Dorsey annoys the girl, but she soon leaves Addertown to get work in a new place.

Two years later Gunhild is companion to an Eastern professor's daughter. They go into the mountains to board at a farm house and the girl meets Billy, who is managing a farm nearby. Their happiness is short-lived, however, as Dorsey, leading a strong-arm man show, comes to the same town. He sees Gunhild one day and follows her. As she passes a clump of bushes he begins to annoy the girl, and Milford, close by, rushes up to the scene, but Dorsey knocks him unconscious. The prizefighter then tells Gunhild that Milford is a thief, as he had stolen the money from the railroad two years before. Billy goes to a blacksmith in town and there takes lessons in boxing. He later, after hearing from Gunhild that Dorsey has insulted her and also brought up the theft of years before, engages in a hand-to-hand battle with Dorsey and badly worsts him.

Having owed the railroad money, Milford goes to the superintendent and confesses his part in the holdup and gives him the amount of money he had stolen. The superintendent, struck by Milford's honesty, gives the entire amount to Gunhild, now Milford's wife, as a wedding present and the two happy young people leave for parts unknown to begin life anew.

"The Woman Hater"

Reviewed by John C. Garrett

ON AUGUST 21, Henry B. Walthall, the well known Essanay actor, will be seen in a three-reel production, "The Woman Hater." Walthall is seen in a new role, that of a bashful young bachelor, who because of his dislike for "petticoats," as he calls them, is placed in many humorous situations. Mr. Walthall's handling of the comedy situation shows his adeptness at filling any role and his great versatility.

The picture, splendidly photographed, is entertaining and full of clean and pleasing humor. Mr. Walthall is very ably supported by Edna Mayo as Mabel Willing. This Essanay star has won wide comment on her recent appearance in "The Blindness of Virtue." Bryant Washburn as Dick Wainright forms another strong link in the chain.

Mabel goes to see the "woman hater."

Dick Wainright, a young millionaire, has as guest on board his yacht Jack Warder, a confirmed woman hater. He decides to secretly invite Mabel Willing, a brilliant young girl, her brother and wife, and her best chum to go on a yachting cruise with them. The party comes on board the yacht while "the woman hater" is asleep. Wainright promises Mabel $20,000 as a wedding gift if she will "land" Warder.

The girl enters into the spirit of the adventure and immediately upon boarding the yacht she goes down into the cabin, where Jack is asleep and sits by his side and fans him. Jack finally wakens and is horror stricken to find the girl by his side. He rushes out of the cabin closely followed by Mabel and finally to get away from her crawls clear out on the front of the boat. Later the girl determines to find out whether her "future husband" is a man or a mollycoddle. She jumps into the water and calls loudly for help. Warder very calmly gets a grappling hook, carries it to the side of the boat and finally after poking around in the water the girl grasps the end of it and is pulled onto the boat. Mabel is furious and tells Warder that it might interest him to know that she can swim and he replies to her: "My dear Madam, it might interest you to know that I can't swim."

Some months later Jack again meets Mabel at a house party given by Wainright. The girl determines to try other tactics to win him. They all start out on a chase and Warder asks Mabel to ride with him, but she refuses and says that if he rides like he swims she would rather not ride with him. Finally, however, she agrees and they start off. After a thrilling chase over the country with the baying hounds leading the galloping riders, Mabel is thrown from her horse. Warder offers her his aid, but as her clothes have been torn from her she tells him he cannot help her in that condition. Jack says, "I will marry you and then I can help you."

Some few weeks after this Jack is standing in front of the altar with Mabel. When the minister asks him if he will take this woman to be his lawful wife, he hastily turns around, sees that the church aisle is clear, gasps out a lifeless "No." and then bolts down the aisle.

He later is mistaken for a gentleman thief and arrested by a policeman in a small town. Wainright brings Mabel to the prison to see him and here she tells Jack that to satisfy her pride he must go through another ceremony and that he must say "Yes" and she will say "No." With this promise Jack is again led to the altar once again and here he is dumbfounded when Mabel says "Yes." However, as he is married there is nothing else to do but to accept married life and they depart happily on their honeymoon.

"Mrs. Plum's Pudding"

MARIE TEMPEST, famous star of the legitimate stage, ably supported by W. Graham Browne, Eddie Lyons and Violet MacMillan, will be seen to advantage in the multiple-reel Broadway Universal feature called "Mrs. Plum's Pudding," scheduled for release on the Universal program on Monday, August 23.

The story was written by James Dayton and Eddie Lyons and gives Miss Tempest ample opportunity to show her skill as a comedienne, while at the same time being so interesting that every photoplay patron will find something to enjoy in the picture which has been skillfully produced by Director Al E. Christie. W. Graham Browne is Lord Burlington to the life, being just the type to portray the fortune seeking foreigner, ready to marry anyone with the necessary funds to keep him in the state to which he is accustomed. Jean Hathaway hasn't much to do as Mrs. Van Zant, but does that little well, and vivacious Violet MacMillan makes a most charming Betty Van Zant and it is not to be wondered at that Eddie Lyons, as Eddie Plum, the only son of Mrs. Plum, is quite captivated by her charms.

Mrs. Plum and her son, who live on a small ranch, are one day made millionaires when oil is discovered on their property. The widow at once sets off for the city, where stories of her fabulous wealth have preceded her. Lord Burlington, in need of funds, sees a way of feathering his nest by marrying the rich widow, and accordingly arranges to introduce her into society, he being assisted in this plan by his friend Mrs. Van Zant, who is high up in society, but exceedingly low financially. Meanwhile Eddie Plum sees and becomes infatuated with Betty Van Zant.

On the day of the wedding Mrs. Plum startles everyone by declaring that the deed to her farm, upon which is based her sole claim to wealth, has been stolen from her and consequently she is ruined. Upon learning this, Lord Burlington suggests that they postpone the wedding until the papers are found and the widow is heart-broken. It was her "pudding" rather than her that he desired.

Eddie Plum, meanwhile, returns from an elopement with Betty to discover that his mother has fooled them all, as her declaration that the deed had been stolen was only a test by which she might know whether Lord Burlington really loved her or not.

Finally Lord Burlington discovers that it was not money alone he sought, for he has really grown to love the widow and upon making this fact known, while still under the belief that the fortune is gone, he wins back the heart and hand of Mrs. Plum and is then surprised to learn that, after all, she is as wealthy as he had at first supposed.

Essanay's "Rule Sixty-Three"

A LIVELY story, especially appealing to those who are in love or those who have been in love and for some unaccountable reason have become parted, is "Rule Sixty-Three," a two-reel Essanay production to be released on August 28 and action is stirring throughout the picture.

Bryant Washburn is cast as Paul Smith, whose fiancee because of an innocent action on his part returns her engagement ring to him. He becomes bitter against anyone who is in love and conceives the idea of starting a Systematic Disentangling Agency for people who have fallen in love and wish to become disentangled. Mr. Washburn is supported by Jean Moyer as Amelie Benton, Charlotte Mineau, Leota Lorraine, Hugh E. Thompson and Royal Douglas.

Paul Smith and his fiancee, Amelia Benton, are eating in a cafe when Mrs. Tremayne, who is suing her hubsand, a great friend of Smith's, for a divorce, passes their table and Paul nods to her. The woman while stepping into her automobile turns and again nods to Paul through the cafe window. Amelia is indignant and insists on leaving the cafe at once. She and Paul get into her electric and after some stormy words, the girl returns Smith's ring to him.

Paul gets out of the electric and is walking toward his apartment when he meets Tremayne, who has just gotten his divorce papers and has had them framed. The two men go to Paul's apartments and there display their exhibits—A—the framed divorce papers and B—the returned engagement ring. While talking over their troubles Smith decides that he will establish a Systematic Disentangling Agency through which people who have fallen in love will be enabled to "fall out" if they wish to. He tells Tremayne that if he ever needs any help in this line to call on him.

Amelia goes to a summer resort to soothe her ruffled feelings and there meets and falls in love with Tremayne.

The man is in the midst of reading love poetry to her when she is handed a card. She leaves Tremayne and goes to meet Mary Shields, a representative of the Disentangling Agency for whom she has sent. Sometime later Tremayne realizing that he is on the verge of proposing to Amelia telegraphs to Smith. The next day Spencer Jones, one of the ablest representatives of the S. D. A. arrives upon the scene.

After some days Tremayne and Amelia realize that the representatives from the agency instead of disentangling their love affair have become seriously entangled in one of their own. Both Tremayne and the girl wire the S. D. A. telling them that the representatives are no good and that they themselves are more in love with each other than ever.

Paul wires back to both Jones and Mary Shields and refers to "Rule 63," which reads: "In desperate cases resort to row on lake. Tip the boat and rescue girl or in reverse case let man rescue the girl. Ninety times out of one hundred the rescued party will propose to the girl or the girl will fall in love with her rescuer." Smith then goes to Mrs. Tremayne's and they leave together for the summer resort. They arrive just in time to pull Amelia, wet and struggling, out of the water and Tremayne crawls out after her. Further out on the lake Jones and Mary are clasped in each other's arms. Rule 63 has worked, Paul and Amelia are again happy in each other's love, Tremayne and his wife become reconciled to each other and Jones and Mary have found themselves.

"The Diamond From the Sky"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward

CHAPTER eighteen of the North American serial "The Diamond from the Sky," which is entitled "The Charm Against Harm," is one of the most thrilling that has yet been released in this continued story.

It contains two of the biggest settings that this reviewer has ever seen in an American film production. One of them, the dance hall, known as "Pete's Palace," is probably as immense as any setting that has ever been erected by any company for a picture production, and the action that takes place within this setting is fully as exciting as anything that has preceded it in "The Diamond from the Sky" serial, which is noted for its spirited action. Hundreds of supernumeraries are used in this dance hall scene and all of them are so splendidly trained and well rehearsed that the big scene gets over with a punch that must have pleased its director and is sure to please exhibitors and patrons the country over.

The other big setting shows the interior of John Powell's home in Los Angeles and convincingly depicts the home of an American millionaire, though the action that transpires within this setting cannot in any way be compared with that witnessed in the other big stage setting.

Esther, who in the previous chapter leaped overboard from Arthur Stanley's yacht when Blair Stanley attempted to jerk "The Diamond from the Sky" from her neck, is rescued by the faithful Quabba. He brings her safely to shore and then accompanies her to John Powell's office in the hope of at last coming face to face with Arthur Stanley, since the two have learned, ere this, that Powell is Stanley's assumed name. After Esther's spectacular leap from the yacht Blair engages in a mighty struggle with Luke Lovell on the deck of the boat and locked in a fighting clinch they both fall into the water. There Blair strikes Luke a cruel blow in the face and swims back to the yacht, while Luke with difficulty makes his way to the shore and disappears.

Arthur Stanley, known as John Powell, learns while in his office that Esther and Quabba have been seeking him and have recently departed from the mines, whither they sought refuge when pursued by Blair Stanley. Giving instructions to send horsemen out to search for them, Arthur leaps into his automobile and himself prepares to take up the hunt for them. On the way to the mines he encounters Marmaduke Smythe, the English lawyer, and takes him along. Esther and Quabba, on reaching Powell's office, discover the latter has departed in his car and set out to follow him, and a little later Blair and Vivian Marston also learn of Arthur's departure and Blair, after introducing himself as Arthur's cousin, makes himself at home in Arthur's palatial mansion.

On pay day for the miners, when all the hundreds who are employed in the mines seek amusement and recreation in a notorious resort called "Pete's Palace," Quabba and Esther arrive in the vicinity and enter the place to seek refreshment, little suspecting its real character.

A short time later Arthur and Marmaduke Smythe reach the same resort and enter to quench their thirst after the long drive. A score or more of cowboys come in to "paint the town red" and soon the interior of "Pete's Palace" is buzzing with humanity. Hundreds are engaged in gambling, scores are dancing with the girls employed by Pete, and still countless others are gathered in the bar-room and at the lunch counter.

A half-drunk cowboy, noting Esther and Quabba at the lunch counter, insults the girl by asking her to dance with him. Luke Lovell, who has found his way thither and sought employment in the place, recognizes Esther and goes to her rescue. When he hits the cowboy, a free-for-all fight begins, the drink crazed men and women struggling with each other in all parts of the big resort. Arthur notes the attack upon the girl, leaps into the fray and deals smashing lefts and rights to those about him and staggers forward through the mob in an effort to reach the side of the girl who has been insulted, not yet recognizing her as Esther, but ere he is across half the space that separates them, the surging crowd surrounds him. The odds become too great against him and he goes down beneath an upper-cut delivered by a drunken miner. Meanwhile the crowd surges over toward one wall in an effort to get out of the fray. The wall gives way and with a crash the building topples in like a house of cards, Arthur and hundreds of the struggling crowd being buried beneath the falling timbers.

Meanwhile "The Diamond from the Sky," dashed aloft in the fierce struggle, has settled down upon one of the antlers of the elk's head carried by Marmaduke Smythe, though as the picture closes the latter has not yet discovered the prize that has fallen so unexpectedly to him.

"Drawing the Line"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward

"DRAWING the Line," the two-reel American drama scheduled for release on August 23, is based upon a verse from the pen of the famous poet of the Sierras, Joaquin Miller, which runs as follows:

In men whom men condemn as ill,
I find so much of goodness still;
In men whom men pronounce divine,
I see so much of sin and blot;
I hesitate to draw the line
Between the two—when God has not.

Jack Richardson is cast as Fred Harris, whom the villagers "pronounce divine," since he has been raised in the best surroundings and is considered an ideal youth, though in reality he yields to the first temptation that offers itself after his departure from his rural home. Walter Spencer, a new-comer to the American ranks, plays Billy Howe, the man "condemned as ill," since his father had been convicted of theft, and under the stigma thus cast on his family name, Billy finds himself at a decided disadvantage in his home town.

Richardson, as usual, gets everything possible out of the role assigned him, but as much cannot be said for Spencer, since the latter appeared to be comparatively lifeless and sadly lacking in the qualities one expects to find in a photoplay hero.

Vivian Rich as Edith Lotimer, the girl whom both Billy and Fred love, has one of the best roles in which she has recently been cast and her work in the scene where Fred discovers her to be blind and she tells him the cause of her blindness she is particularly convincing.

Bill secures employment in the store.

When Edith shows her preference for Fred, Billy is humiliated, since he realizes that the girl has chosen the other young man merely because his family name is spotless, whereas Billy's own is under a cloud, due to his father's conviction for theft. He feels, however, that in time he will be able to live down the cloud that has befogged his life and so is immensely pleased when he is offered work as a clerk in the village store.

Once more, however, fate pursues him, for his employer is told that Billy's father was a thief and cautioned against the boy being given too much freedom in the handling of cash in the store, resulting ultimately in his being discharged.

Thoroughly resenting this treatment, Billy visits the store that night and takes enough money with which to purchase a ticket to the city, where he hopes to lose himself amid new surroundings and start life anew.

Months later he finds Fred in a gay cafe, spending money with a free hand and ruining his life. When, a day or two later, Fred, while drunk, insults one of the cafe patrons, Billy has him ordered out of the place of which he is manager, and after he has departed finds a note from Edith beseeching Fred to return home or at least to write her regarding his success in the city.

Billy determines to visit Edith and tell her Fred's real situation in life and the riotous way in which he is living, but upon reaching his old home he discovers that Edith is blind and has turned over to Fred all the money she possessed, that he may establish her father's right to certain patents. Edith explains that her blindness was caused by her working early and late in sewing, that she might have more funds with which to supply Fred's insistent demands for money.

The blind girl tells her story.

Realizing the true situation, Billy tells her that Fred is ill, but that he ought to be back within a month. He then returns to the city, hunts Fred up, kidnaps him and places him by force in a sanitarium, where his love for liquor is finally conquered.

When Fred is thoroughly cured of his love for drink, Billy tells him of his visit to Edith and that the drink cure has been administered in order that he may return to her a new man. Fred, appreciating what Billy has done, swears to restore all the money he has taken from Edith and leaves for her home.

A YOUNG society woman cast upon her own resources, and who, unable to earn even the bare necessities of life, drifts into the life in the under-world, is the plot which offers opportunities for much stirring action in the Edison release of September 3, entitled, "The Way Back." Miriam Nesbitt is featured as Mary Wilson, in this three-part melodrama, which was written by Mary Rider.

The first reel is devoted to showing the vain efforts of the girl who had always been surrounded by luxury, to earn an honest living. In this portion of the story, Miss Nesbitt does very effective work and succeeds in holding the interest. George Wright is deserving of the most enthusiastic praise for his interpretation of Dan Reedy, the gentleman crook.

Carlton King, who is well known for his fine character portrayals, produced the picture. The closing scene shows Mary and Dan standing before two huge gates, which, when opened, disclose a long, straight path. This suggests their determination to reform truly enough, but it seems unnecessary. In every other respect the direction gives evidence of ability and good judgment on the part of the producer. In the supporting cast are Frank McGlynn as Mr. Kingman; Robert Brower as Mr. Rogers; Mrs. Wallace Erskine as Mrs. Kingman; Marjorie Ellison as Lilly; and Jessie Stevens as Mrs. Casey.

Mary Wilson receives a letter from her lawyer, informing her that her fortune has been lost in a speculation. She is certain that Kingman has swindled her, but cannot prove anything against him. Now living at a cheap boarding house, Mary is unsuccessful in her endeavor to obtain employment. Dan Reedy, one of the boarders, does many little favors for her, and she appreciates his kindness.

Reedy is a crook and he does not try to deceive Mary. He asks her to be his partner, as he believes with her aid he will be able to make some big scoops. Penniless, she is left no alternative and accepts his offer. At a notorious cafe Mary makes the acquaintance of Kingman's son, Ralph. Young Kingman has a responsible position with a large manufacturing concern. Seeking revenge, Mary encourages Ralph, who becomes infatuated with her.

His salary is not sufficient to his mode of living since meeting the girl, and he misappropriates the money entrusted to him by the firm. The shortage is discovered. Rogers, the manager, notifies the elder Kingman that he will prosecute Ralph. Mary suddenly realizes the injustice she has done him, and believing Kingman sufficiently punished, through her lawyer negotiates with Rogers, and offers to make good the amount, if he will promise to keep the affair a secret.

Ralph is permitted to go without a blot on his name.

"A Species of Mexican Man"

Reviewed by John C. Garrett

THE present situation in Mexico is an interesting topic of the day and one concerning which everyone knows something. The Lubin Company has produced a three-reel picture featuring Romaine Fielding, whose splendid portrayal of character parts has gained him a wide reputation. The story is written around the uprising in Mexico. It is a vivid play, and the vast Mexican country affords splendid opportunity for the good photography obtained.

"A Species of Mexican Man" is a very good example of the popular Lubin species of plays.

The "Man" is leader of his men and we first see him on the battlefield with them, enduring all their hardships and ever looked up to as one superior in both presence and intellect. He receives word that a spy has reported to the enemy that their base of ammunition is not guarded and could be easily destroyed. Knowing that with his small army of men he cannot repulse the enemy the "Man" blows up their supply house himself. Later the spy promises his general that he will capture the "Man."

The spy discovers that the "Man" is leaving for the United States to purchase ammunition, and follows him. After a long travel over the cactus covered country, the spy sees the "Man" stop his horse and speak to two girls who are horseback riding. One of the girls is the daughter of the powder king and the other, Rose, who is immediately attracted to the Mexican, is the daughter of a widow. The widow's son comes home from college with two friends and after seeing his mother he and his friends leave in an automobile to go after his sister. They meet the "Man" and when the Mexican stops to ask for directions they pull him from his horse, place him in the automobile and carry him off. After riding some distance they tell him that this is an American joke and that he can now get out and walk the rest of the way.

The Mexican surprises the college chaps, however, by whipping out a knife and slashing the tire and then at the point of his gun makes them walk with him. He runs across the two girls who have caught his horse and with them he rides back to town.

The "Man" later goes to call on Rose. One night when he goes to see her, she is just leaving on an errand of charity. The "Man" goes with her, and they are seen by the spy, who gathers his men together and follows the "Man." When Rose and the Mexican leave the house they are followed by three of the spy's men and the "Man" sensing danger, turns, fells the three men and then he and Rose walk away. The spy's plans have been frustrated, and he now decides he will kidnap the girl and in this way capture the "Man."

Rose is carried off to the hut of the spy and there held until the "Man," hearing of her danger, goes to help her out. As he steps into the room many revolvers are leveled at him. He coolly glances around the room and the men cowering under his glance lower their revolvers. The spy is knocked to the ground and he takes Rose home in safety. The spy realizing that his duty has not been fulfilled runs a dagger through his heart.

Having settled the matter of purchasing arms and ammunition the "Man" leaves for Mexico. Before going, however, he writes a note telling the girl that as soon as he becomes worthy of her, he will either send or come for her. Later the "Man" becomes president of Mexico, and Rose soon becomes Mrs. President.

"The Ringtailed Rhinoceros"

FOR his premier in pictures Raymond Hitchcock appears in "The Ringtailed Rhinoceros," as John Carter-Carter, big hearted, irresponsible and to the great dismay of his fiancee and many friends, notoriously fond of cocktails, highballs, and kindred beverages; in other words, the type of part in which he became famous on the comic opera stage. The story surrounds Hitchcock with the same atmosphere of farce which characterized his most popular stage vehicles.

of the action takes place out of doors, and Mr. Hitchcock's beautiful Long Island home served as a background for all of these scenes. Director Terwilliger did not overlook any opportunities in the staging of this thoroughly amusing farce-comedy.

Flora Zabelle, also of comic opera fame, is Marybelle, Carter's fiancee, and, in the "fable-dream," the weeping princess, she is required only to smile and weep. The latter can be as heartily recommended for its abundance as the former for its charm. Raymond Hackett as Billie, the little brother, is genuinely good. Herbert Fortier, Ida Waterman, Arthur Matthews, Edward Metcalfe and William Boyd complete the cast.

John Carter-Carter has one fault—he is a good fellow of the most pronounced type. His fiancee, Marybelle, pleads with him to stop drinking. Billie, her little brother, asks Carter what makes his sister look so sad. He answers, "a ringtailed rhinoceros," which Billie takes as gospel. A few days later Billie determines to find and kill the monster and so end his sister's sorrow. He visits Carter for some information about the beast. Together they plan a way to kill the rhino. Both fall asleep.

In a dream Carter finds himself shanghaied by pirates. The ringtailed rhinoceros appears and encourages him to drink his fill from the captain's private bottle. For this crime the pirates make him walk the plank. A long swim lands him on an island, where he meets a little prince. He learns that the beautiful princess does nothing but weep, and that she will continue to weep until the ringtailed rhinoceros is slain.

Carter promises to kill the monster. Armed with a blunderbuss and astride an eight-legged horse, he starts on his hunt. His first meeting with the animal is a huge success, for the ringtailed one, who leads the victim to the king's wine cellar, where Carter makes merry. On his return to the palace the king orders him executed. Happily for Carter the prince intercedes with success.

While they are all in the throne room, in walks the dreaded beast. The prince, "Good Intent," urges him to act now. With the ringtailed rhinoceros' own creator, a bottle, Carter slays it. The princess stops crying and embraces the hero. Upon awakening from the dream, Carter assures Marybelle and Billie that the ringtailed rhinoceros is dead.

The big moment in this story comes in the first reel, when the designing woman is scorned by her young lover for murdering her husband, and to make good her threat that no other woman will have him, fastens the crime on him.

The situation is plausibly worked up and carries a real punch. From this scene on, to the final vindication of the man who is a victim of a miscarriage of justice, there is plenty of action and strong drama. The production is realistic, the scenes in the courtroom and prison are especially well done, and the interiors of the principal characters' homes suggest their station in the world.

Dorothy Kelly makes her initial appearance on the V. L. S. E. Program as Julia Dean, which part she plays with ease and grace. Rita Reynolds is a highly dramatic role, and Eulalie Jenson enacts it with forceful conviction. James Morrison is Ralph Brooks. Anders Randolph as "Pug" Riley; George Cooper as "Red" Hall; Charles Eldridge as John Reynolds and Louise Boudet complete the cast.

Ralph Brooks escorts his mother and Julia Dean, his sweetheart, to the reception, where he meets Rita Reynolds, who, attracted to him, gains his sympathy by confiding to him exaggerated tales of her husband's brutality. In a short time Rita has a strong influence over Ralph. He agrees to elope with her. Reynolds leaves on a business trip. Rita dismisses the servants for the night, and phones Ralph that time is opportune for their elopement.

She takes a large sum from her husband's safe. Reynolds returns, and seeing her do this is confirmed in his suspicions that she is having an affair with Ralph. He draws a revolver with the threat that he will kill her. Rita struggles with her husband with the result that he is killed. Red Hall, a burglar, enters the house in time to see the shooting. Ralph arrives and in a glance learns the truth.

When he spurns her, Rita decides to fasten the crime on him. Her testimony convicts him at the trial, and he is sentenced to twenty years imprisonment. Hall blackmails Rita, and becoming more bold as time passes, lives with her. Ralph and his cell-mate, "Pug" Riley, escape from prison and return to the city. At the end of their resources, Hall and Rita plan a reception at which they intend to commit a daring robbery.

Hall comes to the place where Ralph and Riley are hiding. He asks Riley to help him. Riley consents. He arranges with Ralph to be at the reception. The police are picturization. Situations of a tense, thrilling nature are not to be found in "The Little Dutch Girl." It is delightfully devoid of the sensational.

The story is thoroughly human and the heart appeal it carries cannot be denied. The atmosphere of a small Dutch village is effectively suggested in the opening scenes, and is consistently maintained throughout the picture. Vivian Martin is featured in the titular role. As the theme is centered entirely about the little girl, Miss Martin has a deal of responsibility to carry, but she proves equal to the task.

John Bowers gives a worthy portrayal of the artist, Lionel. He plays the part with a strength which artists of the screen too often lack. Chester Barnett is Jeanott. Dorothy Fairchild flirts charmingly as Lise. Julia Stuart as Mother Kranz and W. J. Gross as the old gardener complete the cast, which is one of more than ordinary ability.

The old gardener discovers a basket near the edge of the lake, and upon investigating, finds it contains a baby. He takes the infant, a girl, to his home, where she grows up under his tender care. When her guardian dies, Bebee, now fourteen years old continues to live in the old house. In the garden she raises flowers which she sells at the market place —her means of earning a livelihood.

A famous painter searches vainly for his ideal model for a subject he has conceived. Lionel visits the country in hopes of finding his model there. On her sixteenth birthday, Bebee, who is loved by all the villagers, receives a number of presents, among them a pair of slippers which she cherishes above all. Returning from the market she meets Lionel. Bebee displays the slippers but she is keenly disappointed when he asks her how she can wear them without stockings.

The following day the artist leaves a pair of stockings at her booth in the market. Little Dutch feels sure that he left them there, and returns them to him. This is the starting point of their friendship. On the day which has been set aside for the villagers to make a pilgrimage to the shrine, Lionel asks Bebee to take a holiday and go for a walk with him. Against a beautiful background Bebee poses for the painter.

Toward evening they return to the cottage. Lionel, impressed with her innocence, decides to go away. When he tells the girl, who now frankly admits her love for him, she is heartbroken. One day she learns that Lionel is sick in his home. Bebee believes him to be poor, and decides to go to him and care for him. Unable to pay the railroad fare, she sets out on foot. Days after she left the village, Little Dutch arrives at Lionel's apartment, bedraggled and with holes worn through her wooden shoes.

Bebee enters the house. She hears voices, and walking to a curtained room, peers into the hall. She sees Lionel lying on a couch, surrounded by a gay party of men and women. One woman has her arms about the artist. Barely able to walk she reaches the street. On the doorstep she is found by Jeanott, her village sweetheart, who has followed her. Jeanott takes her home. But Bebee remains silent and dispirited. One night she steals out of the house, walks to the lake, and goes to her death in the rippling water.

"The Goddess"

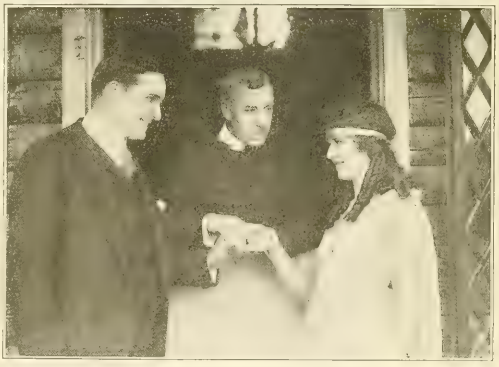
Reviewed by Charles R. Condon

WITH chapter fifteen, "The Goddess" reaches a happy and romantic conclusion. Not only does it close the story of this beautiful serial by Gouverneur Morris and Charles W. Goddard, but it also closes the earthly existence of the members of the financial triumvirate as well as that of Gunsdorf, the strike leader, whose influence over his fellow workmen was the cause of much of the excitement with which the last few episodes have been marked.

From beginning to end this serial has been one of splendid acting, clever situations, stirring drama devoid of transparent, hair-breadth escapes, and interspersed with refreshing bits of light comedy, graphic staging, and fine photography. The members of the cast, to whom much of the charm of the serial is directly traceable, are Anita Stewart, Earle Williams, Paul Scardon, Frank Currier, Thomas Brooke, Charles Wellesley, Ned Finley, George Stevens, and William Dangman. The latter proved exceptionally clever in a characteristic bit of East Side comedy portrayal.

The final scene of chapter fourteen showed the frenzied mob storming wealthy Gordon Barclay's home, determined to break with their own hands the multi-millionaires who had so nearly succeeded in gaining absolute power over the working class. This episode opens with a view of the interior of Barclay's home where he and his partners in the proposed scheme, Senator Amos Blackstone and Marvin Semmes, are seen conferring as to the best way to escape the mob.

Freddy the Ferret arrives with a message from Tommy, advising Mr. Barclay to seek seclusion on Gull Island where he (Tommy) and Celestia intend to spend a few weeks. Just as Barclay finishes reading the note a pistol shot is heard and Semmes drops dead, struck by Gunsdorf's bullet, fired from without. After a thrilling chase through the house, the would-be murderers having gained admission,



The bodies are washed ashore.

Freddy, Curry, and Blackstone reach the auto outside. Here another bullet diminishes the party to Freddy and Curry.

The fugitives reach the wharf and set out in a sailboat. To their horror, they discover that the man steering is Gunsdorf, who has followed them and overpowered the man in charge of the boat. Mutual hatred brings the strike-leader and the multi-millionaire together in deadly combat. In their struggles they fall overboard. Locked in each other's arms, their bodies are washed into shore the following morning.

Freddy and his mother buy a magazine stand, and, according to Freddy's letter to Tommy, get along very well. Another item of interest in the letter is that Gunsdorf's widow is a Salvation Army charity worker. As was expected from the beginning of the serial, Celestia and Tommy marry.

A happy moment in "The Goddess."

The wedding itself does not form a part of the picture, but the affectionate finale and the incidents preceding it leave no doubt as to its being an event of the future.

AS the title implies, "Capital Punishment" embodies an appeal to discontinue this form of punishment as a penalty for murder. The author, the Reverend C. J. Harris, strikes a note of truth in this story, in that the voters, when given an opportunity to abolish the practice of hanging murderers, refuse to avail themselves of it, and then when the time for the execution approaches they voice their disapproval and criticize the authorities for enforcing the law.

"Capital Punishment" is the Knickerbocker Star Feature release of August 18, on the regular program of the General Film Company. Lenore Ulrich, formerly a star of the speaking stage, is featured as Olive Basley, the girl who, to save her sister from disgrace, makes a supreme sacrifice. John Reinhard, well known both in pictures and on the stage, is Duncan, and Sidney Mason does well as Jim Armsby. The cast is completed by Ruth Vivian, Slavia Artaro, George T. Neech, T. Morse Kaupel and Jim Levering. Joseph Levering directed the production. The photography is clear and restful.

Governor Clayton is an ardent supporter of the Anti-Capital Punishment bill which is before the Legislature. Judge Basley, who has presided at many murder trials, uses all his influence and finally defeats the measure. He publicly attacks the governor for commuting death sentences of men found guilty in his court. His political associate, Duncan, is determined to marry Olive Basley.

He plans to force her consent by a scheme which amounts to blackmail. Duncan escorts Olive's sister, Vivian, to a notorious gambling resort. He loans her a considerable sum and encourages her to play. Vivian loses all of this money. The following day Duncan presses her for the amount she owes him. She forges her father's check and gives it to him.

Olive shows her contempt for Duncan.

This Duncan shows to Olive and assures her that he will turn it over to those interested in forgeries unless she will marry him. Olive agrees to the bargain. After leaving on the wedding trip, Olive writes to Vivian, telling her that she has decided to kill Duncan. Jim Armsby sees the letter and immediately sets out for the city where Olive and Duncan are staying.

After securing the forged check, Vivian draws a revolver and covers her husband. He struggles with her and the gun is discharged, the bullet piercing his hand. Olive swoons. In fear, Duncan tries to climb to the window of the next room. He falls to the street below and is killed. Armsby arrives at the hotel and is the first one to enter Olive's room. The police are called, and both are arrested.

At the trial Armsby insists that he is guilty, and on his own protestations he is convicted; the charge being that after the revolver failed he pushed Duncan out of the window. Brisco, a government official, saw Duncan fall. He does not learn that Armsby is accused of the murder until a few days before the day set for the execution. Brisco is a great distance from the city and he consequently does not arrive at the prison until Jim is being led to the gallows. His evidence is accepted and Armsby is freed.

According to Vice Consul R. M. Newcomb, Victoria, British Columbia, Canada, the motion picture theater is as popular in Vancouver Island as it is in American cities. Owing to the effect of the war many motion picture theaters have reduced their prices one-half.

MARY ANDERSON SIGNED FOR WESTERN VITAGRAPH COMPANY

Mary Anderson, long a member of the Vitagraph stock company at the Flatbush studio, has recently been recruited to the Western forces of this company located at Santa Monica, California. During his recent visit East, Rollin S. Sturgeon, chief director at the western studio, decided that he needed Miss Anderson's ability, experience, and pleasing personality in his own aggregation, and arranged with Albert E. Smith and J. Stuart Blackton for her transfer. There was no arranging to be done with Miss Anderson. When asked if she would care to go West, the little ingenue nodded an immediate and emphatic "yes," and straightway started packing up for the journey. Miss Anderson left the Pennsylvania station at 4:30 on Saturday afternoon, July 31, en route to continue her screen career in sunny California.

FLORENCE ROCKWELL SIGNS UP WITH FROHMAN AMUSEMENT FIRM

Florence Rockwell, whose work on the stage with the three "M's," Miller, Mansfield and Mantell, as well as with a long line of New York successes, places her in the front rank of dramatic artists, has been secured by the Frohman Amusement Corporation to star in its next photo-play, work on which will be commenced in a few days.

Miss Rockwell has all the requisites for beautiful picture work—face, figure and grace—and adds to these the ability to act. These charms, combined with her magnetic personality, make her one of the "finds" which delight a director's heart, and in the powerful play which has been secured for her, Miss Rockwell should find herself as great a favorite as she has been on the stage.

KALEM LOSES GUY COOMBS; ANNA Q. NILSSON ALSO CHANGES

After nearly five years of mutually agreeable association with the Kalem Company as leading man, Mr. Coombs has recently decided to make a change. He has played the lead in many characters entailing considerable responsibility and lately has been directing the pictures in which he appeared, one of which soon to be released is "The Night of the Embassy Ball."

Playing opposite to Mr. Coombs in the Kalem productions for a number of years past, Miss Nilsson has displayed much talent and these two will probably be working together again shortly for one of the larger film companies as negotiations are pending

"Fine Arts Films" is the name selected by David W. Griffith for his end of the big Triangle $2 pictures which are already in course of production at the Los Angeles Griffith-Reliance-Majestic studios under the personal general supervision of David Wark Griffith, aided by Directors John B. O'Brien, Lloyd Ingraham, William Christy Cabanne and Paul Powell. Allan Dwan, formerly director of the Mary Pickford Company Famous Players, will direct one feature picture here, after which he goes to the Triangle Fort Lee studios. The following stars have been engaged for the new productions: Lillian Gish, De Wolf Hopper, Douglas Fairbanks, Dorothy Gish, Wilfred Lucas, Owen Moore, the husband of Mary Pickford; Tully Marshall, Thomas Jefferson, Robert Harron, Ralph Lewis, Frank Campau, Rozsika Dolly, Helen Ware, Mae Marsh and John Emerson. The first features will be "The Man and the Test," "The Lily and the Rose," "The Martyrs of the Alamo," "The Sable Lorcha," and "Old Heidelberg." A great new stage is being erected for the new organization. Henry MacMahon has been appointed general publicity representative. He is now in California studying the situation and planning an effective campaign.

S. S. Norton, treasurer of the Static Club of America and one of the best known cameramen and artist-photographers of the west, left this week for a six weeks' visit to his mother at Buffalo, New York, taking a much needed rest, after which he will return to the Universal photographic staff. Mr. Norton photographed the big Bob Leonard feature pictures for the Universal program.

In an exciting moment while D. W. Griffith was supervising the taking of a Mexican war scene in the Mexican section of Los Angeles, surrounded by about 100 would-be fighters, the Mexicans mistook the aggregation for a war party and began a parley. Before damage was done, however, Photographer-in-Chief G. W. Bitzer began waving his camera and the Mexicans fled. Griffith reported that it was a close shave, yet the camera was a most useful weapon in more ways than one.

Raymond Hitchcock, the humorous comedian with Mack Sennett's Keystone company, while making a trip to Catalina Islands this week, accompanied by his beautiful wife, Flora Zabelle, in a small boat, was horrified to have his craft followed by a whale. He put on all steam and in the excitement failed to note that the whale was a comedian also, just waving to him the sign of Billy Sunday good fellowship, and his smaller boat collided with a tramp freight steamer. Hitchcock and his wife were thrown out into the water, but were quickly rescued by a Japanese fishing fleet, members of which pointed to the whale and told Hitchcock that he was doing his daily stunts. "No more trips to Catalina in a small boat for us," said the famed comedian. "I do not like whale comedy."

The Selig system of three, two and one reel motion pictures, such as are specialized at the Selig studios in California, are proving very effective. William N. Selig made the personal prediction some time ago that this class of pictures would steadily grow in demand and be more profitable to producers. That his predictions have come true is best demonstrated by the steady bookings of the one, two and three reelers.

At a salary of $15,000 a year, Melville Ellis has been engaged by telegraph as premier costumer for the Ince masterpiece productions on new Triangle program and he will direct his work from New York headquarters.

Nat C. Goodwin's first picture, "Business is Business," from a scenario by F. McGrew Willis, and produced under the direction of "Governor" Otis Turner, had its first showing to a selected audience at the Iris Theater, Hollywood, recently. A very favorable impression was created. Mr. Goodwin and other celebrities of the movies and legitimate stage were among the audience. The picture will be released through the Universal program.

The Smalley-Weber party, accompanied by Madame Anna Pavlowa, Edna Maison and others, have returned from an extended stay in Chicago and are now making headquarters at the Gower street studios of the Universal, where the extensive stage settings will permit the completion of the Pavlowa features.

Helen Ware, the Broadway star, has arrived in California and is to be featured in Universal pictures. Her first effort will be in "That Lass o' Lowries," produced by Bob Leonard, who is to direct the new screen favorite.

Essanay pictures featuring Charlie Chaplin, the comedian, and Henry Walthall, the famous character star, continue to be mutual attractions in this city. At several theaters the films are being shown to large houses and the popularity of both men continues to increase as Essanay features are shown.

The National Film Corporation under the general directorship of Bruce Mitchell has become a very active retreat with five companies actively producing. The first important picture will be "Captivating Mary Carstairs," featuring Norma Talmadge and Bruce Mitchell, which will be ready for release about September 1. The producing and playing staff numbers many people of note. The National management also promises big things in comedy with "Bill" Parsons featured.

Violet MacMillan resigned from the Universal last week and signed with the Balboa Company at Long Beach.

Jay Hunt took flight from Inceville to accept a directorship at the Horsley studio.

Frank E. Montgomery, late of the Universal and Selig companies, but more recently of the Liberty company, has been engaged to direct the dramatic animal pictures to be made by David Horsley at his Los Angeles studio.

Oklahoma

A new vaudeville and picture show, skating rink and dancing pavilion for colored people was opened at Oklahoma City, Okla., August 11, to capacity business. The new show house is owned by the Yale Amusement Company, with W. T. Cook, colored showman, as manager.

Kansas

The Kansas Board of Censors passed favorably on the moving picture drama, "The Passing of the Outlaw," which played in an Oklahoma City theater recently, but which picture was objected to by Oklahoma authorities. The Kansas board found nothing demoralizing in the picture, but declared it to be equal to a sermon. Not a picture is shown in Kansas but what has been censored by this board, which is entirely different and distinct from the National Board of Censors.

Thanhouser Film Corporation—it is reported this company now totals 8 reels per week, which brings the output up into the ranks of the greater producers of the country. Nine directors are employed and it is claimed the entire company has reached the rather large total of 64. Mr. Thanhouser, as quoted in the public press, says: "My plans for future productions embrace an enormous expenditure." Stock has been in better demand with meager offerings.

Triangle Film Corporation—Trading on the New York Curb in the securities of this company has been handled in a somewhat dramatic way, prices being marked up to $6.00 per share. As the par is $5.00, this represents 120 per cent, which hardly seems justified at this stage of the proceedings, as the company is just starting and, consequently, has no history to warrant premium prices. It is generally understood that approximately 75 per cent of the securities are tied up in a voting trust and that some of the trades now being registered might come under the term of "inspired."

New York Motion Picture Corporation—Activity was renewed in this issue, and trading ranged between 68 and 71. No definite word can be secured on future policy.

Mo., Saturday night, August 7, but failed in their efforts to open the safe, but succeeded in partially ruining it. Entrance was effected through a rear door which they pried open. The thieves then forced open the door leading into the office of the theater and knocked the combination knob from the safe, but failed to force the outer doors. The tumblers wedged after the knob was knocked off, which will necessitate the blowing open of the safe with dynamite. There was several hundred dollars in the box, including the receipts for Saturday afternoon and night. The thieves made no effort to disturb anything but the safe. They made their escape and as yet their identity is unknown.

Texas

The 15 prettiest girls in Dallas, Tex., according to a jury of newspaper men and photographers, are: Alatia Martin, Katherine Milliken, Jane Miller, Mildred Matry, Agnes Doran, Emma Powell, Mary Perry, Viviene Lichter, Lenore Kilgore, Letha Skiles, Olga Mangold, Helen D. Lang, Tess Jane Stevenson and Mesdames John M. McClure, Chas. D. Palmer. The judges didn't know the names of the beauties or how the other judges voted. Each judge had a booklet, each page was numbered and under each number were the words, Excellent, Good, Fair, Mediocre, Poor. As the beauties appeared in person on the stage each judge checked one of the grades. One judge admitted that "Fair" was the poorest he scored any of them. It is the intention to have a panoramic picture of the 15 and then individual poses. The pictures will be shown for 10 days at the Old Mill theater, beginning Sunday, August 15, and the public will choose the most beautiful girl for the real movie. The fifteen girls voted as the most beautiful of all of Dallas' most beautiful beauties will have their pictures scattered broadcast throughout Texas, also by the Vitagraph - Lubin - Selig - Essanay Film Company throughout the United States, advertising the Texas State Fair, which convenes in Dallas in October.

An entirely new censorship ordinance has been drafted by the welfare board of Dellas, Tex., to be submitted to the city commissioners, and which is regarded as a victory for the moving picture interests. The important changes in the ordinance are:

1. A board of seven censors instead of three as at present.
2. Appointment of censors is to be made by the board of commissioners instead of by the welfare board.
3. Places most important matters of jurisdiction with the board of commissioners instead of welfare board.
4. Standard of the National Board of Censorship shall govern instead of rules suggested by welfare board.
5. Censors shall not have the power to condemn, unless condemnation is agreed to by owners of picture, but shall only make recommendations to the board of appeals.
6. The appointment of censors by the board of commisioners of their own initiative instead of from a list suggested by the welfare board.

The new ordinance takes away a large part of the appointive power from the welfare board and places it with the city commissioners.

While there is nothing in the ordinance which says that the censors shall be a man or a woman, it has been generally conceded in the discussions following the moving picture hearings that the censor will not be a woman. The objection of the moving picture interests is, they say, women are too temperamental.

Femininity still further has invaded the realm of men—and conquered. Manager Stephen Von Puhl announces that commencing August 15 that girl ushers only will be employed in the Majestic theater in Dallas, Tex. Last season three young women were employed as ushers in the orchestra floor of the playhouse. Their employment was an experiment, leaving two young men ushers in the balcony. The experiment was a huge success and in the future nothing but pretty girls will be employed as ushers at the Majestic.

CHICAGO GOSSIP.

H. G. Webster, who has been director for the United Photoplays, is expected to leave next week to take a position with the Universal Film Company on the coast. Best wishes, Harry.

John Miller, better known as "Big Fish," and in connection with the Glamour & Yale theater, is experiencing the joys and delights of an attack of gout at his home. John is giving "at home" receptions every day to his many friends in the motion picture business.

Stanly Twist, erstwhile motion picture publicity man, is greeting his many friends at the Press Club this week.

Hayward Mack, one of the better known actors of the east, postcards us from Ogden to the effect that having seen the geysers in the Yellowstone National Park he is going to follow their example from now on and spout about himself at regular intervals.

Charles R. Stark was called out of town last week on account of the death of his father.

The Consumers Film Exchange in the Mallers building had a merry time last week owing to a disagreement between the partners, the sheriff taking possession of the offices for a short time. Mr. Levine, president of the company, straightened out the matter and the company is now going ahead in good shape.

Jack Rothschild, managing director of the Rothschild Company, 42 North Milton street, St. Paul, was in Chicago last week buying a few features. Rothschild has quite a successful exchange and is one of Motography's regular readers.

Hamburg, Engstrom & Company have opened an office at 308 Mallers building for the sale of display advertising, and have quite an attractive stock of enlargements of photoplay stars, suitably framed, from which an exhibitor can get practically any star he wants. E. A. Hamburg is president of the company and W. W. Wilson is the very able salesman always on the job.

The Midwest theatrical and motion picture managers had a convention in Chicago, August 12, 13 and 14, at the Strollers Club, where the following program was carried out: Thursday, August 12, 10 a. m., reception and registration at the Strollers Club rooms; 2:30 p. m., business session at Cort theater; 5 p. m., watermelon party at the Strollers Club rooms; 8:15, theater party at the Majestic theater; 11 p. m., luncheon and cabaret performance at the Strollers Club rooms. Friday, August 13, 10 a. m., business session at Strollers; 1:30 p. m., visit to the Selig Polyscope studio, where Mr. Selig and employes of the company entertained them and initiated them in the art of making motion pictures; 8 p. m., banquet at Morrison hotel. Saturday, August 14, business session from 10 to 12, after which the convention adjourned.

A. P. Scotty, assistant manager of the Kedzie theater, Kedzie and Madison, came in last week to state that his house closes the summer run of pictures on August 21 and opens August 26 with vaudeville, using pictures before and after the show. Scotty says that this was the best summer season for pictures that the theater has ever enjoyed and that they will probably go into pictures every summer hereafter. Mr. Scotty has a new No. 6B Motiograph which he tried out at the Kedzie theater, and which he compliments very highly, stating that it is the best machine that he has ever had and intimating that he will, later on, install the new model machine in place of the old model machines they are now using, both in the Kedzie and the Kedzie Annex.

O. L. Lassiter, who has proven so successful a booking man for Aaron Gollos, will go to New York to represent the Photoplay Releasing Company, September 1, where he will open an office to handle the bookings on Mr. Gollos' two-reel picture entitled "Sarah Bernhardt at Home." As Mme. Bernhardt opens in New York on September 18 considerable success for this latest venture is predicted.

George L. Cox is having so much success in directing pictures for the Advance Company that the concern recently signed a new contract with him at an increased salary. In filming even so prosy a subject as the Speedway races, Mr. Cox managed to arrange the film in such a manner that for the first time people in theaters applauded the picture and the Jones, Linick & Schaefer organization said it was the best race picture it had ever shown. Mr. Cox is to take a very difficult picture on Friday, August 20, being no less than a motion picture of a Caesarian operation at the Hahnemann hospital. He leaves on Monday for St. Louis, where he will produce a three-reel picture.

E. B. Lockwood, of the Lockwood, McGeary Company, advises that he has started popularity contests in Kalamazoo and Muskegon newspapers. Mr. Lockwood is at present filming the commercial activities of Elkhart, Ind., for the citizens committee.

About 350 exhibitors traveled down to the Speedway theater, 4710 Indiana avenue, after 11 p. m., Friday, August 13, to see the initial showing of the first episode of "Neal of the Navy" and "The Beloved Vagabond." This is some crowd and from all reports they were some pictures.

Roie C. Seery goes up to the thirteenth floor of the Mallers building to take charge of the Triangle Film Exchange, and Ralph Bradford, formerly manager, Chicago office Mutual, goes to Minneapolis Triangle office, where he is only three hours away from some of the finest fishing in the state. Ben Juddel, formerly of the Mutual Minneapolis office, comes up to the Mutual Chicago office.

F. O. Nielsen, owner of the "Guarding Old Glory" film, is spending a few days at the Astor in New York.

George Kleine spent Saturday and Sunday of last week with us in Chicago.

Vic Hoddup is tearing down a partition to make his shipping room larger. The little increase in his weekly envelope seems to have built a fire under Vic.

When you are in the vicinity of Sixty-third street and Harvard avenue, the electrical display of the Harvard Photo Play House will give you pause. If you want to see a m. p. theater that would reflect credit on the loop district, enter it and ask for M. J. Mintz, proprietor. Stay for the show. There is nothing better in Chicago. The house is fireproof—the air is cool and germ proof. The management knows the amusement business, plus that admirable essential, courtesy. General program is shown; The Goddess, V. L. S. E. and Pathe features are also used.

A chain of six photo-play theaters, to be opened in Milwaukee during the winter, will form the nucleus of a nation-wide circuit, if the houses prove successful. The company opening these houses is composed of four Milwaukee and two Chicago business men, chiefly men of the Orpheum Vaudeville Circuit, who are affiliated with a number of the biggest photoplay producers in the country and its inception is the result of a move on the part of the producers to eliminate the expensive distribution system of individual film exchanges and book features direct to the theaters. One of the new houses is said to be under construction and another is to be constructed soon on the site of the Plankinton House. The theaters, it is understood, will cost approximately $100,000. They are to be known as the Blue Light theaters and each will have a vivid blue light before the entrance. It is planned to begin operations in December.

The Triangle Company is making bookings in Chicago, charging $700 per week, fourteen reels constituting the show. Seven reels are to be run the first four days, the balance the last three days. One stipulation of the contract is that exhibitors must charge a minimum admission fee of 25 cents.

Clarence J. Caine, who formerly held down an important position at the copy desk of this exhibitor's "vade mecum," has invited the ad man out to a dinner at his new domicile up north. We don't think Clarence has designs, but we wouldn't take a chance with some folks.

NOTES FROM ALL OVER

Joseph De Grasse and his company of Rex players are still in the Bear Valley country, seven thousand feet above the sea, where they have gone to stage a number of exteriors in a three-reel feature entitled "The King's Keeper," with Cleo Madison, Arthur Shirley and Lon Chaney in the leading roles.

After a rest of several weeks, Warda Howard, Essanay's new emotional actress, returned to the Chicago studios, and is preparing for her next film with Henry B. Walthall.

Professor J. E. Nurnberger, renowned not alone on the Pacific Coast but in all other parts of America as well, as a musician and composer, has begun his duties at Inceville in the capacity of arranger of the musical accompaniments for the productions of Thomas H. Ince.

Since the incorporation of the Triangle Film Corporation the Keystone Film Company, under the managerial direction of Mack Sennett, has added a novel feature to its equipment. Hereafter each film that is released will be accompanied by special music, written and arranged by its own staff of musicians. At present Jean Schwartz, well known song writer, and Harry Williams, of "It's a Long Way to Tipperary" and "Under the Shade of the Old Apple Tree" fame, are co-operating with Managing Editor Hampton Del Ruth to this end.

Norval MacGreggor will direct Laemmle brand pictures as soon as "Colorado," featuring Hobart Bosworth, is finished.

Owen Moore, the popular film actor, husband of dainty Mary Pickford, has been secured by D. W. Griffith to play in forthcoming "Fine Arts Film" productions.

Charles K. Harris has written a new song, "School Bells," to go with the five-reel feature motion picture by the same name, which is being produced at the Kinemacolor studios in Whitestone by Perry N. Vekroff, and which will be released through the World Film. "School Bells," the song, will appear at the same time the picture is released.

On Monday, August 2, the Los Angeles Boosters' Club show was given at Shrine Auditorium to a capacity audience and hundreds were turned away. Managing Director Mack Sennett of the Keystone Film Company supplied over one-third of the program. The Keystone artists who appeared with the permission of Mr. Sennett were Raymond Hitchcock, Jean Schwartz, Fred Mace, Harry Williams, Eddie Foy, Flora Zabelle, Charlie Murray, Ford Sterling, Roscoe Arbuckle, Syd Chaplin, Mack Swain, Chester Conklin, Mabel Normand and others.

Richard Stanton, the Inceville director who has been directing Willard Mack in "Aloha" at Santa Monica, had to delay the completion of his feature, owing to an injury to Mr. Mack, who fell and hurt his back in one of the scenes. It was quite a bad injury, but he appears to be all right now.

Henry King of the Balboa company is preparing for yet anoter big feature which will be released by the Pathe concern. When Henry first directed a picture it was a sort of fill-in for one who had left suddenly. This picture gave the idea for the famous "Who Pays" series, which are still running and which have made lots of money for the exchange men as well as for the manufacturers. No wonder that King is held in high esteem by the Long Beach company.

Charles Chaplin announces that he has taken unto himself a new pair of old shoes. He has trudged about in the famous old pair until there is hardly anything left of them.

After several months away from the studios, Scout William Taylor, one of the few remaining scouts of the old frontier days, has returned to work at the Universal's Pacific Coast studios.

Nat Goodwin, the popular legitimate stage character actor, famous for his performance of Fagin in "Oliver Twist" was a recent visitor to the "Fine Arts Film" Triangle studio, of which D. W. Griffith is general director. Mr. Goodwin, clad in a Palm Beach suit, remained at the studio a good part of the afternoon renewing theatrical events with Tully Marshall, Douglas Fairbanks and Thos. Jefferson.

Lillian Lorraine, dashing beauty, is going to prove a revelation to screen followers when they see her in the leading feminine role of "Neal of the Navy," which Balboa is filming for Pathe. Her previous experience on the stage was not along dramatic lines. But under the direction of Harry Harvey she is demonstrating her fitness for cinema work. Costarring with Miss Lorraine in this patriotic serial is William Courtleigh, Jr.

E. J. Le Saint and his talented wife, Stella Razetta, have joined the Universal forces. Mr. Le Saint is directing Frank Keenan in "The Long Chance," from the novel by Peter B. Kyne of the Denver Post.

E. D. Horkheimer, secretary and treasurer of the Balboa company, is expected to return from New York shortly. While in the East he has concluded some imported business matters.

Inceville was honored last week with the presence of the beautiful and famed Kitty Gordon, the actress, who has yet to desert the legitimate stage for the motion pictures.

John Boone, who is playing the role of Kelly in "Blue Grass," which is being produced by the Equitable for the World Film, is a great grandson of Daniel Boone.

Governor Edward F. Dunne, accompanied by Mrs. Dunne, their three daughters, Eileen, Mona and Geraldine, and their son, Maurice Dunne, visited Universal City recently. The chief executive of the state of Illinois was escorted through the gates of Universal City by his staff, consisting of Adjutant General Frank S. Dickson, State Auditor James J. Brady, Colonel M. R. Kelly, Colonel James K. Finn, W. L. Sullivan, secretary to the governor, and their wives.

The Saunders family promises to become even better known to the film world since the member known as Ed has been made an assistant director. He is a younger brother of Jackie Saunders, a leading woman of the Balboa company. In school Ed Saunders was restless and didn't know what he wanted. He came to Long Beach recently and President H. M. Horkheimer gave him a chance. Under the guidance of Henry King he is making good.

Handsome Billy Garwood has commenced directing pictures for the Imp. He will devote his time to producing one-reel comedies for the present.

Neva Gerber of the Beauty brand visited Los Angeles for the first time since she joined the Flying A company some months back. Neva states that she likes Santa Barbara immensely and that she and her mother have a small bungalow and lots of callers. Neva has advanced in her work considerably of late months and is quite popular.

Miss Margaret Snow has been ill at her home in Hollywood for the past few weeks. Her condition was so serious last Monday that an operation was necessary and performed immediately.

Marc Edmund Jones, who has been for a long time recognized as one of the leading and most original scenario writers of this country, has joined the Equitable Motion Picture Company in the capacity of scenario writer, and will henceforth devote himself to the writing and scenarioizing of American photodrama.

At the "Fine Arts Films" studio in California the present list of feature directors working under the general supervision of D. W. Griffith includes John B. O'Brien, William Christy Cabanne, Paul Powell, Lloyd Ingraham and Allan Dwan.

Bessie Barriscale is at present hard at work in the production of "The Golden Claw" with Frank Mills. A bully good actress and a bully good actor opposite each other. Down at the New York Motion Picture Corporation studios they say that this is making an especially interesting photoplay and that the principals are giving their best to it.

Harry D. Parker, husband of Lottie Blair Parker, author of "Under Southern Skies," was a visitor at the Universal Coytesville studios while the film version of the popular play was being filmed.

Paul Powell, directing "The Lily and the Rose," the Griffith feature, has for his cast Rozsika Dolly, Lillian Gish, Wilfred Lucas, Mary Alden, Elmer Clifton, William Hinckley, Cora Drew, Loyola O'Connor and Jennie Lee.

Hobart Henley, the leading man with the Universal, is making quite a name for himself by writing his own stories and is turning out some mighty good ones, too. At present he is taking the lead, a fine part, by the way, in "The Tenor," a four-reel production from his own pen.

Orrin Johnson, the notable Broadway star, with Rhea Mitchell and a large contingent of Inceville players, under the direction of Charles Swickard, are baking in the sun of the Mojave desert this week, where they are enacting some of the important scenes for "Whither Goest Thou," the feature by J. G. Hawks and Thomas H. Ince, in which Johnson is to be presented by the Triangle.

"The Ivory Snuff Box," the mystery film, written by Frederic Arnold Kummer, produced by World Film with Holbrook Linn as its star, supported by a company which includes Alma Belwin, has been finished at the World's Fort Lee studios.

The new Brady-World Film feature, a picturization of Paul Armstrong's play, "The Renegade," of which Alice Brady is the star, will be named "The Lure of Woman." As "The Renegade" the piece was a notable stage success, but that title has been such a popular one in the film world that its use as a name for the new piece might be confusing.

Sadie Lindblom heads her own company at San Mateo, Cal., and owns most of the stock in the company. It is her intention to repeat some of her Swedish stage successes on the screen and is making arrangements to secure the rights to do this. The company will make one, two and three-reel photoplays and later on will go in for more pretentious pictures.

Conducted by Director F. H. Thornby, Miss Mollie King and her acting associates who will appear in the World Film feature, "The Code of the Mountains," have jumped to Lake Placid, N. Y., in the neighborhood of which woodland resort Mr. Thornby has discovered a number of locations that promise to give the settings of the picture an atmosphere of impressive actuality.

O. P. Hamilton, president and general manager of the Albuquerque Film Manufacturing Company, operating in Los Angeles, left Saturday for the West to start the production of new comedies for the Standard Program. Their first release will be a one-reel comedy-drama entitled "She Couldn't Get Away With It."

Before 10,000 Los Angelites and 2,000 denizens of Universal City, among them Nat Goodwin, Hobart Bosworth, Otis Turner and Henry McRae, director-general of Universal City, Madame Schumann-Heink, "Queen of Grand Opera," sang "The Rosary" just to please the great throng which had gathered to see her filmed in a cage of wild tigers one day last week.

Plans of Fred Burns and Tom Wilson to give the players at the Reliance studios a big gymnasium are maturing successfully. A subscription was taken up among the players, which yielded more than enough to build the gymnasium. An expert trainer will be in charge and will prescribe exercises for various members of the company.

Lillian Lorraine, the star of the new Pathe serial, "Neal of the Navy," proved herself a true democrat at a Balboa picnic recently. Certain of the scenes of the serial have been taken on the estate of Tom Doyle, the Big California cattleman, and he was so impressed with the players that he invited the entire company to spend Sunday with him. A hundred responded, "extras," stage hands, players and directors, and went in autos furnished by Mr. Horkheimer. A fine barbecue was served in Spanish style.

Cleo Madison has Arthur Shirley for her new leading man and Lon Chaney as the heavy, while Joseph De Grasse is the director.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker, MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

General Program

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial No. 65—Selig—August 16.—Carson Whitehurst and William Gompers, sailors of the cruiser Washington, who were killed at Port-au-Prince, Haiti, given military honors at funeral, Charleston, Mass.; sick children and their mothers taken aboard floating hospital Helen C. Juilliard in New York; silver-headed nails are sold during German-American week at San Francisco Exposition; submarine mine-laying maneuvers held in Boston harbor; Western tennis tournament at Lake Forest; sixty-second annual Scotch picnic held at Roxbury, Mass.; forty-eight of fifty soldiers of the tiny nation of San Marino join Italian forces; 50,000 women of London march to House of Commons to ask Minister of Munitions Lloyd-George for opportunity to help in war work; ambassadors for seven South American countries confer with Secretary of State Lansing and agree on plan to restore peace in Mexico.

Capital Punishment—(Three Reels)—Knickerbocker Star Feature—August 18.—Lenore Ulrich featured. Judge Basley defeats the bill, Anti-Capital-Punishment, which the Governor has introduced. Some time later his daughter is charged with a murder she planned but did not actually commit. Her lover, Jim Armsby, to save her, insists that he is guilty. On his own protestations Armsby is convicted. Judge Basley pleads with the Governor to pardon Armsby, but he feels that he cannot since his bill was defeated. Armsby is being led to the gallows when a witness to the death of Duncan, which was an accident, arrives at the prison. His evidence is accepted and Armsby is freed. For a longer review see another page of this issue.

The Bank—(Two Reels)—Essanay—August 19.—Charles Chaplin is employed as a janitor in a bank, where he falls in love with the stenographer. He finds a necktie with a note which reads "To Charlie." He buys a bouquet of flowers and puts it on the stenographer's desk. The cashier, whose name is Charlie, receives the necktie and thanks the stenographer, who in turn thanks him for the flowers. When she learns that they are from the janitor she throws them into the waste basket. Charlie sees this and goes to the basement, where he falls asleep and dreams that an attempt to hold up the bank is made and after capturing the robbers the president of the bank showers Chaplin with praises and the girl throws herself into his arms. Charlie wakes up to find himself hugging and kissing a mop.

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial No. 66—Hearst-Selig—August 19.—Army training camp for business men at Plattsburg, N. Y., is attended by prominent citizens of New York City; gold amounting to $52,000,000 received in New York from England as pay for war supplies; Aviator Niles escapes death when aeroplane falls into San Francisco Bay; equipment and ammunition stowed on battleship U. S. S. Tennessee, which leaves for Port Au-Prince, Haiti; New York policemen receive instructions in wig-wag signal system; soldiers of U. S. army given lecture on the operation of Panama Canal at the Panama-Pacific Exposition; lottery tickets sold to aid Red Cross in fund for soldiers, Rome, Italy; the Eastland lifted by monster cranes at Chicago.

Twice Won—Biograph—August 23.—Charles Perley and Augusta Anderson featured with an all-star cast. Robert Wall at a masquerade ball meets a girl in black, who later gives him a card reading "The Woman in Black." That summer he meets with an accident while driving and is succored by a villager and her niece, a beautiful girl. As he convalesces he falls hopelessly in love with her, but she will give him no encouragement. He returns to town and keeps his promise to meet the fair unknown at the next masquerade and informs her that he loves another. She unmasks, revealing the girl he loves.

Does the Woman Forget?—Essanay—August 23.—Wilton Barth, a young society man, goes to live in the poor sections of the city, where he meets Janie Dixon, a poor factory girl. Jerry, her sweetheart, is jealous. Barth wearies of his labor and returns home. Later Jerry and Janie see his wedding announcement to Shirley Mitchell. Jerry weds Janie and both couples appear happy—but does the woman forget?

The Barnstormers — (Four Reels)—Kalem — August 23. — Myrtle Tannehill featured, supported by a strong cast. Adam, the proprietor of a country hotel, falls in love with Nell, a soubrette, who formerly was the sweetheart of Jack, his son. Mason, the leading man, and Eppstein, the manager, induce Adam to finance the show, so Adam goes with it. Nell is fascinated with Mason, but the latter plays against Clara, who also fancies she loves him. The soubrette does not know that it is Adams' money which is backing the show and when she discovers that the old man is being fleeced she decides to quit the company. Mason and Eppstein wire Jack in the old man's name to telegraph $600 and his suspicion aroused he decides to investigate. Nell rescues Adam just as Jack arrives, and sick of the stage returns to Preston with Jack and his father. Adam gives the young couple his blessing.

The Spark and the Flame—Lubin—August 23.—Robert Gray, Dorothy Barrett and George Routh featured. Bob Benham, a derelict of the city, is seated on a park bench when Mary Hamilton, a country girl, who has thus far evaded the advances of the floor-walker, Bascomb, takes a walk in the park with the first pay envelope she has received clasped in her hand. She drops the pay envelope on the bench and Bob picks it up and denies that he has seen it. He goes into a cheap cafe, as he is hungry for human companionship and here he sees Mary, who because she has no money, has been grasped in the claws of Bascomb. Bob returns the lost pay envelope to Mary and realizing the good in him is stronger than the bad prevails upon him to leave the city and together hand in hand they face the rosy future in the country.

The Girl With the Red Feather—(Two Reels)—Selig—August 23.—Webster G. Burgess, the bank president, is told by Hill that Nellie Murdock, who wears a red feather in her cap, is the daughter of an ex-convict. Young Drake, Nellie's sweetheart, who has just been released from prison, tries to get, through a friend, some money from Burgess. Burgess goes to the home of Nellie Murdock and as he enters the house is surrounded by police. After some trouble Bob Murdock, Nellie's stepbrother, is aided to escape by Burgess, who believes him to be Drake. Nellie tells Burgess that the man he aided to escape is her brother and that Drake is waiting for her at a certain place. The three repair to the home of Burgess, where Bishop Gladding marries Drake and Nellie. The next morning the detective calls on Burgess and tells him of the police chase the night before and hands Burgess a silver card-case, saying, "I think this case belongs to you, although I found it at the home of the ex-convict." A glance of understanding is exchanged between the men and the detective leaves the bank.

The Cub and the Daisy Chain—Vitagraph — August 23. — The cub reporter writes a touching little story of grandma's birthday party, with daisy chains, dances, etc., when he should have written her epitaph. His girl saves the day and Jimmy gets a good job. Sidney Drew and Mrs. Sidney Drew featured.

Mister Paganini—(Two Reels)—Biograph — August 24. — Jack Drumier, Joseph McDermott and Mary Malatesta featured. The blind violinist known as "Mister Paganini" has endeared himself to the inhabitants of Willow Creek. He overhears a conversation in which he learns that three ruffians are planning to jump an unfiled claim and that claim was the property of his friends, Tom Evans, Shakespeare George and Stinger Johnson. Although he is blind, he goes back to Willow Creek before dawn and after going through rock-strewn gullies, over cruel hills and across treacherous streams he is found in the morning by Marietta Johnson. He tells them the story and Tom Evans and his partners sit down to await the claim jumpers, while Mister Paganini and Marietta ride to file the claim.

Hearts and Roses — (Three Reels)—Essanay—August 24.—Darwin Karr and Beverly Bayne featured. Ruth Willard scorns the affections of Dr. Norton and accepts the proposal of marriage of John Baxter. When her father dies leaving the girl very poor, she is jilted by Baxter. She agrees to marry Norton, but ignores his affections, and Baxter visits the girl while her husband is away. Norton decides to go away, but a wraith of the dead father appears and he goes back. The girl has awakened to the fact that she loves the doctor and when he returns she joyously throws herself into his arms.

Ham and the Experiment—Kalem—August 24.—Professors X. Periment and R. E. Search discover a liquid which will cause the ladies to fall madly in love with any man in which it is injected. They try it on Ham and Bud. Annette and Muriel are spooning in the dark and when they spy Ham and Bud leave their sweethearts. A policewoman is called and she also falls in love with the two men, and so does Miss Highbrow, head of the school which Muriel and Annette attend. The two men try to escape, but the rest of Miss Highbrow's pupils appear and they also make love to Ham and Bud. They call a policeman, but the girls make it hot for him. Finally, taking advantage of the battle between the policeman and their admirers, they hit the high spots in racing out of town.

Dog-Gone Luck—Lubin—August 24.—Tony Spaghetti goes to the dock to welcome his uncle from Italy. The uncle brings his dog with him and although both Tony and his wife hate dogs they decide they must keep him in the house. They go to the store and Tony's brother comes in and asks uncle to look after his money as he has been threatened by the black hand. They see uncle counting the money and think it is his. Later he overhears them in a conversation which is not very complimentary to him. He goes to a lawyer to make out his will. A short time afterward Tony pays his last cent for funeral expenses and then they go to the lawyer's for their legacy and find that the fortune is nothing but the dog. On the same reel:

The Victorious Jockey—Lubin—August 24.—Cartoon comedy depicting the adventures of a jockey riding the great race for which he is to win a beautiful heiress' hand. Of course he succeeds after a most exciting and thrilling race.

The Doughnut Vender—Selig—August 24.—Mrs. Morley is the sole support of her grandchild Otto and believes she can sell doughnuts to the crowds who come to see the circus, but is not successful until Pete Rose comes out of a saloon and resolves to make the men purchase the doughnuts. He tells Mrs. Morley to make all the doughnuts she can for the next day, and through the aid of Pete she disposes of her wares. She is pursued by a villian, but he is overtaken by Pete, who forces him to leave. Pete accompanies her to her humble home.

From the Dregs—(Two Reels)—Vitagraph—August 24.—Darwin Karr and Elenore Woodruff featured. Private Roy sent to military prison for assault, turns out to be the brother of the officer's wife. Lieutenant Curren, of the regular army, is assaulted by Private Roy of his company and later Roy is sent to military prison. Known as convict 125, Roy serves a year of his turn then his desire for revenge turns to repentance and he apologizes to Curren. A pardon is secured and Roy is reinstated in the service. War breaks out and Roy saves the lieutenant on the field of battle, but loses his own life in doing so. From a locket found on Roy, Curren's wife identifies him as her long lost brother.

The Fable of the Roistering Blades—Essanay — August 25. — Wallace Beery and Charles Stine featured. In a small town Milt and Henry, two highly respectable money getters, for eleven months and three weeks of every year battle to uplift the community, but every autumn they went skylarking in the Windy City. Every night of their week of hilarity they turned in with daylight tickling their noses and awoke entirely surrounded by towels. The fourth morning their bodies were taken to the Union Station. Two weeks later at the Union Revival Services when the Rev. Mr. Poindexter gave out "Yield Not to Temptation," Milt and Henry sang their heads off. Moral: One who would put Satan on the mat must get inside information at his training quarters.

A Double Identity — (Two Reels)—Kalem — August 25. — Marin Sais and True Boardman featured. Paul Brooks, a heavily-bearded man, registers at the Grand Hotel. He is assigned No. 12, which is next to 14, occupied by Brant. Rooms 12, 14 and 16 comprise a suite, but which have doors which when locked allows the rooms to be rented separately. Late that night Jenkins, a diamond buyer, in No. 16, is attacked by a masked man, who enters from 14. When Frances and Hilton investigate they find Brant in No. 14, bound and gagged. Two hours later Jenkins is again attacked and five diamonds are taken. The house detectives find that Brant has disappeared and meet Brooks, carrying soap and towel and clad in pajamas coming from the bath room. Later they discover the stolen diamonds and the man confesses hat he and Brant are one and the same person.

A Species of Mexican Man—(Three Reels)—Lubin — August 25. — Romaine Fielding and an all-star cast featured. "The Man" is first seen on the battlefield. From camp to camp his men bow in deference to his superior presence and intellect. The time comes when he is compelled to leave his mother country for the purpose of importing arms and ammunition that the war might go on. He leaves for the United States and enroute meets the daughter of the powder king, who leads him to her father. He places negotiations for sufficient arms and ammunition. Before his return to Mexico he saves the son of a widow, Hiram, and his sister, Rose, from an untimely end. Later the sister gives the "Man" her heart, but bowing to the call of duty he leaves a note for his sweetheart in which he tells her that when he is worthy he will come for her, until such time he will remain the "Man." Alfred Vosburg and George Stanley featured.

His Birthday Gift—Biograph—August 26. — Augusta Anderson, Mrs. Wright and Charles Perley featured. The wealthy bachelor's sweetheart is idle and when his birthday approaches she is too lazy to make him a gift with her own hands and employs a seamstress to embroider his initials on a scarf. The seamstress loses the parcel and the bachelor, finding it, returns it to the seamstress, having found her address upon the package. Later he receives a scarf from his sweetheart as the work of her own hands, and, realizing her true character, they part. He goes back and visits the seamstress, in whom he has become interested.

The Drug Clerk—Essanay—August 26. —Featuring all-star cast. The drug clerk is persuaded by the proprietor to take the part of his five-year-old boy, so he can make a hit with a rich uncle. The husband bribes a fruit peddler to kidnap the boy and write a letter demanding $5,000, which the uncle pays. The husband gets it back, thereby making uncle proud of him and the uncle wills him all his money.

Under the Fiddler's Elm—(Two Reels) —Lubin—August 26.—Justina Huff and Edgar Jones featured. Jim Chadwick writes to Rosalie Fletcher that he will soon have $25,000. Later Fletcher receives a black hand letter demanding $25,000 to be placed near the so-called "Fiddler's Elm" under the threat of destroying his new ship, the Flora. Meanwhile Fletcher's friend Stanley Beldon returns from Africa with a strange box the contents of which he keeps a secret. A fake package is put on the rock and while the detective sleeps it is stolen.

The next morning word comes that the Flora has been destroyed. Jim is suspected and that night a package of real money is left on the rock and again the package is taken and no trace of the thief. It is later found that Beldon was the thief, he having a well trained African snake in the box which got the money for him.

The Good in the Worst of Us—Vitagraph—August 26.—Harry Morey, Carolyn Birch and Gladden James featured. In protecting his wife from a companion of former days a young husband is nearly shot. The police—called by her—shoots first, however, and the crook's dying words clear the wife's name and restore happiness.

The Sheriff's Baby—Biograph—August 27.—Featuring an all-star cast. Three outlaws pursued by the posse find a mountain lion about to devour a baby in the desert. They drive off the beast and then take the baby with them. They are attacked by Indians, but refuse to desert "Little Partner." In a fight one outlaw is killed and another dies of thirst. The survivor escapes and seeing the posse in the distance fires a shot to attract their attention. The sheriff, coming up, is amazed to find his motherless baby in the outlaw's arms. He bids the outlaw go where he will, for he will never take him prisoner.

The Need of Money — BIOGRAPH—AUGUST 27.—Jack Mulhall and Irma Dawkins featured. The rich man's daughter thinks only of finery. Her father gives her a $20 note, which later she spills perfume on, and pins it to the window curtain to dry. The wind carries the note away and it is found by a young laborer, who uses it to pay a doctor bill. The doctor, in return, pays his rent with it. Her father consoles the girl by offering her another note. She recognizes the perfume and demands an explanation. The doctor is followed to the laborer's cottage, where the girl, her father and the detective they have summoned arrive as the boy's mother dies, a victim of the need of money.

The Mirror — LUBIN — AUGUST 27. — Crane Wilbur and Ethel Clayton featured. The simple mountain girl tells her two mountain lovers that the first to give her a new dress will be the favored one. Both men save their earnings to this end. One gives her a dress and a mirror, the first she has ever had, and the other says he can give her his love as a loyal husband, but his expected gift is not forthcoming. The next day attired in her new gown she is admiring herself in the mirror in a glade at the foot of a cliff. A rock descends and smashes the mirror. Believing it to be the work of her rival lover she hurries to his home. She peeps through the window and sees his invalid mother being attended by a physician. The savings intended for the girl's finery had gone to pay for an operation and the rock which had broken the mirror had been dislodged by the doctor's horse. She enters the hut and offers a woman's aid to the invalid mother.

A Battle of Wits—KALEM—AUGUST 27. Alice Joyce and Tom Moore featured. While at work in the woods Tom meets Sue. Tug, who seeks the girl's hand, becomes jealous and inflames Sue's father against the surveyor. Later Tug is given some mail addressed to Sue and on opening it discovers it to be a message from a promoter who has discovered that the railroad intends to lay its tracks through the girl's land. Tug represents himself as Sue's husband and receives $10,000 on an option for the right-of-way. Tom learns of this and goes to the Elwood home, but the old man and Tug attack him and make him a prisoner. She liberates Tom and the two start for the village, where they meet the promoter, who explains the situation. Sue's father learns of Tug's treachery and allows her to marry Tom.

The Wardrobe Woman—VITAGRAPH—AUGUST 27.—Kate Price and Mary Anderson featured. Mary Mooney, wardrobe woman with a musical comedy show, adopts Ella, an orphaned chorus girl. Her wisdom and fearlessness save the girl from the clutches of a human vulture and set her feet on the straight and narrow path.

Train Order Number Forty-five—KALEM—AUGUST 28.—An episode of the "Hazards of Helen" railroad series featuring Helen Holmes. Borden awaits an opportunity for revenge against Helen. The girl receives a message informing her that the freight of which Easton is conductor is to wait at Workman until the fast mail passes. Helen gives Easton a copy of this order and places the original with Easton's signature on the file. Easton, however, forgets instructions and averts a wreck just in time. He is rendered insane and disappears. Borden destroys the original order and Helen, being unable to produce it, is suspended. Later Easton, who is aboard a freight, is caught by a detective and Borden plans to dynamite the train he is on. After some excitement Helen is exonerated and restored to duty.

Billie Joins the Navy—LUBIN—AUGUST 28.—Billy Reeves featured as Billie who gets tired of playing in the pictures and tosses up his last one-half dollar to see what he shall do next and the coin rolls into the sewer. At last he decides to enlist in the navy. He is put into the engineer's mess, but he is a very bad waiter. He hires his mess mate to fall overboard and be rescued. After this heroic act he is congratulated by the captain and given a medal and one hundred dollars. The mess mate takes the hundred dollars on threat of exposure. That night Billie dreams that he is an admiral and bosses the whole ship, but what he dreams is the report of the sixteen-inch gun is merely concussion with a board in the hands of a husky sailor.

The Master of the Bengals—SELIG—AUGUST 28.—Bruce Gordon, a young animal trainer, falls in love with the rajah's daughter, Gaya, a beautiful girl, who in turn is loved by a native prince, Rankit Singh, who learns of the Englishman's love for his fiancee and conspires to have the foreigner killed. The prince tells the rajah that the Englishman has come to start a revolution among his subjects and Gordon is arrested and condemned to enter a den of man-eating tigers, armed only with a whip. One by one the ferocious beasts are made to do the trainer's bidding, and, filled with admiration at the trainer's bravery, the rajah orders him to be removed to a dungeon. The rajah is then informed that the prince is plotting against his throne. The prince leaves the country forever and later Gaya becomes Gordon's wife.

The Tigress—(THREE REELS)—VITAGRAPH—AUGUST 28.—Julia Swayne Gordon featured. Absolutely without fear, strong as a man and the wife of a master-crook, "The Tigress" steals the child of a wealthy man and lavishes upon it all the wealth of mother love in her ferocious nature. She becomes leader of the gang and rules them with a will of iron.

On the other hand she brings up her adopted son in total ignorance of the other side of her life. Finally the place is rounded up. The gang and "The Tigress" are arrested, but scornful to the end, she confesses everything, kisses her adopted son for the last time and dies by her own hand.

The Way Back—(THREE REELS)—EDISON—SEPTEMBER 3.—Featuring Miriam Nesbitt. Mary Wilson is swindled by her attorney, Kingman. In dire poverty and unable to obtain employment, she becomes the "business" partner of Dan Reedy, a crook. A Knight of the Trails—(Two Reels) Kay Bee—August 20.—Starring William S. Hart. Jim Treen, a road agent, is engaged to Molly Stewart, who has no notion of his secret profession. When she discovers Jim's hidden treasure cache she breaks their engagement. Though he promises to reform, Molly will not marry the bandit. Bill Carey, interested in Molly's savings, woos and wins her. On the eve of their marriage she entrusts to Carey her bank account. He leaves on the night stage. Jim Treen is notified of Carey's desertion. By taking a perilous short-cut over the mountains he overtakes the thief at the train and compels him to hand over Molly's money. Jim restores the savings to the woman whom he still loves, and Molly becomes his wife.

What's in a Name?—Beauty—August 21.—Beatrice Van, John Sheehan and John Steppling featured. Alderman Coyle Shea while fishing in the mountain brook with a cheap line attached to a pole becomes interested in a young man who lands a two-pounder with ease. Later the two are surprised by Dave Higgins and his hired man, who remove a pile of brush from a sign forbidding fishing on the grounds. They propose to haul Shea and the young man before the local justice, but the young man dumps the farmers into the creek and he and Shea make good their escape and part without introducing themselves. Shea brags about the fish at home until his wife and daughter Aileen are weary. He learns that P. Wadlington Burke is an admirer of Aileen's and announces that no man with that name can gain favor in his eyes. That evening he returns home and is dumbfounded when P. Wadlington Burke turns out to be the young man of the brook. Burke explains that P. stands for Patrick and Shea decides that Pat Burke is welcome into the family.

In a Japanese Garden—Thanhouser—August 22.—Mimi Sam, the daughter of a Japanese noble, is in love with a young American, but because of the strict rules of the country she has to use the most ingenious methods to snatch short meetings with her sweetheart. One day she does not succeed in eluding the watchful attendant, and the lovers are torn from each other's arms and hurried by guards to the pavilion. For a maiden of high birth to receive, unchaperoned, the attentions of a young man is a capital offense, and her father pronounces judgment upon his daughter. She is forced to stab herself to death, and the young lover, almost senseless with horror, is carried away. Then the young American awakes, for in reality all the foregoing is only a dream. He is a young cripple of sixteen who has fallen asleep while meditating on a miniature Japanese garden on the library table.

Drawing the Line—(Two Reels)—American—August 23.—The story is founded upon a verse written by Joaquin Miller, the famous poet of the Sierras, in which the leads are played by Jack Richardson, Walter Spencer and Vivian Rich. The man whom everyone had supposed an ideal youth yields to temptation in the city and becomes a drunkard, spending the money entrusted to him by the girl in his old home town. Later the man she had rejected because his father was a thief is the means of saving and reforming the drunkard. A longer review will be found on another page of this issue. N. G. C.

Glorianna's Getaway—Falstaff—August 23.—Glorianna is the coal-black maid of an actress. Said actress is invited to a costume ball given by an exclusive group of artists and sculptors, of which her fiance is a member. On the evening of the ball, the actress finds she has an extra rehearsal to attend, and leaves a message with Glorianna to that effect. Glorianna, however, who has a weakness for all such events, dons her mistress' gown and mask, and is taken to the ball. The rehearsal is called off, and the actress gets a glimpse of her fiance whisking down the street in his limousine, with the strange girl. The actress decides to humiliate her faithless lover, and finding the pair cosily situated in a corner of the ball-room, she strides up and tears the mask from her rival's face. The maid makes a hasty get-away, and the young artist manages to pacify his sweetheart. The next morning there is a note left by Glorianna which reads thusly: "I quit my job before you fire me. But I sure did have one grand time."

Farewell to Thee—Reliance—August 23.—Louise Fallows learns that Phil Brooks, an old admirer of hers, since gone to Hawaii, has fallen heir to a fortune in the United States. She goes, with Jackson, her partner in dishonesty, to trace Brooks and cheat him out of his legacy. In Hawaii, Louise finds Brooks married to Ana, a native woman. The adventuress bribes a witch of the island to terrorize Ana into believing that her husband will die if he remains there with her, and the native girl gives up Brooks and disappears. Brooks, with Louise, returns to the States to reclaim his fortune, and for a few weeks the little Hawaiian wife is forgotten. One day the American hears Louise playing on her guitar the Hawaiian song, "Farewell to Thee." She is entertaining Jackson in secret. Brooks forces from Louise a confession, and returns to the islands, where Ana welcomes and forgives him.

His Mysterious Profession—Beauty—August 24.—Webster Campbell and Neva Gerber are featured in this laughable farce that mixes baseball and clean comedy. Tom Blake is a star pitcher and goes to board at the home of a young woman with whom he is smitten, but learning that her two aunts thoroughly detest baseball poses as a pipe organ salesman. After he has been ordered out of the house, when the aunt discovers his seeming love for baseball, the girl's brother gets his two aunts to attend a ball game, where they become fans of the thirty-third degree and upon recognizing their star boarder as the pitcher, forgive his deception and consent to his marriage to their niece. N. G. C.

The Little Cupids—Majestic—August 24.—Dick and Mary quarrel and break their engagement. Each, unknown to the other, decides to go on a sea voyage to soothe their wounded feelings. They book passage on the same steamer. After the ship has sailed, the former lovers become aware of one another's presence, but they hold haughtily aloof. Dick's small brother and Mary's little sister, who have been taken along, are squelched in their innocent desires to play together. Dan, the cabin boy, is soon "on" to the situation. He constitutes himself Cupid and cajoles a jolly curate into bringing about the marriage of the reunited lovers. All ends happily, thanks to Dan, for both the grown-ups and the youngsters.

Snapshots—(Two Reels)—Thanhouser—August 24.—A banker in a country town plans to acquire the funds entrusted to his care, and uses his dishonest cashier as a tool. The cashier agrees to flee to South America, and to take the blame for the shortage in return for a share of the spoils. The editor of the town newspaper suspects the banker of complicity in the crime, and makes frequent attacks upon him. The rich man gains ascendancy over the editor, and has it in his power to ruin him at any time. The editor's daughter makes a visit to New York; and the banker receives a letter from his cashier stating that unless he meets the cashier in New York, a confession will be made to the police. Through the evidence of a photograph, taken in a New York park by the little cousin of the editor's daughter, which shows the banker passing money to his cashier, the editor is saved from losing his newspaper and the guilty men are punished.

Mixed Wires—American—August 25.—Edward Coxen, Winnifred Greenwood, George Field and Lizette Thorn featured in this clever comedy directed by Henry Otto. There are two Smiths in the story, one an insurance man and the other a traveling salesman. Each sends a wire to his wife, but the wires become mixed, with the result that the Smith who returns home, as promised in his wire, is arrested as a burglar when trying to get into his own home and the other Mrs. Smith, upon calling at the police station to hunt for her husband, is arrested as an impostor. The arrival of the other John Smith and the other Mrs. Smith finally clears up the mystery. N. G. C.

Pinto Ben—(Two Reels)—Bronco—August 25.—Starring William S. Hart. Pinto Ben is a pink-nosed cow-pony. A hundred head of cattle are rounded up for beef to be shipped alive to Chicago. Ben and his master, with Segundo Jim are put in charge. In the Chicago stock yards men who don't know range-bred cattle from a herd of mountain goats, inform Jim and Ben's master that the steers are to be driven into the big pen. At the same instant, two or three stock hands run behind and start the cattle and the beasts, one thousand strong, thunder into the chute. The two men in front prepare for their death ride. Suddenly Pinto Ben flattens himself before a high iron-bound gate—and leaps. The pony clears the gate and the cattle fall back on the other side. Ben's master finds himself sitting on the ground, the head of his dying horse in his lap.

Jerry's Busy Day—Cub—August 26.—George Ovey featured. Father disapproves of Jerry's attentions to his daughter. He favors a dapper youth who goes automobiling with father, and Jerry hides under the front seat. Later when father and Jerry's rival have gone in swimming Jerry finds their clothes. He picks them up and drops them into an auto and later gives them to two tramps.

He then finds the discarded uniform of two officers. He puts them on the spot where father's and lover's clothes were hidden, and then takes the rags left behind by the tramps and places them in the place where the officer's clothes were. After donning the officer's clothes father and Jerry's rival meet the two policemen and they are put into jail. Later they arrive home and find Jerry and the two tramps in the midst of an hilarious session, and, needless to say, Jerry's prospects for daughter's hand are at an end.

The Question of Honor—American—August 27.—Vivian Rich and Walter Spencer featured. Joe Wallace decides to leave for the city, but before doing so finds a buyer for his claim. One thousand dollars is offered, but they promise to complete the deal at 4 o'clock on the evening of the 28th. Later a letter comes from his daughter, telling of her husband's predicament, and that she needs $2,000. Another man comes and offers $2,000 for the claim, but the old miner had given his word to another man and refuses to sell for $2,000. When the 28th arrives the man who is to buy the claim for $1,000 has not the money and Joe refuses to grant an extension and he sells the claim for $2,000. He wires the money to his daughter which arrives just in the nick of time and he hits the trail once more to seek his fortune in the hills.

That Poor Damp Cow—Falstaff—August 27.—Prof. Leander is a collector of curios and valuable gems. He receives the gift of a cow, from the west, which, although she bears many blue ribbons, has no attraction for the professor. The servant is ordered to take the "animule" to the police station, but not having a "permit" for leading the beast through the streets, he ties her to the front porch. Later in the evening, the Professor, having had several drinks, feels better about the subject, and seeing the cow out in the rain, is afraid she will catch cold. He straightway has compassion on the forlorn animal, and leads her into the house to spend the night with him. During the course of the night, the unwitting animal pays for her night's lodging by closing the door of the safe on two thieves who are stocking up with all the gems they can lay hands on. Then she peacefully settles down in front of the safe door. The Professor receives a reward of $5,000 each for the capture of the burglars, and now he and the quadruped are the best of friends.

He forms a friendship with Mildred, the beautiful little daughter of Mr. Edgar, owner of the camp, who has a refining influence upon the untaught boy, and, in his turn, he teaches her woodcraft. Edgar is not a favorite among his men. Two lumberjacks, intending to hold Mildred for ransom, kidnap her and carry her into the mountains. Following Paul's instructions, she manages to mark the trail, so that the boy, following with a rescue party, is able to guide the others to the spot where the little girl is held captive. Mr. Edgar improves unjust conditions in the camp, and provides for Paul's education.

A Child of the Surf—(Two Reels)—Majestic—August 29.—Robert, son of a rich contractor, falls in love with Nancy, who lives with Grandfather Tom Darrell in a small fishing village. Grandfather Tom is so bitter against "city folks" that the young man disguises himself as one of his own laborers on the jetty. Robert discovers that the fisher people are in open revolt against the construction of the jetty, because it will cut off some of their fishing privileges. Robert does some daring detective work to safeguard his father's interests. This also leads him into a position to save Nancy from the compromising attentions of a fellow of evil reputation. Grandfather Tom, on learning Robert's identity, does not oppose his marriage with Nancy.

Universal Program

All on Account of a Photo—Victor—August 15.—Grace Howe is a pretty dark-eyed cigarette roller in a tobacco factory. She is engaged to Ferdinand Longer, who is "longer" and huskier than most youths of his years. One day, being in a sportive mood, Grace slips one of her photos with name and address in every fiftieth package of cigarettes. Theodore Long receives one of the photos, but Paul Short, one of his employees, finds it and writes to Grace himself. They both receive the same answer, and armed with bouquets, they sally forth to conquer. When they recognize the similar nature of their respective errands there is a mad chase over hill and dale by foot, handcar, motorcycle, auto, and on the cowcatcher of an engine. On the arrival at Grace's house, both of the men are ably tended to by Ferdinand Longer, who likes his sweetheart to himself.

Universal Animated Weekly No. 180—Universal—August 18.—Shriners win cup at field day of athletic Masons, University of Chicago; Madame Schumann-Heink charms film stars with her sweet voice at Universal City; passenger train derailed by broken switch at Irvington, Ind.; racing motorists defy death in daring dashes around track at Allentown, Pa.; sixty-foot whale caught on sand bar during storm at Rockaway Beach, Cal.; Karl Behr meets Norris Williams, the national champion, for his holding of Achelis Challenge Cup at Seabright, N. His Lucky Vacation—Nestor—August 23.—At the station, a crowd of girls are seeing their friend Billie off for a vacation. Jack is somewhat indelicate in forging his way through to the train. He incurs the displeasure of the fair Billie, and later, he tries to atone by being sociable with her on the journey. By chance they put up at the same hotel. Jack's phone becomes crossed with Billie's and he hears her send for a taxi. Hurrying down he bribes the chauffeur to change clothes and places with him. He is not a very efficient skipper and after a wild ride, the machine breaks down and Billie discovers his identity. While he is delving in the grease, Billie makes good her escape. Jack is arrested but gives the policeman the slip. That night Jack arranges a false fire in the hotel and saves Billie. She learns that it is another of his hoaxes and is so angry that when later in the night a real fire breaks out, she lays her would be rescuer cold. When she finds it is a real fire, she pleads with the firemen to save Jack. Needless to add, Jack has at last made a faint impression on the flinty heart of the damsel.

Extravagance—(Three Reels)—Gold Seal—August 24.—Mrs. Roger Stanhope and her daughter find that they have been too careless about the use of their money. Mrs. Stanhope finds that her debts are in the thousands, while her credit at the bank is only $200. Alfred Stuart, an old and wealthy friend of Mrs. Stanhope, has long had his eye on Minerva, and the mother thinks she sees a way out of the difficulty. Minerva, however, has been engaged in secret to Mr. Marsten, and when the mother learns that he also is wealthy, she is delighted, and Marsten and Minerva are married. Marsten suddenly loses his fortune and Stuart subtly tries to win his wife, who is acquiescent because of her weakness for money, and her mother's influence. Marsten's supposedly worthless copper stock turns out to be valuable and his financial status is higher now than before. Minerva arrives at the office just in time to prevent a fight between the two men. She blames her scheming mother for all the trouble, and concilation between husband and wife follows.

Billy's Love Making—Imp—August 24.—Mrs. Hughes who still considers herself in the matrimonial market, and who dresses her daughter of eighteen as though she were a child of twelve, repairs to the beach in the hope of being able to land a good catch for herself. They make the acquaintance of Billy Burnitt, and one day he is left alone on the beach with Violet. At a loss as to how to entertain a girl of twelve, he buys her some balloons and a lolly-pop. Violet thinks he is trying to kid her and plans to get even. One night, Billy gets a glimpse of her dressed in one of her mother's gowns, and she tells him later that the girl he saw was her cousin. After receiving many perfectly good boxes of candy Violet promises to fix it up so that he can meet her. Billy meets the cousin and makes desperate love to her, but when she alludes to the lolly-pop and balloon, Billy comes to and takes her in his arms. Mother appears soon after with a beau of her own and there is a double wedding.

The Cad—Rex—August 24.—Featuring Ben Wilson. Billy Garrick has been successful in his suit for the hand of Violet Masterson. On a hunting expedition, Billy is accidentally shot by Herbert Gale, his former rival in love. Herbert steals a locket from him containing Violet's picture. He pays an Indian to make sure of Billy's death and then returns to Violet with a false story of her lover's infidelity, enforcing his story with the evidence of the locket. The Indian's plans do not carry and Billy is nursed back to health by an Indian maiden. Violet finally consents to marry Herbert, but at the ceremony Violet falls in a faint when she beholds her former lover entering the door. Billy denounces Herbert who is driven out of the house and the minister unites the lovers forthwith.

Mr. Flirt in Wrong—(Two Reels)—L-Ko—August 25.—Mr. Rawsberry, a floorwalker and chronic flirt, admires the wife of his Boss. He gets into precarious circumstances and decides that a quick exit is good diplomacy. Fate intervenes, when, a block down the street, a paper blows out of the window and Rawsberry takes it in to accommodate the lady who had lost it. The lady was the Boss' wife again, and the intruder has to migrate quickly into new territory to escape the Krupps of the Boss. Rawsberry takes refuge in a bathing house, but is soon driven out by a brace of bears, which had come thither to admire the bathing girls. A gentleman who has been indiscreet with the liquor jug, is also present. Rawsberry escapes his tormentors by jumping in at the first open window. Taking note of his surroundings, he discovers that he is again in the Boss' house. We will lower the curtain of charity on Rawsberry's subsequent history.

The Chimney's Secret—Victor—August 25.—A decrepit old peddler hides a bundle of bills in the chimney of his hovel. Mary lives near the old peddler, and one day comes to his rescue when some boys in the neighborhood are throwing stones at him. Mary is saving up money to take her invalid sister to a warm climate. At the bank she becomes friendly with Charles the cashier. The bank fails and the cashier absconds. The old peddler sees Mary pounding on the doors of the bank, and returns to his hovel, where he sees strange visions of Mary in her sorrow. Mary enters the hut, and the old man shows signs of insanity, and throws the bills on the table declaring that he robbed the bank. Tearing off his hair and beard, he reveals himself, Charles the cashier. In delirium he gives the money to Mary and tells her to take it back to the bank. She departs, and Charles in the frenzy of insanity, drops to the floor, dead.

A Case of Beans—Joker—August 26.—Mrs. Newlywed is so engrossed in giving her best to her frequent bridge parties that anything is good enough for hubby. He resents having so often to eat beans on the corner of the kitchen table and decides to play a joke on his wife. He fills up an empty can with gravel and puts a new label on it. The women of the bridge party being scared over a burglary, decide to leave their jewels in Mrs. Newlywed's vault. The latter puts them in an empty bean can awaiting transportation to the vault. The cook and the ice-man discover the gems and do some sleuthing of their own. Some very odd developments present themselves in quick succession, and in the end, Mr. Newlywed is forced to eat the can of gravel. There is a happy ending and a readjustment of values, in which the young bride forswears bridge and beans.

His Egyptian Affinity—Nestor—August 27.—In the prologue, the Egyptian Princess' lover, Prince Hassan, is killed by Nebo, the son of a sheik. Centuries pass and the spirit of the Prince has become reincarnated in a young American and that of the Princess in his sweetheart. The girl, her parents and lover all journey to Egypt to see the sights. As they are visiting the ruins of an old temple, the Princess comes to life, and sees the spirit of her old lover. While they are comparing notes the son of the sheik also comes to life. The girl and her parents take refuge in flight. Hassan and Fatima also elude him by making good their escape across the desert by camel. The villain still pursues, but the only thing he can find is an old shakylegged camel. The speedy mounts of the two lovers, whose love has endured the centuries, takes them to safety, and they congratulate themselves over the second defeat of that dog, the "son of a sheik."

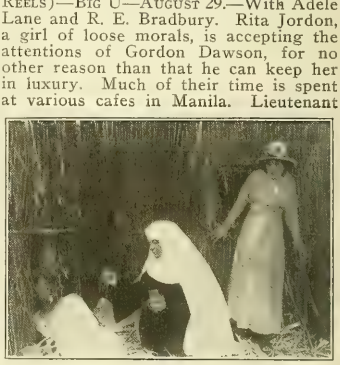
The Social Lion—(Two Reels)—Bison—August 28.—Mrs. St. John and her daughter while in the West have met Ted Allen, a cattle king. There is a mutual attraction between the young people, but Mrs. St. John is shocked by the rough manners of the Westerner. Ted and Anna are married and the party return East. Bryson, one of Anna's old admirers, tries to interest his old lover, and his polished manners rather belittle Allen's attractions. Anna's brother Bob arrives from college and under his friendly tutelage Ted advances rapidly in the politeness of society. Ted hears Bryson make a remark about his wife and punishes him in true Western style. Returning from a successful cattle deal in London Ted surprises all by conducting himself like an English lord. At the party to celebrate his return he is the lion of the hour. That night Anna leads her husband upstairs and reveals to him a crib containing her two newly-born twins. Ted stands aghast, and as the picture fades the four heads come together.



She Loved Them Both—Powers—August 28.—Robert Mace is married to Cherry Clark. After the wedding, his rival, Dirk McGraw disguises as Robert and rides off with Cherry. The great shock turns Robert's mind. Cherry learns to love Dirk for his daring and they are married in the West. He employs her to help him in his schemes to rob other men of their money Robert Mace becomes an outcast in the West, and he happens to enter the same saloon where Dirk is operating, and catches Cherry in the act of doing a miner out of his dust. He walks over to the piano and after playing a few melodies of long ago, he swings around and draws on Dirk. Dirk also draws and the miners shoot out the lights for their own safety. Both shoot and by matchlight Cherry with streaming eyes glances upon the dead bodies of her two former lovers.

The Lilt of Love—Laemmle—August 29.—After her father's death Betty is left to the care of her stepmother and stepsister, Irma. The mother is in financial straits, and to get money attracts numerous moneyed celebrities for Irma. Meanwhile Betty is kept in the background so that visitors will think she is only a servant. One night Maurice Beaumont, a successful composer, stopping at the house, hears a woman's most wonderful voice. The mother well knows that the sweet sounds emanate from Betty's throat, but tells Beaumont that it was Irma. After a clever ruse by which the mother had hoped to deceive the musician, having Irma step from behind a screen where Betty in reality is singing. Beaumont learns the true state of affairs. He denounces Irma and her mother and folds the happy Betty to his breast.

The Valley of Regeneration—(Two Reels)—Big U—August 29.—With Adele Lane and R. E. Bradbury. Rita Jordon, a girl of loose morals, is accepting the attentions of Gordon Dawson, for no other reason than that he can keep her in luxury. Much of their time is spent at various cafes in Manila. Lieutenant Clark is engaged to Amy, the daughter of the commander of a small army post in San Rosa valley. Dawson being out of money, Rita throws him over. Clark takes an interest in Rita and is anxious to see her reform. Through a ruse he is able to get her out to a little hut near the army post where she will be far away from the cafes in Manila. Rita is angry at first at his deception but she does attempt to lead a better life. Amy returns from the States and when Rita hears that Amy is to marry Clark, she immediately plans to hurry back to Manila with Dawson. But at the last moment all desire to leave is lost, and she asks Sister Marie, who has been a constant friend, to take her into the convent.

The Charm Against Harm—(Chapter eighteen of "The Diamond from the Sky")—(Two Reels)—American—.One of the most exciting chapters of this thrilling serial. The dance hall scene in this chapter is one of the biggest stage settings that has ever been erected for pictures. Esther and Quabba make their way into the mountains in search of Arthur Stanley, who in turn is searching for them. They all meet at a dance hall known as "Pete's Palace" and there, when Esther is insulted, a fight begins which results in a general free-for-all, engaged in by hundreds of miners and half drunken cowboys. At the climax of the fight the surging crowd knocks down the wall of the building and the struggling crowd is buried beneath the debris. A longer review will be found on another page of this issue.

The Yankee From the West—(Four Reels)—Majestic.—Signe Auen featured. Billy Milford, a Harvard graduate known better as "Hell-in-the-Mud," meets and falls in love with Bunhild, a young Norwegian girl. He and his pal hold up the railroad paymaster and later, through the influence of Gunhild, Milford leaves for the East to live down his past. Here he later meets the girl and also Dorsey, his pal, who being in love with the girl, tries by crooked methods to win her. His efforts are unsuccessful, however, and after returning the money which he has stolen to the railroad superintendent, Milford makes Gunhild his wife. Paramount

Sold—(Five Reels)—Famous Players.—Pauline Frederick featured. Helen, Donald and Wainright are all art students. Donald has never great success in the world and Wainwright becomes very wealthy. Donald places himself under contract to paint for Dolbeare, an art dealer. Helen poses for a painting which appeals to the lowest in Dolbeare and Donald destroys the picture. When Wainright tries to learn who the model was, Donald will not tell. Dolbeare fathoms the mystery and tries to make love to Helen, who is now Donald's wife. When Dolbeare threatens to put them out of the studio he has provided for them, Helen goes quietly to Wainwright and poses for him. Dolbeare tells Donald of this and when he sees a check given his wife by Wainwright he attempts to kill the other man, but shoots Helen instead. The wound is not fatal, however, and the pair are reunited.

The Secret Orchard—(Five Reels)—Lasky.—Featuring Blanche Sweet. Diane, the daughter of a Parisian star, is sent to the convent by her mother. Later Diane visits the home of Nanette, who has stayed at the convent with her and there sees the Duke of Cluny, who is married, but who sees the girl very often. When he leaves he tells the girl he had never intended to marry her and will never see her again. Duke Cluny's wife, at the dying request of Cora, whom she had befriended, consents to adopt Diane, and when she meets her betrayer in her benefactor's home, she conceals the affair. At last she meets and falls in love with Lieutenant Dodd of the U. S. N., but she feels she is not worthy to marry him with the stain on her character caused by the Duke. At last when Duke Cluny refuses to tell the young man why he and Diane cannot marry, Diane tells her story. In the duel which follows the duke is mortally wounded, and before he dies is forgiven by his wife. A happy ending to the affair between Diane and the naval officer is indicated.

Pathe

Pathe News No. 64—Pathe—Lifesavers of the United States Coast Guard give demonstration during Market Week at Chicago; women of Birmingham, England, take their soldier husbands' places in great ammunition factories; Dario Resta shatters world's automobile record for 100 miles at Speedway Park in Chicago; Charles S. Whitman, Jr., son of Governor of New York, well guarded at Newport, R. I., because of threatening letters received following the execution of Becker; Christopher Columbus is given stability test at Chicago; Ambassadors and Ministers of the South American republics leave the office of Secretary of State Lansing in Washington, D. C.; cartoon—grandmothers; suffragists present New Jersey sisters with a torch of freedom; coast artillery men at Fort Strong, Mass., give mine test in Boston Harbor.

The Sky Is the Limit—Pathe—A Heinie and Louie comedy. The two pals inherit a fortune, but they believe in circulating their currency, and do so with a vengeance. They take up their residence at a hotel where their lavish tips cause them to be much sought after. Heinie and Louie are invited to attend the tango cabaret to be held at the hotel. Things go smoothly until they attempt to dance. Then a riot almost starts and we last see them seeking safety in a place selected more for its security than its comfort.

Amateur Night—PATHE.—Heinie and Louie enter an amateur boxing contest. They give strenuous battle to each other, but their efforts do not meet with the approval of the spectators, who chase the would-be fighters out of the gymnasium.

Pathe News No. 65—PATHE—AUGUST 13.—More than $50,000,000 consigned to J. P. Morgan & Co. as part payment of war supplies, arrives at sub-treasury, New York, N. Y.; patriotic women of Birmingham, England, take their husbands' places in great ammunition factories; the fashionable lady of New York City now rolls her hosiery down over the tops of her dainty shoes; Mayor Armstrong of Pittsburg, Pa., opens the New Point Bridge; New York police learning the "Wig-wag" from a Naval Department instructor; troops march through London to outdoor prayer service conducted by Bishop of London on steps of St. Paul's Cathedral; Pathe's Paris fashions; Scotch lassies of West Roxbury take part in big outing of Boston Scotsmen at Caledonia Grove; train on Santa Fe railroad deluged with burning oil and destroyed when it collides head on with a runaway oil car; armored automobiles arrive at Plattsburg, N. Y., where business men are learning to be soldiers.

Universal Special

Mrs. Plum's Pudding—(FIVE REELS)—UNIVERSAL,—Marie Tempest is featured in this comedy, most capably produced by Al. E. Christie, as Mrs. Plum. She becomes worth many millions when oil is discovered on her ranch and later her hand is sought in marriage by Lord Burlington, who wants her money. She pretends to lose the deed to her ranch, thus being ruined and the lord refuses to marry her until the deed is found, but later on he discovers that he really loves her for herself alone and he again proposes. After she has accepted him, he learns the disappearance of the deed was only a trick that she intended as a test for him and that she is after all exceedingly rich. The Wheels of Justice—(FIVE REELS)—V. L. S. E.—AUGUST 23.—Rita Reynolds shoots and kills her husband. Hall, a burglar, is a witness to the murder. Her young lover scorns her. Enraged, she accuses him of the crime. Ralph is sentenced to twenty-years imprisonment. Ralph and his cell-mate escape and return to the city. With Riley's aid he establishes his innocence, by forcing Rita to confess. The story is by Edward J. Montagne. Theodore Marsden directed the production. For a longer review see another page of this issue.

The Ringtailed Rhinoceros—(FOUR REELS)—V. L. S. E.—AUGUST 16.—Raymond Hitchcock featured with Flora Zabelle. John Carter-Carter is a jolly good fellow. His fiancee pleads with him to stop drinking, but to no avail. Her little brother Billie asks Carter why Marybelle is so sad. He answers, "On account of a Ringtailed Rhinoceros." Billie determines to kill the beast. He visits Carter for advice. Together they plan how to kill the monster. Both fall asleep. Carter has a wonderful dream in which he has a remarkable adventure with the ringtailed rhinoceros. He finally kills the beast. Upon awakening he makes Billie and Marybelle supremely happy by telling them the ringtailed rhinoceros is dead. For a longer rveiew see another page of this issue.

World

The Master Hand—(FIVE REELS)—PREMO.—Nat Goodwin featured. Rallston marries an invalid, for her money. He drugs her and sends her to a sanitarium and brings up his daughter in the belief that her mother is dead. Rallston continues to lose money and appeals to his friend Bigelow, who suspects there is something queer about the disappearance of Mrs. Rallston and investigates. He pretends to be insane and arranges for his own admittance into the same sanitarium, which he has discovered by chance. He there comes in communication with Mrs. Rallston and he takes her away from the sanitarium. Rallston becomes suspicious of Bigelow's action and starts to go after his wife. On the way he is injured. Mrs. Rallston is reunited with her daughter and Bigelow is left contentedly with his little niece and his handsome St. Bernard dog.

The Little Dutch Girl—(FIVE REELS)—SHUBERT.—The old gardener finds in the lake a basket with a baby in it. When she is fourteen years old Little Dutch's guardian is taken by death. Lionel, a famous painter, persuades Little Dutch to pose for him, and Jean, the woodsman, becomes jealous of the attentions of Lionel. The girl's absolute innocence has conquered him and he resolves to leave her in peace. He tells her he must go, and poor Little Dutch becomes more and more quiet. One day Lise, who always delighted in torturing Little Dutch, tells her that her painter is poor and sick in the city and Little Dutch resolves to walk the two hundred miles to aid him. When Jean learns that Little Dutch has left the city, he also goes, looks up the painter and awaits the coming of the girl. When the girl arrives she is surprised and astonished to see a large gallery and Lionel lying on a couch surrounded by a riotous crowd of men and decolette women. Little Dutch turns and flees and Lionel tries to follow. Faithful Jean saves her from drowning in the river and takes her home. One day she places two rose-buds in her wooden shoes, asks her neighbors to send them to him and passes out from the open door to the edge of the lake and there slips in among the lilies from whence she came.

The Little Dutch Girl—(FIVE REELS)—WORLD FILM.—Vivian Martin is featured in this story adapted from Ouida's novel. Bebee lives alone in the little Dutch village. Lionel, an artist, visits the town. When Lionel becomes aware of the purity of the girl's love for him, he leaves the village. Later she learns that he is ill. Bebee unable to pay the fare to the town where he lives, sets out on foot. At his home she learns that he is consorting with questionable women. Her idol shattered, Bebee returns to her home and with a prayer on her lips seeks solace in death. THE Triangle Film Corporation will distribute productions made under the supervision of D. W. Griffith, Thomas H. Ince and Mack Sennett. Every production will be of the very highest type and each will feature well-known stars of the screen and of the stage, whose names will be announced from time to time.

Two five-reel dramas and two two-reel Keystones will be released each week.

As model theatres, indicating the way in which productions of this character can best be shown, the company will itself operate one theatre in several of its most important distributing points; such, for example, as the Knickerbocker in New York. These theatres, in which the prices charged will range from $2.00 down, will be of great service to exhibitors. Aside from the larger cities, it will not be the policy of the company to operate its own houses.

The first week's program, which will have an advance appearance during September, will consist of one five-reel drama produced under the supervision of Mr. Griffith, featuring Douglas Fairbanks; a five-reel drama produced under the supervision of Mr. Ince, featuring Frank Keenan, and a Keystone produced under the supervision of Mr. Sennett, featuring Raymond Hitchcock.

TO EXHIBITORS: Triangle plays will be rented to one good theatre only in each district.

Carnival a Glorious Success

MANY NOTABLES PRESENT

FROM the first splash of the aquatic events to the last dip of the dances, the incidents of the first gala carnival and field day held by New York Local No. 1 of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, at Brighton Beach race track, registered clearly and joyfully in the memories of the thousands fortunate enough to be present. With the exception of the little inconsistencies which will occur at any affair at which a curious and enthusiastic crowd is present, everything went off smoothly and to the satisfaction of all. But one event, the men's horse race, was contested, and that not because of lack of sportsmanship, but for the reason that a few of the rules governing it were not made clear at the start.

Every film concern in the East was represented at the carnival; some by a few stars, and others by practically their whole stock companies. Many were the screen favorites of note who mingled with the crowd, being surrounded, as soon as recognized, by groups of awed admirers. One thing for which the photoplayers have good reason to be thankful is that the "autograph bug" did not infect the fans. Probably this is an off-season for the autograph-clamoring fan. Whatever the cause, it has saved more than one actor or actress from a severe case of writer's cramp.

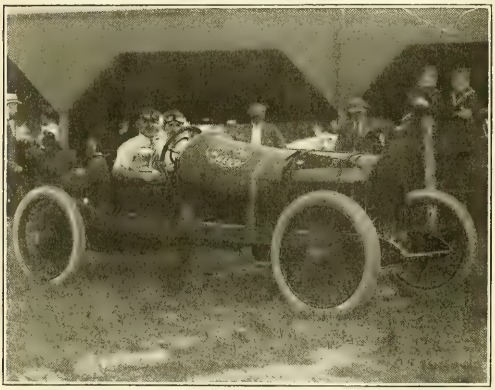
The aquatic events were the first on the program, beginning at 10 a. m. There were six of these, three of which were taken by Vitagraph and three by Thanhouser. Chester Beecroft and H. Poppe were the judges. The afternoon show began with a monster parade in which all of the manufacturers were represented. The Vitagraph float, a flower-and-girl ornamented beauty, took first prize, with Pathe's battleship, symbolizing "Neal of the Navy," and Mutual's float tied for a close second. Metro was an easy winner of the prize for the best decorated auto. The Metro car, a 90-horsepower Fiat, owned by Treasurer Joseph Engel, was decorated in striking fashion with roses and morning glories strewn lavishly upon the fleecy white material with which the car was covered. In the car were President Rowland, Treasurer Joseph Engel, Mary Miles Minter, Emily Stevens, Francis X. Bushman and Emmy Wehlen. A pair of snow-white pigeons perched upon the be-ribboned windshield of the car, while here and there a Metro banner flapped joyously in the breeze. The back of the car was garlanded in a fashion that made it look like a veritable arbor of roses.

Other novelties of the parade were: A company of Mexican soldiers, a troop of cowboys and cowgirls, tripping impersonators of Charlie Chaplin, replicas of the Goddess, an Irish jaunting cart carrying Kate Price and William Shea, and, of course, the ever-present and pleasing experience of seeing the flickering folks of the screen in real life. Helen Badgley, the Thanhouser kidlet, led the parade from the top of a horse whose head was almost as big as she.

The most exciting events were the motorcycle and ladies' horse races. Both of these were close, and both were won by Vitagraph people; the former by Jimmie French, and the latter by Edith Storey, who, it can be said without fear of contradiction, knows considerable about riding. The auto race, won by Metro, was another thrilling event. As was to be expected, the counterfeit Charlie Chaplins stumbled along in a manner tending to further endear one to the original.

Hughie Mack took the cup for the fat man's race by universal consent. No one appeared to dispute his fleetness. J. A. Fitzgerald, of Fad Films, too, was without opposition in the standing running race. To satisfy his conscience for picking such an easy prize, he gave an exhibition of the Roman sport. Vivian Prescott not appearing to race her, Edwina Robbins of the Vitagraph Company took the cup for the women's automobile racing event, and demonstrated that three miles around the famous old race course could be made in a remarkably short time.



In addition to these, there were the hundred-yard dash for men, ladies' race, Goddess and other contests, which combined to give the place the restless air of a three-ring circus.

Oscar Eagle filmed a number of scenes on the grounds for "Lili Breval," a mystery drama featuring Vivian Martin, which will soon be released by World Film. The funniest event of the day was the burlesque three-round bout between Billie Reeves and Harry Watson. It was a scream. The people poured down out of the grandstand and crowded up around the platform, determined not to miss a laugh.

A shore dinner was served in the Brighton Beach hotel at 7 o'clock, and after the speeches, the floor was cleared for the dancing, which held sway until a little after midnight. The officers of Local No. 1, of which Lee A. Ochs is president; M. Oestreicher, vice-president; Philip Rosenson, treasurer; Adolph Weiss, secretary; Thomas Howard, financial secretary, and Robert C. Whitten, sergeant-at-arms, are to be congratulated on the success of their first field day and carnival. And it was truly a gala affair. Thomas Howard acted as manager of the pageant.

To name all who were present would be like calling the roll of the motion picture industry. Some of the prominent ones at the carnival were: William Rock, George Kleine, Richard A. Rowland, Lewis J. Selznick, Joe Engle, Felix Feist, Carl Laemmle, Harry Arthur Cadwell, Metro winner in auto race.

Reichenbach, Arthur James, Joe Brandt, Julius Stern, Nat Rothstein, B. A. Rolfe, Lee E. Dougherty, Walter Brenner, Paul Gulick, Adam Kessel, Charles Kessel, Omer F. Doud, Chester Beecroft, H. Poppe, Marcus Loew, A. Carlos, J. H. Goldfrap, Edwin Thanhouser, L. J. Rubinstein, L. J. Gasnier, Al Kaufman, W. W. Irwin, J. C. Graham, John W. Grey, Sam Trigger, M. H. Hoffman, Jacob Wilk, L. Rosenbluh, J. E. Skerritt, C. E. Smith, Terrence Ramsaye, Dick Leslie, Joe Humphries, Bill Haddock, H. W. Van Loan, J. Sarzen, I. H. Harsall, Lou Rogers and A. A. Corn.

Among the screen folk there were seen: Francis X. Bushman, Anita Stewart, Bickle and Watson, Mike Donlin, late of baseball fame; Sydney Drew, Maurice Costello, Mary Miles Minter, Emily Stevens, Emmy Wehlen, Hamilton Revell, Pearl White, Arnold Daly, Edwin Arden, Bliss Milford, Harry Benham, Ethel Cooke Benham, Waly Van, Billie Reeves, Harry Watson, Lillian Walker, Flora Finch, Kate Price, Mary Charleson, Dorothy Kelly, Edward Earle, Herbert Prior, Mabel Trunnelle, Ethel Lawrence, Claire Whitney, Nance O'Neil, Donald Hall, Creighton Hale, Arthur Ashley, Vivian Martin, Joe Smiley, Lilie Leslie, Lorraine Huling, Dick Tucker, Bessie Learn, Allen Hale, Spike Robinson, Hughie Mack, a host of Universal stars, and so on, naming the principals in hundreds of photoplays.

BEVERLY BAYNE SIGNED TO SUPPORT FRANCIS X. BUSHMAN

As Motography goes to press, a wire just sent from Hollywood, California, advises that Beverly Bayne has been signed by the Quality Picture Corporation to play feminine leads opposite Francis X. Bushman, in future feature pictures, and will leave immediately to assume her new duties in Los Angeles. Miss Bayne has had several years' experience in playing opposite this famous star, and the two, understanding each other's worth and having teamed together in many pictures, will undoubtedly form a winning combination, one that will be popular with both the exhibitor, and the public.

ANNETTE KELLERMAN PICKS DIVING BELLES

Dr. Savage's natatorium has been marked with Annette Kellerman's presence much of late, and also with much diving, swimming, and splashing on the part of the hordes of the fair sex who wish to be of the Fox company which will leave within a week or two for Jamaica to begin work on the monster production in which Miss Kellerman will be starred. Herbert Brenon is to direct it. The girls for whom Miss Kellerman is casting are to play the parts of mermaids.

Thus far the work has been rather discouraging. "If they could only teach the girls to swim here," Miss Kellerman sighed as applicant number fifty crawled out of the water, and she instructed the assistant director to mark her O. K.—the twelfth applicant who had passed, "but it seems that the chief ambition in this country is to exclaim, 'I never took a lesson in my life.' That is not the way to master anything, much less swimming. I could get any number of girls for this sort of thing in Australia, and pick them at random. We are all taught to swim there." Thus far, two try-outs having been held, about twenty-five of the hundred girls needed have been secured. It is expected that some good swimmers can be found in the West Indies and about Bermuda.

WHARTON, INC., SECURE BIG TRAIN LEHIGH ROAD MAKES CONCESSION

The Pathe producers, Wharton, Inc., succeeded recently in securing the most remarkable concession ever obtained from a railroad. In filming the first episode of "Wallingford" it was necessary to show the private car in which that famous high financier dazzles the inhabitants of the little tank towns. The Lehigh Valley Railroad not only permitted the Whartons to attach a big steel flat car, properly equipped, to their best train, "The Black Diamond" express, but stopped the train twice to allow the taking of scenes. The special car had to be sent all the way from Buffalo for the purpose, but the railroad supplied that also, fitting it up according to the Wharton's instructions.

The Big Four Family, the private house organ of the V. L. S. E., which made its original appearance and has since been published under the editorship of Charles J. Giegerich, publicity director, has, since the issue of August 21, been edited by Leon J. Bamberger, manager of the sales promotion department.

Triangle Film Completes Plans

INITIAL RELEASES SHIPPED

REPORTS from the three Los Angeles studios of the Triangle Film Corporation indicate that the three general directors and managers, David W. Griffith, Thomas H. Ince, and Mack Sennett are supervising a very large output of film plays which will give the Triangle combination at least two months' start when it begins showing the first of the plays at the four model theaters in New York, Chicago, Philadelphia and Boston late in September.

The managers have completed and are shipping east the initial releases consisting of "The Lamb," starring Douglas Fairbanks, Griffith studio; "My Valet," starring Raymond Hitchcock, Keystone studio; and "The Coward," starring Frank Keenan, Ince studio. It will be gratifying to the countless admirers of the work of these leaders in the film art to know that the printing and the tinting are being done in the home studios and not sublet to outside manufacturers. This was one great technical secret of the success of Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation." Far more beautiful results can be had when these final processes are supervised by those who made and assembled the picture.

Other plays nearing completion at Griffithville are "The Lily and the Rose," starring Lillian Gish and featuring Rozsika Dolly; "Martyrs of the Alamo," a stirring narrative of the Mexican war; "Old Heidelberg," an idyll of student life; "The Sable Lorcha," from Horace Hazeltine's novel, starring Tully Marshall and featuring Thomas Jefferson; "The Scarlet Band," starring John Emerson. The new Inceville output will include, besides Frank Keenan's play, Dustin Farnum in in Alaskan story, "The Iron Strain;" Katheryn Kaelred in a vampire story, "The Winged Idol;" Orrin Johnson in a cloak-and-sword "Three Musketeers" story; Bessie Barriscale in "The Golden Claw," and W. S. Hart in "The Disciple."

Sennett. Normand, Hitchcock and Macc in "My Valet." Sennett Release.

Scene from "The Coward." Griffith's contribution to the first Triangle program.

Douglas Fairbanks Among his Mexican captors in "The Lamb" the first Ince release.

Both Raymond Hitchcock and Eddie Foy are working separately on two stellar plays for Mack Sennett at Keystone. Raymond Hitchcock will follow "My Valet" with an oriental story. One of Eddie Foy's offerings will be an amusing circus story entitled "A Favorite Fool." Hale Hamilton has completed a stage romance, assisted by Polly Moran, entitled 'Her Painted Hero."

The four model theaters will be the Knickerbocker, New York, opening Saturday, September 18; the Studebaker, Chicago, and the Chestnut Street Opera House, Philadelphia, opening probably a month later; and a house in Boston, the name yet to be announced, opening about October 1. The service to the theaters outside the four large cities is scheduled to begin through regular exchanges about the middle of October.

Extensive structural alterations are now being made at the Knickerbocker theater under the direction of Architect McElfatrick. Similar changes will be put into effect in the other theaters. Several novelties in theater management will be inaugurated.

WORLD FILM DIVISION MANAGERS DISCUSS EQUITABLE ALIGNMENT

For three days during the past week the division managers of the World Film Corporation were in executive session in New York City, for the purpose of having placed before them a general sales campaign for the new Equitable program, which World Film will put out beginning September 20, and a general course of instructions on the sales development work and the territorial handling for that company.

The five division managers in attendance were George J. Schaefer, eastern division manager, New York; Denham Palmer, east central division manager, Cleveland; W. W. Drum, west central division manager, Chicago; W. E. Knotts, western division manager, San Francisco; and Jos. E. Klein, southern division manager, New Orleans.

The first three days and most of the first three nights were spent entirely with the assistant general manager, Harry C. Drum, in reviewing and outlining in great detail the general sales development methods and business systems which he has inaugurated for the World Film Corporation.

After these were thoroughly gone into, detailed and discussed at great length, a general consideration of the film business and work of the World Film Corporation was gone over and advance methods for the future handling of the film business were outlined and recorded.

One of the most advanced and thorough methods of sales development and sales handling ever established in any commercial line was thoroughly outlined by the assistant general manager, and same is being compiled and put in book form for distribution throughout the World Film Corporation branches and the World Film division managers. Its commercial value has already been commented on by prominent men in other well known commercial lines, and it is unquestionably by far the nearest approach to commercialization of the film game that has been attempted up to the present time.

Tuesday night, Lewis J. Selznick, vice president and general manager of the World Film Corporation and vice president and advisory director of the Equitable Film Corporation, held a reception to the division managers, at which time he, with A. Spiegel, president of the Equitable Film Corporation, and Milton Work, chairman of the executive board of the World Film Corporation, reviewed the work that had been accomplished and went over in detail the plans outlined and adopted, and all of them were enthusiastic in pronouncing them by far the best they had ever seen. They also expressed their assurance that these methods and the men handling them would unquestionably give to the World Film Corporation the maximum possibilities to be obtained in any territory. Mr. Selznick made a most encouraging speech to the boys from the field, offered a great many helpful suggestions on the plans which had been adopted, criticised them, carefully reviewed the efforts which he had put forth to give to them the strongest program he thinks can be offered by any concern in the film game today. He furthermore gave them the assurance that in his broadness he had not failed to take into consideration and correct the mistakes which had been made in the past, and that he was constantly laboring for the World Film Corporation and its relation to exhibitors as well as to employees, and that they might expect from him and his company in the future a program which could not be equaled, also the solidity of business principles which would not alone assure them of their future, but assure their customers of the utmost in co-operative business dealings at all times.

Wednesday morning was consumed in a general outline of the Equitable sales campaign as outlined by the assistant general manager, the party being joined by Felix Feist, secretary and general manager of the Equitable Film Corporation.

A campaign for the efficient development of the entire United States on advanced commercial lines was outlined and adopted and the division managers were thoroughly acquainted with the Equitable proposition, its creation, purposes and its product. They were unusually enthusiastic in their praise of the Equitable proposition, and with the wonderful subject of "Trilby" as their first release, they gave every assurance that the Equitable program would in its first week surpass most of the programs which have been on the market for years.

Wednesday afternoon was entirely devoted to the consideration of departmental details of the home office and a reviewal of the auditing, purchasing, advertising and film departments, as they relate to the branches.

The division managers departed for their respective territories Wednesday night and are now busy inaugurating in their branches the various methods and systems which were outlined at this meeting, as well as pushing to rapid completion the sales campaign for the Equitable.

HENRY JAMES JOINS BROTHER ARTHUR IN METRO ORGANIZATION

Metro Pictures Corporation announced on Tuesday that it had signed up Henry James, formerly of the Mutual Film Corporation. Henry James will be associated with his brother Arthur James in the advertising and publicity work of the Metro, and will engage immediately on a special campaign.

Henry James made an enviable record as business, advertising and circulation manager of Reel Life, and as the result of his expert handling that publication was turned from a money loser into a profit maker in twelve months. He brings to his new position special training in efficiency and economy methods as, prior to his entry into the motion picture industry he headed one of the largest selling organizations in Europe, the Orient and the Antipodes. The two brothers, working together, hope to create some entirely new and original publicity work.

Freuler Appoints Efficiency Men

GETTING CLOSER TO EXHIBITORS

A CREW of efficiency men will cover the United States for the Mutual Film Corporation to facilitate and improve the service and distribution of the Mutual's new $8,000,000 program and masterpieces.

These efficiency men will study the conditions surrounding exhibitors in every territory and endeavor to instruct them in the use of the advertising and publicity helps put out by the home office of the Mutual in New York. It will be a large part of the efficiency crew's work to show the exhibitor how to get the highest possible financial return from the use of the Mutual's releases.

This efficiency crew and the matter of "promises and performances" on the Mutual program are the texts of President John R. Freuler's weekly statement addressed to exhibitors.

"The exhibitors probably have heard from the branch managers a great deal about what we have coming," said Mr. Freuler. "I have said repeatedly that certain big important things are coming. The exhibitors who know me have rested content and gone ahead making their plans on what they have known could be considered certainties. Those exhibitors know me and my work. But naturally there are thousands of other exhibitors whom I have not been fortunate enough to meet, and they, not knowing me, have been unable to gauge the weight of my promises, to decide if my promises were just talk, or a combination of talk, action and performance. The announcements in the trade papers show that I am living up to my promises. The exhibitors have had a glimpse at one reel that shows the bright light of the new all-star-all-feature program. I refer to 'The Funniest Man in America.' He is making good. Other proofs in the form of 'goods delivered' are following rapidly. Look at the announcements of the Broadway Star features, the smashing big Rialto Star features, the American and the Thanhouser Star features—big Broadway stars. Quality has been the first consideration in the making of contracts with manufacturers for this big $8,000,000 program.

"But business consists of service as well as goods. We are centralizing the authority in the home office for the express purpose of keeping this New York office closely in touch with the exhibitor. Heretofore branch managers of the Mutual worked through district managers and communicated with the home office through them. This tended to make the organization unresponsive, and kept everybody from getting action right away, when action could do the most good. Information grew cold and stale before it reached the home office. It had a tendency to spoil in transit.

"This is a rapid-fire business. A fact that means big opportunity today may mean nothing at all tomorrow. The old system failed to respond fast enough.

"Now we have every branch manager in direct communication with the home office. They are given advance information even before it can find its way into print. This is the idea—I am keeping the branch managers so closely in touch with the home office that they can talk to the exhibitor just as I would talk to him if the exhibitor could come into my office here in New York.

"We are appointing efficiency men whose work in the field will be to carry the home office ideas out into the field and help along this process of keeping the branch manager, and the exhibitor, too, in touch. These efficiency men are those who have proven experts in their individual department, such as investigating exchange poster department, booking department, the appearance of an office and the character of the treatment exhibitors are receiving, shipping service, the condition of the film as it is received and as it goes out. We feel that we have an unusually efficient crew of men, but we also mean constantly to improve. The new $8,000,000 Mutual program means not only wonderful film, but also wonderful service."

MARY PICKFORD EXTENDED UNUSUAL HONOR

Mary Pickford, the most popular motion picture star in the world, whose amazing photographic personality has caused her to be called "the spirit of the screen," has formally accepted the invitation of Mayor Clarence E. F. Hetrick, of Asbury Park, to be the city's guest of honor during a silver jubilee baby parade to be held August 23-25. The request for Miss Pickford's presence at this interesting occasion was made in response to a demand of the public of Asbury Park, who had been asked to state their preference as to the city's guest of honor by individual ballot. This is probably the first time that a motion picture star has ever been extended such a signal honor by the officials of a city, and in all the twenty-five years during which the city of Asbury Park has annually celebrated a baby parade, Miss Pickford is the first actress to be tendered this preference.

Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players Film Company, under whose management Miss Pickford has appeared for the last three years, has arranged a novel feature for the occasion in an exhibition of the Famous Players' film version of the children's classic, "Cinderella," starring the screen idol, which will be presented at one of Asbury Park's leading photoplay theaters, at which the little star will present the lucky baby whom she selects, a beautiful portrait of herself, autographed "To My Favorite Baby."

Miss Pickford will be accompanied to Asbury Park by her mother, Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Zukor, Daniel Frohman, Edwin S. Porter, Albert A. Kaufman, and B. P. Schulberg of the Famous Players Film Company.

EQUITABLE MAKES AN IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT

The Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, now drawing close to the date of its first release, September 20, at which time "Trilby," the brilliant work of Maurice Tourneur, and featuring Clara Kimball Young and Wilton Lackaye, will be sent out as a regular release, announces today another impressive innovation looking forward to the direct aid of exhibitors as intimated in the announcement of that concern in last week's trade papers.

The plan is a simple but effective one and demonstrates to what extent this new and determined organization is going to make good its pre-release promises.

There are five division points of the World Film distributional zones. Each of these divisions are under the direct and personal influence of a proven expert. This expert has by reason of long and ardent attention to detail reached his position from some more obscure position with the World Film. At each of these division points, beginning within the next few weeks, there will be stationed an advertising and exploitation expert. These experts will have but one object, namely, to aid the exhibitor who feels that outside aid will help his business.

These advertising men will be instructed that in no manner should they talk "selling." Their sole object will be to aid and assist the exhibitor to reach his public.

The men to be engaged for this experiment are well known legitimate advance agents who for the past ten years have been traveling ahead of high class legitimate attractions blazing the trail of their shows by original methods and by hard, efficient work.

These advance agents will be under the control of division managers and when the division manager happens across an exhibitor whose attention to exploitation, or lack of knowledge along advertising lines prevents him from getting what he should out of the attractions showing in his house, if that exhibitor is playing Equitable or World Film attractions or contemplates playing them, the division manager immediately installs one of the advertising geniuses at the house for a short period at no cost to the exhibitor, and the work of exploitation and lobby display is handled by the agent, under the eye of the manager who, when he is given the proper start, can be relied upon to continue the good work.

The men selected by Equitable are well known in their line and men who have enjoyed prosperous, successful careers with such prominent and exacting managers as Belasco, Henry B. Harris, John Cort, the Shuberts and Klaw & Erlanger. The men will receive salaries equivalent to their usual recompense with high-class shows and will be given free hands after appointment by division managers to Equitable or World Film houses.

BALLOONS CARRY LIGHTS FOR NIGHT PHOTOPLAY SCENE

In staging its fire scene for the final act in Essanay's six-act feature, "The Man Trail," adapted from the recently published novel by Henry Owen, a unique arrangement was made to get the proper lighting effect, as the scene was taken at night. The village, consisting of fifty buildings in all, was fired at eight o'clock in the evening. Lights were erected on great stilts all around the village, while two balloons, tied to trees, carried several hundred lights suspended on a wire between them and connected by a ground wire with the electric light plant at Waukegan. This lighted up the village almost as brightly as day and provided for taking scenes before the fire was well under way.

The fire was started by the explosion of a powder magazine. One man, a member of the Illinois National Guard, was critically injured by a board being driven through his side in the explosion. Several other guardsmen were slightly injured and burned. This photoplay, which features Richard C. Travers, June Keith, Ernest Maupain, and John Lorenz, is Essanay's September release on V. L. S. E. program.

DOLORES CASSINELLI SIGNS WITH EMERALD FILM COMPANY

In its last issue MOTOGRAPHY mentioned that the Emerald Motion Picture Company would shortly announce the signing of a star well known to exhibitors all over the United States, and this week is able to state that Dolores Cassinelli, who for some months played leading roles with a prominent Chicago organization, has been signed as leading woman with the Emerald Company and will play the lead in its first four-reel feature, which is to be made in the vicinity of Richmond, Va. Miss Cassinelli will be recalled as a winner of a popularity contest held some years ago by the Motion Picture Story Magazine and in which contest she received over 333,000 votes. She is said to be one of the most beautiful actresses the screen has brought forth and is an ardent enthusiast over outdoor recreation and aside from motion picture work is studying for grand opera, since she possesses a dramatic soprano voice of wonderful register. It seems evident that the Emerald Company has secured an asset of great value in arranging with Miss Cassinelli to play leading roles in its forthcoming feature productions.

CUB RELEASE DAY CHANGED OVEY COMEDIES ON FRIDAYS

A shift has been made in the release day of the Cub comedies on the Mutual program. Up to and including the release of September 9 the Cub one-reelers have and will be released on Thursdays, but beginning the week of September 13 these David Horsley productions will be released on Fridays. The first release by this arrangement will then be made Friday, September 17, and continued on that day thereafter.

Although new on the Mutual program, the first release having been made August 19, these comedies are already much in demand. Pre-release date exhibitions were given for the benefit of Mutual exhibitors and the Cub warmly welcomed.

George Ovey, who is said to be the funniest man in America, is featured in all the Cub releases. He is an excellent pantomimist with a great range of facial expression. In all the Cub releases made so far he has assumed the character of Jerry, a whimsical fellow who finds it an utter impossibility to keep out of trouble. Once he gets into it, he sinks deeper and deeper, the fun increasing meanwhile.

Preparations are under way at the Griffith studio for the filming of high class feature productions with present day legitimate stage stars in the stellar roles.

Posters as an Aid to Advertising

By JOHN W. GREY

FOR the past five years a series of evolutionary factors of a revolutionary nature have been taking place in the film business and with the advent of the longer subject more attention has been paid to the advertising end of the film industry than perhaps any other. One branch of advertising that has received particular attention is the posters. Posters as a means of publicity promotion now occupy a position in the foremost rank of advertising aids, and particular care and attention should be given to this valuable adjunct. In its original state and as formerly used, the poster was conceived and executed from a still picture, generally done in three to four colors without any attention given to artistic lay-out and color treatment. The lithographer was given a still picture and told to make a poster of the same. The whole plan and scope of this was left entirely up to Mr. Lithographer and he treated it in any way he saw fit. It made no difference whether the still particularly applied to the picture or not, so long as it suggested action or contained the leading characters.

A Popini Poster.

This particular method of poster selection has been going on now for a great many years and to Albert E. Smith, treasurer of the Vitagraph Company and president of the V. L. S. E., the credit of changing this method particularly belongs. Mr. Smith undoubtedly saw "the writing on the wall" and knew that the time had arrived when a poster must fill a purpose other than illustrating a particular scene from a play. He was probably the first man who realized that artistic treatment of the subject in an allegorical way would do more toward influencing a clientele of a theater or creating new patronage. This realization naturally involved a change of the whole method of procedure. Instead of trusting to the highly artistic qualities of Mr. Lithographer he decided to have the work executed in a manner befitting its importance. Investigation of the artistic field proved that there were probably four artists in the country today who had what is known as originality and style.

After due consideration and many trials, Alex Popini and Louis Fancher were decided upon as being the most likely creators of artistic postery. Accordingly, contracts were entered into with Popini and Fancher to execute and create posters for Blue Ribbon features.

First, the artist reviews the film three or four times and selects what he thinks will be the most salient points from the dramatic end. The scenario is then read and stills are selected approximating these episodes. The artist then works up an allegorical treatment of the theme, putting the same in the colors necessary to create the most artistic effect.

There is a belief today that a great number of colors will create the most artistic poster. This is a fallacy and in a number of instances has been proven to be such. Take for instance the case of "Mortmain." The posters on this subject are executed in three colors instead of the proverbial old style of four, five and six color treatment. Popini, the artist who created the posters on "Mortmain," after due deliberation decided that the most artistic color scheme to utilize would be a prevailing theme of blue. Accordingly he built around a blue motif, as it were, using different tones and tints of blue in combination with a brilliant yellow or orange. Blacks were entirely eliminated and it might be here stated that the use of black key plates are primarily responsible for the majority of poor posters that appear on the market today. Most lithographers feel that it is necessary to draw the whole poster on a black key plate and then put their colors on where specified. This black treatment leaves harsh, determinate lines which have no use from the artistic end, and harm rather than aid the color treatment.

After many trials and tribulations, it was decided that the only way to overcome this bug-bear on the part of the lithographer was to execute the sketches on the stone. Accordingly with every Blue Ribbon feature and every Vitagraph subject, the artist who designs and creates the sketches, places them on the stone himself. This naturally takes a great deal of time and is only possible on account of a special arrangement with the lithographers, as the lithographic union in most cases prohibits any one from entering their establishments unless he is a member of the aforementioned union. Popini, by the way, is a first class lithographer as well as an artist and has had a great deal of experience on stone. This experience is naturally of value when it comes to rubbing tints and color treatment, as the majority of poor poster effects are the result of the improper rubbing of the stone to produce a tint. Generally, unless great care is taken, a motley effect is created, which has no resemblance to the original tint desired.

Another sample of a Popini poster.

In addition to the great care taken to execute the posters on the stone, the chemical department of the Vitagraph Company has been experimenting with inks and has developed a lithographer's ink which not only lends a more brilliant effect but also makes a gloss on the poster as well. This composition is a secret and is used only on Vitagraph posters, having the same effect as a varnish treatment, as it waterproofs the paper, making it last longer and giving more brilliance and depth to the colors.

Mr. Smith has been conducting these experiments for some time past and feels that his efforts have not been in vain, because the quality of workmanship coupled with the individuality of Vitagraph posters have elevated this particular branch of the industry to the strata where it rightfully belongs. Beyond a question of doubt, the example set by the Vitagraph will be followed by other manufacturers, who will employ artists and give the poster end of the business the stamp of quality that will place it in the vanguard of amusement advertising.

MEMBERSHIP IN KATHLYN WILLIAMS ASS'N GROWS IN WONDERFUL FASHION

"The Kathlyn Williams Association," recently formed by the soldier boys of Schofield Barracks, Oahu, H. T., in honor of their favorite motion picture actress, has grown in membership to 849. The club house occupied by "The Kathlyn Williams Association" was built entirely by Uncle Sam's soldeirs. In the club house proper, only pictures of the Selig star actress are permitted, according to official statement.

Miss Williams, recognizing the honor that has been accorded her, recently forwarded a number of autographed photographs to Schofield Barracks. A letter has been received stating that these photographs have been framed, and now the "boys in blue" are requesting Miss Williams to write them a short letter which will also be framed and hung in the club rooms of "The Kathlyn Williams Association." Charming Kathlyn Williams, it is expected, will graciously accede to this latest request. The picture herewith presented shows the president and vice president of "Th Kathlyn Williams Association," together with the honorary members.

MACK EN ROUTE TO LOS ANGELES

Hayward Mack is another well-known motion picture actor to desert New York for Los Angeles. As one of the original Imp stock company he is remembered for many clever character impersonations as well as for his delineations of light comedy roles. After more than three years' service under the Imp banner, he left to join the eastern Majestic company, where he produced and acted in many popular comedies. He remained with the Majestic until that organization removed its producing department to the Pacific coast studios, then he joined the Biograph, playing under the exclusive direction of Dell Henderson. Leaving the Biograph, Mr. Mack produced a five-reel picture for the World Film program, then accepted an engagement with the Progressive Motion Picture Corporation to direct George Sidney, the comedian, who is known from coast to coast for his sterling impersonation of "Busy Izzy." He not only arranged a series of "Busy Izzy" comedies and produced them, but himself played second business opposite Mr. Sidney. Playing in the support of Richard Carle, Mr. Mack wrote several clever comedy scenarios for that popular star, gained fresh laurels in a leading comedy role in support of Paula Edwards when that musical comedy star made her initial appearance before the camera, and upon joining the Famous Players played in support of Mary Pickford in "Cinderella" and "Mistress Nell." Returning to his former line of work, Mr. Mack has been highly complimented for a clever bit of character acting as the Arab stranger in the Dyreda Company's recent release, "Four Feathers." This well-known photoplayer has joined the Universal forces at Universal City, California, under the direction of Murdock MacQuarrie.

In the Wake of the Selig Special

BY NEIL G. CAWARD

Salt Lake City, Jul. 20, '15.

Squedunk, Iowa.

Dear Jack:—

HERE we be, i and the Missus in the town Brig. Young made famous, but Jack, as far as i can see the folks look just like any body else, and i didnt see no men going down the st. with 11 or 9 wives with em and a bunch of kids that looked like a Sun. skul piknik, so may be these hear Mormons has all died off.

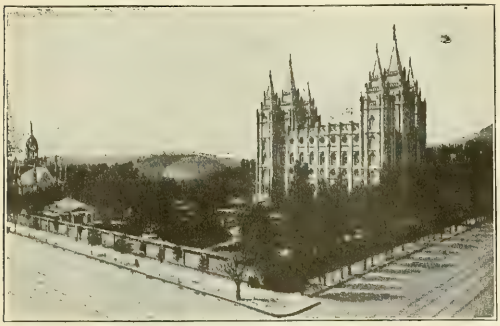
When i wrote you last wk. Jack we was just leaving Los Angeles, and Tues a. m. when i and the Missus woke up we was out on the dezert with 0 to see but sage brush and caktus and sand and then more sage brush and more caktus and more sand. Gosh Jack i cudnt help a thinkin how thirsty a feller would get out there in that dezert a lone with 0 to drink, when the trane kum out of the dezert and stopped at Caliente, what is a town of 4 hundred poplation and what has thirty 4 saloons so i guess after all a feller wudnt get very dry.

This hear Herb Hoagland had fixed it all up and when the trane stopped and we all got off there was a bout 20 cowboys and some cow girls and some cows and some wild horses a waiting for us from the Ryan ranch what was back a ways in the mts. These hear cow boys was reglar fellers and not motshun pitchur stuff and they branded cavs and rode buking bronkos and all that stuff. Herb Hoagland he put up 2 bottels of wine for the best rider and the cow boys they went to it to win them 2 bottels of wine. The cowgirls they rode a round and had races and every thing and sum of the people kum all the way down from their homes in the mts. moren 30 miles a way just to see the moshun pitchurs taken.

a couple of scenes from this hear 7 Suffring Sisters was took there with the cow boys and the cows as a bakground and all the cow boys was crazy to get into it. Sum of the folks a board the trane tried to ride the cow boys horses but they wasnt very good riders. 1 lady, this hear Missus MacManus she got on a cow boys horse behind the cow boy and when the cow boy started up his horse she got throwd off and hurt her ankel so that folks had to help her bak to the trane and the porter had to band age up her ankel, but other wise they was no accidents.

1 feller what lived out there in Caliente he pulled off a good stunt by bringing sum ice and sum lemons and sum water down to the grounds where the cow boys was and he made sum lemon ade and sold it to the folks on the trane for ten c a glass and every body had 7 or 5 glasses and so he made sum money cause it was so hot and every body was so dry and it was so far down the track to these hear thirty 4 saloons.

Well a long a bout 2 oclock the trane pulled out a gain for salt Lake City and the rest of the p. m. the trane went through some butiful mt. scenery. This hear Bill Slossman what roomed in the same kar as i and the Missus he didnt see much of the scenery though cause he opened up his barber shop in the smoking room at the end of the kar and with Sylvester the porter to help him he shaved hisself, the rest of the men on the kar a joshing him cause the trane was going round bends and he being lible to cut hisself.



It was so hot this p. m. that a lot of the men was making reglar trips "down town," what was what we got to call the trip the hole length of the trane down to the baggage car what had the saloon in 1 end of it. In the evening after supper a nother cabaray show was give in the Observatory kar on the hind end of the trane and every body had a lot of fun.

The next a. m. Jack, was Tues., we landed in salt Lake City a bout 8 thirty and Herb Hoagland he had rented a lot of st. kars and the hole party was took for a ride a round the town. We went through the part where the people has their homes and out to the state Prison where sum more of the people lives and when we left there this hear Ed. Kohl he says as how a feller in the prison hollered out to him what time it was and he says "what you want to no for you aint going no where." i didnt hear this myself Jack and im only telling you what this hear Ed. Kohl tole me, but maybe its true at that.

Well when we kum bak down town the st. kars was run up to Ft McDonald what is a U. S. fort, only there aint no U. S. soldiers there now cause they is all a way down to the Mex. boarder a waiting to fite the Mexikans. But the fort is there and we got out and walked all over.

Kuming bak down town 1 more we saw the house where this hear Brig Young lived when he was a live and where sum of his wifes lived and then we got off the st. kars and went to this hear Mormon taber nikel and at noon they opened it up and we went in and herd a pipe organ consert on a big pipe organ. Gee Jack this hear

Mormon taber nickel is sum place. Its got moren ten times as many seats as the Metropolitan and i bet you if i and you had the place for our pitchur show we wood soon be as rich as this hear john D. Rockenfeller the million air. And Jack there aint no nails in the roof of this taber nickel at all, it being all pieces of wood joined together and fitted so they didnt need no nails at all. It must be a mile and ½ from 1 end of it to the other, but when every body is still you can hear a pin drop any where in the bldg. its bilt so fine.

Then Herb Hoagland he fixed it up so we all had dinner at the Comershul club what is a swell place and then a lot of the party went out to this Salt Air what is a few miles out from salt Lake City and where they is a batheing beech, in the salt Lake, where you cant sink cause of the salt, but i and the Missus didnt go out there because it was only Tues. and we didnt need no bathes. We walked a round town and i went to call on this hear Mr. Carpenter of the Notable Feeture Fillim co. what send us his paper Reel Reels and he was glad to see i and the Missus and we had a nice talk. This Carpenter man is a nice feller and if he lived out in Ioway i bettcha id take fillim from him but as he lives out in salt Lake City i cant a ford to ship fillim so far, so i go rite a long taking fillim from the general fillim co same as ever.

This hear salt Lake City is got the best drinking water i ever drunk Jack. it kums down out of the mts. and is as cold as ice and they got so much of it that it runs down the sides of the main sts in the gutter just like they didn't need it at all. But i tell you what Jack its grate water and i wisht we had as good in squedunk.

REEL FELLOWS' AUGUST MEETING

The August meeting of the Reel Fellows' Club of Chicago, was held at the Movie Inn, on north Wabash avenue, that city, on August 18, a large attendance being present. After the dinner, George U. Stevenson, who, until recently, has been in charge of the London publicity office of the United States, gave a brief address, in which he commented upon the film situation abroad and told many interesting facts with regard to the effect of the European war upon the London trade. Mr. Stevenson's address was thoroughly enjoyed by all present, and was followed by a brief talk by George Magie, also addresses by Frank Flaherty, C. J. Ver Halen, and Watterson R. Rothacker.

Ere the meeting adjourned a committee was appointed to look into the matter of selecting a permanent club room for the organization, and strenuous efforts will be made at the next meeting to finally close up the unfinished business in connection with the recent ball, given by the Reel Fellows' Club. If there are members who have not as yet settled in full for the tickets held by them, they should communicate with the treasurer or secretary ere the September meeting.

PHOTOPLAYERS CONTRIBUTE TO ORANGE GROWERS BENEFIT SHOW

Herbert Standing of the Morosco forces organized a benefit program for the California orange growers. Geraldine Farrar, Donald Brian, Maurice Farkos, Myrtle Stedman and Mr. Standing himself were the features. Miss Farrar did not participate, but her presence was enough to coax an extra price per seat out of the pockets of the patrons. The entertainment was a briliant affair, having that ingratiating charm of spontaneity and good will often missing in a professional performance, and each artist was in fine fettle.

Herbert Standing, whose "Danny Deever" is pronounced the most impressive in Great Britain, repeated the Kipling classic and created a sensation. He responded to enthusiastic encores with "Come Whoam to the Childer and Me," "A Shilling a Day" and others. Myrtle Stedman sang beautifully and was accompanied by Marjorie Blinn, the pretty Los Angeles society girl who made her film debut in "Kilmeny."

O. F. Spahr, vice-president and general manager of the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company, 564-572 West Randolph Street, Chicago, reports his factory working day and night in manufacturing the new model of the Motiograph projection machine. Orders have been simply flooding the sales force and for the past three weeks, Mr. Spahr informs us, the factory has worked far into the night in an effort to catch up with orders received for the new apparatus. In a near issue, Motography will doubtless announce a number of the largest theaters in the country in which the late model Motiograph has been installed.

Rowland of Metro Offers Some Advice

HAS HIGH IDEALS

PRESIDENT RICHARD A. ROWLAND of the Metro Pictures Corporation waded into the advice givers of the motion picture industry last week and paid his compliments to those who "talk down" to exhibitors.

"It is a genuine pleasure," said Mr. Rowland, "to give our friends, the competitors in the feature field, the benefit of a little fatherly advice. It is giving them what they deal out every week to the exhibitor, only I hope I will not be accused of talking down to competitors.

"One of the tiresome things about moving pictures as a business is the grand little advice factories that are working full time in all directions.

"Along with other exhibitors each week, I read that I am to be told how to make my theaters tremendously profitable. I am to be let in the secrets of the wise men who point with pride to their experience and to their money. With all their experience and all their vast capital, I wonder they don't go into the exhibition end of it and earn the millions they so freely offer to others.

"To begin with, I do not regard the motion picture exhibitor as a mental incompetent. I don't believe he needs to be told how to run his theater or how to deal with his patrons. I am among those who are willing to concede that the exhibitor is of full age and sound mind and that he'd rather have good pictures, and good paper, and good publicity and advertising helps than advice, conversation or piffle. Give the exhibitor good pictures; that's all he needs and it's all he wants. We're too busy here at the Metro making good pictures to have time to give advice. And I confess that none of us here at the Metro has time for anything except the bending of every effort toward making better pictures all the time.

"We started out with selling experience, a pretty definite idea of the kind of picture entertainment that brings people to theaters and then we all had, and still have, youth, ambition, and the grim determination to make better and still better pictures.

"We, all of us, are human enough to like money and to like to make money, but I'll tell you in all candor, we don't want to make money without making good. The man who keeps his eyes glued on the almighty dollar doesn't make the best pictures, and you don't have to ask me for the proofs.

"We faced the fatherly advertisements from the fine old mossy pioneers and read, just as you'll read today, about their 'experience' and their 'vast capital.' Some of them still have more experience since Metro started, even if they haven't so much of the 'vast capital.'

"We are neither satisfied nor contented. We have grown faster and on firmer ground than any of our competitors and we're still growing. That's pleasant, but it's nothing to be satisfied over. We can't afford to be satisfied short of the last word in feature productions, and all pictures are a long way from that, despite the strides that have been made. We are proud of Metro because Metro vibrates with life and moves each week toward better things. We are gratified because exhibitors everywhere are looking to us to supply them with pictures that will make them money.

"We have flown in the face of a good many precedents, we have traveled new paths, we have stirred up the animals, and we are about to stir up still more, but we will endeavor to let the exhibitor attend to his business without telling him how to run his playhouse and without talking to him as though he were a business ninny and an intellectual 'nobody home.'

"It won't annoy us a bit to have the entire motion picture world keep its eyes on Metro and we will make a 'sportsman's promise' that they won't look in vain."

As a result of the determination of Bernard Loewenthal, majority stockholder of the Life Photo Film Corporation, not to manufacture or release in the future, Jesse J. Goldburg, the secretary and general manager of that company, disposed of his stock holdings to Mr. Loewenthal and resigned as secretary, director and general manager of that company as well as the Commercial Motion Pictures Company, the subsidiary corporation allied with the Life Photo.

The feature successes of the Life Photo which included among others such popular photoplays as "The Banker's Daugher," "The Greyhound," "Captain Swift," "The Ordeal," "Springtime," "The Avalanche" and "The Unbroken Road" were produced under the personal supervision of Mr. Goldburg, and he it was who pressed to a successful conclusion the suit against License Commissioner Bell to restrain him from interfering with the public showing of "The Ordeal" and in which action the powers and status of the National Board of Censors were judicially defined.

The versatility of Mr. Goldburg in the motion picture field is best evidenced by the fact that he chose all the productions released by the Life Photo, supervised the writing of the scenarios, selected the cast from leads to extras, passed upon the final assembling and cutting of the features, managed the advertising and publicity end of the enterprise and acted as sales manager of the company's products. As the executive manager of the company his duties were manifold.

When interviewed Mr. Goldburg stated: "I regret exceedingly the necessity for my severing connections with the Life Photo, an association that has been altogether pleasant and profitable. My close personal friendship with Mr. Loewenthal was heightened by a business contact that was without a ruffle. A more fair or finer gentleman it is hard to find in the business world. Mr. Loewenthal, as the majority stockholder of the Life Photo stock, deemed it best to discontinue producing regardless of the exceedingly high reputation of Life Photo features. The opportunity to rent the company's studio and laboratory at a substantial figure, thereby insuring a steady income as opposed to what he considers fluctuating conditions in the producing field, is what determined his course of conduct.

"Naturally, since my ability lies, I believe, in the producing and manufacturing of photoplays, and having a firm belief in the financial gain to be derived from the manufacturing of high class features, I deemed it best to discontinue my business connections with the company and vindicate my belief by allying myself with that end of the industry."

Mr. Goldburg has not definitely determined his plans for the future excepting that he will ally himself with the executive end of the productions of photoplays. Several offers have been made him which he has taken under advisement, determining to proceed slowly but surely.

TRIANGLE'S NEW MANAGER HOW SEERY GOT HIS START

Roie C. Seery, as announced in the last issue of Motography, after being affiliated for several years with the Mutual Film Corporation, has severed his connection, and will in the future guide the destinies of the Triangle Film Corporation in Chicago and the Middle West. R. C. Seery is one of the men whom we might style as a dreamer. He sees ahead. 'Way back in 1908 he was attracted to the moving picture industry and saw possibilities of its future. Mr. Seery was then living in Allegan, Mich., the town in which he was born and where he graduated with the civil engineering class of 1903, but five years later he decided that his future should be with the moving picture industry, and as the result of that decision he purchased the Electric theater in Allegan. In those days Mr. Seery considered himself quite a magnate in the theatrical circles when he proudly looked over his ninety kitchen chairs which were loosely distributed on a flat floor. A reel of film of questionable length and the whine of a phonograph constituted the entertainment for which the jitneys were accepted. Crude as the Electric theater was, the personal touch of Mr. Seery placed within it an atmosphere of welcome that brought prosperity to him far beyond his expectations, and as a result Allegan, Michigan, was too small for the continuation of his theatrical career. Chicago was picked as the next field for operation and with a theater of two hundred seats located at Sixty-ninth and Halsted streets, he continued to coax nickles from the pockets of the passersby. Late in 1909 he felt the irresistible call of the film exchange and after connecting with the Calumet film exchange as a solicitor, it was only a matter of a few months until he was promoted to the manager's desk. One success followed another, which is bound to be the result when conditions are carefully studied with a determination to forge ahead.

Roie C. Seery.

C. J. Hite had been watching the progress of Mr. Seery for some time, and in 1910 they pooled their interests in the Majestic Film Service Company, which they later sold to the Mutual Film Corporation in 1912. The Mutual retained Mr. Seery as manager of its three Chicago branches until the fall of 1913, at which time he was sent to the Northwest to act as special representative of the Mutual in Seattle, Wash., Portland, Ore., Butte, Mont., Salt Lake City, Utah, and Denver, Colo.

The Mutual Film Corporation evidently recognized that it had taken a good man from a hard territory, as it was not many months before telegraphic instructions were sent Mr. Seery to report to New York City at once, and it was then that he learned to his great joy that he was going back home, among his hundreds of friends in and close to Chicago. All this happened in the spring of 1914, and since that time R. C. Seery has held forth in Chicago as special representative of the Mutual Film Corporation by watching its interests in Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Omaha, Sioux Falls, Des Moines and all Chicago offices.

Later the Mutual Film Corporation added the cities of St. Louis and Kansas City to this extensive territory, but Seery was on good terms with work and neither one was afraid of the other. Aside from exerting his mental and physical efforts, he invested his money and was a stockholder in the Thanhouser Syndicate Film Corporation and the Syndicate Film Corporation. He urged many of his friends to purchase heavily of stock in the "Million Dollar Mystery," and those who followed his advice realized enormous profits on their investments. Consequently, the opinion of R. C. Seery and his final judgment on almost any angle of the film industry is recognized throughout the Middle West as close enough to the exact facts to prove an incentive to others to follow where he leads.

FAMOUS PLAYERS COMPANY BUYS MANHATTAN SITE FOR STUDIOS

The Famous Players Film Company has secured a plot of thirty-one lots atop Marble Hill in upper Manhattan, New York, for the purpose of erecting studios, open air stages and laboratories and factories designed for the production of elaborate feature motion pictures. The property is assessed for tax purposes at over $160,000.

The Famous Players' decision to transfer its producing activities to Marble Hill is considered in motion picture and real estate circles as the first move toward the conversion of upper Manhattan as a motion picture producing colony, similar in scope to the film aggregations now operating in Los Angeles and other Western screen centers.

The Famous Players Film Company, the first concern to present the famous plays and stars of the stage in motion pictures, is also the first film organization to seek grounds within New York City, when the growth of the film industry demanded physical expansion. A feature of the plans is a special experimental laboratory in which research work will be conducted with the view of improving the mechanical factors of motion picture production and projection. This experimental work will be under the supervision of Edwin S. Porter.

H. S. Mandelbaum, formerly connected with World Film Corporation, and more recently employed as a road man, for the Blinkhorn Photoplays Company, has been chosen as manager of the Big Attraction Film Company with offices at 311 Columbia building, Cleveland, Ohio, where he is making extensive arrangements to exploit the many features controlled by that firm. Alex. Bartow, formerly of the Mutual Film Corporation, is his assistant.

Films the Universal Language

DE MILLE DISCUSSES PHOTOPLAYS

"NO longer do the curious ask if the photoplay has come to stay; they ask now if it is possible that it has any limitations," said Cecil B. De Mille, director general of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, who arrived in New York last week from the studios of the firm at Hollywood, Calif. Mr. De Mille has been away from New York for nearly two years, during which time he has seen the small Lasky plant in California grow from one building into a great center of the photoplay industry, and he had seen his own work develop from the direction of an experimental photoplay into the personal and exclusive direction of the foremost woman American star, Geraldine Farrar. Mr. De Mille directed all three of the Farrar photoplays, the first of which, "Carmen" will be released on November 1, through Paramount Pictures Corporation.

"From its modest beginnings only a few years ago, comparatively, the photoplay has grown into one of the greatest of the world's literatures," continued Mr. De Mille. "It is more or less accurately estimated that sixty million persons attend photoplays and motion pictures in the United States every week, and countless thousands seek productions in other continents of the earth. By the very nature of its universal appeal, the photoplay then is seen by almost as many persons—probably more—than read daily newspapers, magazines and books.

"While scholars for years have tried to evolve a universal language like Esperanto, an agency far more effective in the form of motion pictures grew up and spread throughout the world. Motion pictures need no translator, the eyes of the Chinese see the same things as the eyes of the Swede and the simple human emotions of love, hate, jealousy, anger and happiness are not peculiar to any one race or peoples, but general to all the world.

"If I were asked what problem in the immediate future faced the men who have the good of the photoplay industry at heart, my answer would be that they should continue to develop this mighty language of the eye; and to make productions designed not for the few, but for the many.

"At the Lasky studios we have given this problem special thought and research. Ours is one of the very few organizations in the industry which supports at a cost of many thousands of dollars every year a scenario department, designed solely for the purpose of protecting photoplays, originating and inventing new effects and new situations.

"The time will come when the seemingly inexhaustible supply of material for the photoplay from the legitimate stage and written literature will be no more. At the moment great plays, great novels and stories are being translated into photoplay form at a speed that is almost unbelievable. We are already trying to answer that problem by our special photodramatic department, the members of which, including William C. De Mille, my brother, Margaret and Hector Turnbull, each are specializing in original work.

"Here is a field almost virgin in its possibilities which offers at the moment, greater inducement than the writing of almost any other form of literature. It is a different technique from that the novel, the short story or the special article requires. In the photoplays the medium of transmitting emotions and feeling is through the eye, not through the ear as on the legitimate stage. This does not mean that nothing may be left to the imagination; on the contrary the eye required and appreciates the minutest detail of form. The motion picture camera is able to portray as effectively the monogram on a handkerchief as it is the panorama of a great battle or great scene."

Mr. De Mille, who is being entertained in New York for a few weeks by Jesse L. Lasky and Samuel Goldfish, executive head of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, will return to California about September 1. One of his early productions will be "Chimmie Fadden Out West," with Victor Moore again in the character of "Chimmie."

NAULTY AS GENERAL MANAGER WILL BOOM TRIANGLE SALES

The story regarding J. N. Naulty's leaving the Mutual Film Corporation to become general manager of the Triangle Film Corporation reached us so late last week that we were only able to present the item of news, and not enough time remained to permit a halftone of Mr. Naulty being made. But now MOTOGRAPHY takes pleasure in presenting to its readers a recently made picture of the former vice-president and general manager of the Mutual Film Corporation, who is now second only to President Harry E. Aitken in authority in the Triangle organization. Mr. Naulty's previous record is so splendid that the whole film world has been impressed by the added strength of the Triangle Corporation, for with such men as David W. Griffith, Thomas H. Ince and Mack Sennett producing films for the Triangle, and the sales force headed by J. N. Naulty, an unbeatable combination seems to have been arranged. Mr. Naulty at present is transacting business at the temporary Triangle headquarters located at 71 West Twenty-third street, New York City.

PENNSYLVANIA BOARD CENSORS "THE BLINDNESS OF VIRTUE"

From information received at the executive offices of the Big Four, it is learned that legal proceedings will be instituted at once against the Pennsylvania Censor Board in the matter of their action on the Essanay feature, "The Blindness of Virtue."

"The Blindness of Virtue" in its original form has been passed by every board of censors in the United States with the exception of the Pennsylvania board. The feature has been universally praised by the press, and has been endorsed by many prominent clergymen and civic bodies.

Gardner W. Wood, eastern representative of the Essanay Company, states that these facts were brought to the attention of the Pennsylvania board, yet in their rulings they ordered such eliminations that if complied with would utterly ruin the picture as a dramatic offering, and make it valueless as a moral force.

The action of the Pennsylvania board in this instance is but another illustration of the incompetence of the average censor, and the un-Americanism of censorship as an institution. With the opinion of all other censors against it, with the recommendations of the press backing it up, and with exhibitors who have seen "The Blindness of Virtue" unanimous in declaring it a feature worthy of being shown in their theaters, a small body take it upon themselves to declare the subject unfit to go to the public.

LUBIN COMPANY ENGAGES NEW PHOTOPLAY DIRECTOR

Lubin of Philadelphia announces the engagement of Edgar Lewis, the famous photoplay director to supervise the direction of feature films. Mr. Lewis undoubtedly is a master mind among producers and scarcely needs an introduction to the millions familiar with photoplays.

Edgar Lewis.

The mere fact that Mr. Lewis produced "The Plunderer," "The New Governor," "Samson," "The Thief," "The Gilded Fool," "The Littlest Rebel," "The Bondsman," and other famous photoplays, stamps him as one of the greatest producers in America.

Just which play Mr. Lewis will produce first has not yet been decided, but it will be a master film to be released through the V-L-S-E.

Mr. Lewis's connection with Lubin's marks the engagement of the fourth new director in as many weeks, the others being Jack Pratt, who filmed "Shore Acres," "The Garden of Lies," and other plays, and who is now directing Louis Reeves Harrison's great war play, "The Rights of Man"; Allen Farnham, formerly artistic director for the Kalem Company, and occupying the same position with Lubin; and Edward McKim, Lubin's new comedy director.

As word has reached the American Correspondent Film Company, Inc., that a very inferior picture under the same title as its famous copyrighted feature "The Battle and Fall of Przemysl" is on the market, exhibitors are cautioned to be sure they get the genuine war pictures when they arrange bookings on this feature.

ESSANAY TO RENT FILMS DIRECT NEW POLICY IN LONDON OFFICE

The Essanay Film Manufacturing Company announces a drastic change in policy in its British office beginning Nov. 1, next, when Essanay films will be rented direct to the exhibitors instead of being thrown on the open market as has been the case in the past. A recent issue of the Bioscope, published in London, carries the announcement that the Essanay Company will withdraw its product from the open market on September 30. Complete plans that greatly enlarge its staff has made it necessary to secure additional office room at 22 Soho Square, West, and all will be ready to inaugurate the new system on November 1. In an interview with a Bioscope representative less than two weeks ago Mr. Spoor discussed the change in policy as follows:

"I think it may be well to review briefly the principle causes which necessitated the change. The most important of these was the recent decision of the Essanay Company of America largely to discontinue the production of short films and to devote itself chiefly to big features written by well-known authors and acted by celebrated screen and legitimate players. We already have in stock a year's output of important three-reel subjects which we have held up so that they should not interfere with our open-market releases, and of these we have sold only five, none of which has yet been put upon the market. This supply of long films and special productions has grown to such an extent (and will grow still more rapidly in the future) that we now require a market where we can sell them regularly and continuously.

"The demand for Chaplin subjects is world-wide, with the result that we have contracts running in practically every country, including the United States. Under present conditions, however, we are unable to maintain control of such copies of a film as we sell outright on the open market, and in consequence the contracts I have referred to are seriously interfered with. You will understand, therefore, that we are practically compelled to take Chaplin films off the open market in order to protect our own interests. In the British Isles alone we have sold an average of about one hundred and seventy copies of each Chaplin film, and this is too many for this market to absorb, especially considering that it is now smaller than ever.

"I think no one will deny that we have been one of the strongest supporters of the open market in the past. We have never been guilty of dumping films at cheap prices, but have made every effort to maintain the best principles of the old system. So greatly have conditions changed, however, that we have been compelled to adapt our policy to meet them. And I confidently believe that the new scheme we have devised will be found in every way satisfactory to the exhibitor."

"THE SHAME OF A NATION"

The Consolidated Motion Picture Corporation with studios at Culver City, near Los Angeles, has begun work on a six-reel feature photoplay to be entitled "The Shame of a Nation."

The story is based upon conditions as they now exist in Mexico and will intimately portray the Mexican people, pointing out the horrors of the system of slavery and peonage that at present exists. Many of the scenes were actually taken in Mexico, though at much cost a special street was constructed in Culver City, typical of the Mexican towns, and a great deal of the action took place there.

Irwin Predicts Radical Changes

LONGER RUNS ASSURED

"THE motion picture industry has seen many great and startling changes, especially during the last three years; but I believe the greatest change in the manufacturing, marketing and exhibiting methods will be noted within the next twelve months," said Walter W. Irwin, general manager of V. L. S. E. line, in a statement made to representatives of the trade press. "This company was incorporated to carry out a definite policy born of years of observation and close study of the public's desires. We started in to carry out definite ideas, and put into practice certain theories which we believed would benefit the industry in its entirety.

"The move was an urgent necessity to the maintenance of the industry on a plane where it could achieve greater perfection. It was a sheer impossibility to produce features of real artistic quality and high dramatic value, such as picture play patrons now demand, unless the manufacturers could receive a fair monetary return on the ever-increasing cost of production. This meant the calling upon exhibitors to pay higher rental prices. But in order to enable the exhibitors to pay this increase, it was absolutely necessary to show the theater managements how they could increase their box office receipts.

"With this object in view, namely: the increase of the exhibitor's profits, the V. L. S. E. as a selling organization was formed, as only through the increase of the exhibitor's profits could the business be kept in the healthy condition necessary to its progress. The problem of increasing the exhibitor's proceeds has as its principal solution—advertising—the most potent form of advertising—word of mouth publicity. Exhibitors have long overlooked this great force. The observations of our four companies showed that even in the case of small length productions, exhibitors had wasted a great opportunity in not taking advantage of the recommendations of their satisfied patrons.

"So, in giving to the trade its biggest dramatic offering the Vitagraph, Lubin, Selig and Essanay companies instituted the policy of advocating long runs and the heralding in advance of the exhibition of the features. The object of the advance advertising in the newspapers and on the billboards is to attract the greatest number of people to the first showing. The people that make up the first audiences become at once units in the great advertising force. The pleasure and satisfaction they receive in viewing the features converts them practically into patronage solicitors for the theater. The description they give, and the praise they accord the production, arouses in their friends a desire to see the picture. These people in turn influence others, and so on until every available prospect has been brought into the theater.

"The exhibitor who books strong features for long runs takes full advantage of the favorable impression the feature makes, whereas the exhibitor who books a picture for only one or two days loses all or a great percentage of that great advertising force—word of mouth publicity. The success we have met with in introducing these ideas to the exhibitors is most gratifying. We feel that in this connection we are performing a real service to the entire trade, for the results obtained by exhibitors through carrying out our ideas has made of our theories solid, substantial facts."

Mr. Irwin states that wherever V. L. S. E. features have appeared for more than one day, the second day's attendance has been larger than the first; and where pictures have been exhibited for three or more days, the attendance constantly increased to such an extent that rebookings for long runs have been made either by the same theater or a competing house.

In giving out this statement, Mr. Irwin had before him reports just received from several branch managers that illustrated his declaration. From these reports, Mr. Irwin cited the case of the Empire theater in San Antonio, Texas. This theater is perhaps the finest and most representative motion picture theater in the Middle Southwest. W. J. Lytle, proprietor of the Empire and several other fine theaters in San Antonio, has just closed a contract with V. L. S. E. for first, second and third runs of the Big Four productions. He states that he will play "The Rosary" and "The White Sister" in the Empire theater. He will then move them to one of his other houses and will then return them to the Empire theater and, still later, bring them back to other theaters in his chain.

In a letter Mr. Lytle stated that he intends using all V. L. S. E. subjects first and second run in his best houses, and will use all of the subjects that have already been shown in San Antonio, regardless of where they have been exhibited. "Mr. Lytle's decision was arrived at," states Mr. Irwin, "after close observation of actual tests of the Big Four contention that the personal recommendations of patrons enhance the value of feature picture plays."

Branch Manager H. D. Naugle reported that after noting the success and continued increase of patronage during the three day run of "The Island of Regeneration" at the Cabrillio theater, San Diego, the management of the Spreckels Opera House, the largest theater in that city, immediately booked the feature for a run of seven days, making a total of ten consecutive days. This established a record for long feature runs in the city of San Diego. It is the first time that any feature has run for ten days in that city. Incidentally, Mr. Naugle further reported that this feature has been booked solid up until the middle of October in the Los Angeles territory.

"The Blindness of Virtue" is now in its fifth consecutive week in the loop district of Chicago, playing in three theaters, each separated from the other by two square blocks, and indications point to this production appearing in the same district for several weeks longer.

In the Far West, "The Eagle's Nest" has been brought back to one theater five different times, and is rebooked in every theater where it has been shown.

In Kansas City at the big Empress theater, "The Rosary" accumulated so much popularity by word of mouth advertising during a full week's engagement, that the management has just rebooked it for three days.

These few instances were mentioned by Mr. Irwin because they are current cases. "With slight changes," said Mr. Irwin, "they apply to practically every feature that has so far been released on the Big Four program."

"There is nothing difficult or complicated about the methods we are urging our patrons to adopt. It is simplicity itself. We urge them to advertise for the sake of bringing the greatest number of people to their theaters in the shortest space of time, and then depend upon the quality of our productions to induce further increases in their attendances. It is merely a matter of advertising, first through billboard and newspaper and then by the mightiest force of all, word of mouth advertising. We are keeping an accurate record of the amount of advertising V. L. S. E. exhibitors are doing, and our records show that wherein the average exhibitor was purchasing about one per cent of advertising, he is now spending in advertising an average of twenty per cent of the amount he invests in films, while the increase in attendance is shown as between fifty per cent and sixty per cent."

Mutual Lands Van Loan Series

OTHER PROGRAM ANNOUNCEMENTS

"BUCK PARVIN" and his creator Charles E. Van Loan have joined the Mutual Film Corporation's new $8,000,000 program. This announcement came this week after the conclusion of arrangements at the offices of the Mustang Film Company, one of the new western manufacturers for the Mutual.

The Mustang will release on the Mutual program a series of three-reel star features under the general title of "Buck Parvin and the Movies." This series will present on the screen the comical sketches which made Mr. Van Loan's stories under that name in the Saturday Evening Post a national hit.

Mr. Van Loan and his writings on the motion picture are known to every American. But among his newspaper friends Mr. Van Loan is tagged for fame principally on the fact that he was the first and only man to successfully steal second with the bases full. Mr. Van Loan is writing the scenarios for this series and is sitting in with the officers of the Mustang company for the selection of the cast.

The title role will be played by Arthur Acord, the celebrated cowboy motion picture star, who, by the way, was the inspiration of Van Loan's famous fiction series on "Buck Parvin." Naturally, Mr. Acord must make a perfect "Buck Parvin" for he is indeed "Buck" himself. Acord is known as "the champion cowboy of the world" and his swift and artistic work "bulldogging" steers has won the applause of no less an authority on the life strenuous than Theodore Roosevelt.

Lawrence Ross Peyton has been cast for the role of "Montague," the character of the western director in the "Buck Parvin" stories. Mr. Van Loan deems this a very fortunate choice for the interpretation of the foibles and frenzies of that mercurial Mr. Montague.

Anna Little, who is widely known to film fans, will play the leading feminine role. She is not only agile and an equestrienne of great ability, but also beautiful of face and form. She has appeared in some of Otis Turner's greatest serials and features.

This series will be directed by William Bertram. According to present plans the first of these Mustang star three reelers will be ready for release on the Mutual's regular program on October 2.

Mr. Van Loan has been one of the most widely sought after scenario writers in the world. His capital of experience represents years of acquaintance with the comic technique of the motion picture, and a keen personal insight into the humor of the "green room." Now he is going to take the public into his confidence and show just how funny it is to make a funny picture. He did not contemplate, when the first chapter of his fiction stories were written, that they would eventually arouse an even wider interest on the screen itself. Now "Buck Parvin" is to be materialized. Van Loan has arranged to spend a considerable part of his time at the Mustang studios, co-operating with Director Bertram. The sub-titles will be from Mr. Van Loan's own hand and in his own snappy version of the breezy vernacular of the West.

The Mutual also announces the completion of arrangements for the production of the Gaumont split reel, comic and scenic. It will carry in animated cartoons a motion picture version of "Keeping Up with the Joneses" by "Pop," a syndicated newspaper comic feature. This will occupy 500 feet of the reel, while the remainder will be given over to scenic matter under the title "Seeing America First" and other educational material.

The week's developments have added mightily to the array of three reelers coming on the Mutual's program. The first of these releases will be a Rialto Star Feature—Gaumont—entitled "The Unsuspected Isles," with Fania Marinoff, Broadway star, in the lead. It will be released September 8. Next comes "Shorty's Ranch," a Broncho full of ginger. The first American Star Feature, a three reeler entitled, "The Great Question," starring Harold Lockwood and Mae Allison, will be released September 18. Next in order is "The House with Nobody in It," another Rialto, release September 22. This will be followed by a Thanhouser three reeler entitled "A Disciple of Nietzsche," starring Florence LaBadie, Lorraine Huling and others.

Coming along on the schedule is an American three reel feature, "The Idol." The leads are Helene Rosson and E. Forrest Taylor. This is the production of the second company formed to make these features for the American. Following "The Idol," the American will release "Pardoned," in three reels, featuring Harold Lockwood and Mae Allison. This is a play with strong "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" elements.

IMPROVEMENTS AT QUALITY STUDIO

The new studio of the Quality Picture Corporation is fast becoming one of the most modern motion picture studios on the Pacific coast. The new diffusing system was installed last week and has proven to be a wonderful asset for picture making. The artificial studio will be equipped with Cooper-Hewetts and will be finished by October 1. The floor space is 100 feet long and 50 feet wide. The new laboratory will be built as soon as the electric studio is finished.

Where "California" Films Are Made

THE STUDIO IN THE REDWOODS

SIMULTANEOUSLY with the opening of the exhibitor's convention in San Francisco, the California Motion Picture Corporation completed the final scenes of "Salvation Nell," and by virtue of this, Edward Sheldon's masterly drama falls in line with the long succession of celebrated "stage plays" that have recently given themselves to motion picture adaptation.

One might be able to make some well taken observations on this coincidence,—this completion of "Salvation Nell" and the opening of a motion picture exhibitor's convention in San Francisco. The past year and a half of motion picture history has associated the name of the California Motion Picture Corporation very intimately with that of San Francisco. "Salomy Jane," "Mignon" and the other of the "California" releases have gone a long way toward putting San Francisco and continguous northern California territory on the motion picture map.

Before the advent of this big new feature film corporation, the follower of cinematographic affairs had begun to believe that the Golden State of our Union was limited to a spot of territory, almost within gun shot of the Mexican revolutionists,—a territory which boasted several beaches, a city, numerous orange groves, a couple or three mountains with accessory canyons, and a strip of desert conveniently close at hand.

The very first of the "California" features, however, brought with it a realization that the geography of the state of its production was much more extensive and varied than the screen had yet testified.

The scenic grandeur of this first release, "Salomy Jane," came as a delightful surprise to the picture fan. It was something new and consequently refreshing beyond the ordinary. It showed giant redwoods towering almost to the thin film of California clouds, plunging creeks overbowered by evergreen trees, mountain peaks in the background incomparable, and small sequestered lakes that seemed specially designed to reflect the rays of a setting sun. It was California, but a new California to which the ubiquitous eye of the motion picture camera had heretofore been blind.

When we first saw "Salomy Jane" we wondered why picture directors had been so long in discovering the charming country that gave locations for its scenes. As we took our jaunt up to the corporation's studios at San Rafael to see the last of the "Salvation Nell" interiors put on the negative, we wondered even more. Every succeeding mile added to our astonishment. The scenic splendor was riotous, prodigal, unending. It was an hour's ride,—possible a fraction over. It included a ferry trip across San Francisco to the Marin county shore and then a delightful game of hide and seek in and out around shoulders of the hills on a fast moving electric train.

The "California" plant, through its complete adequacy, added its testimony to that of the pictures already released under the "California" brand, to the thoroughgoing manner in which the producing corporation has launched its enterprise. There are the studio, the laboratory, the cook house and dining hall, vaults, store houses, dressing rooms and all else that goes to make up a modern motion picture community. There are approximately forty acres to the grounds. In addition to the buildings already up, others are being erected, and blue print plans, to be realized in the near future, call for still more. The atmosphere about the plant is charged with progress and growth and ambitious endeavor.

NATIONAL FILM WILL RELEASE PRODUCTIONS THROUGH KRITERION

One and two-reel comedy and dramatic productions of the National Film Corporation will be released on the Kriterion program, reorganization of which was effected in New York the past week through the purchase of the assets, trade name and good will of the old Kriterion by S. L. Newman of New York and Lee Sonneborn of Baltimore. With the completion of the deal negotiations were closed at once by William Parsons, president of the National Film corporation,

Grounds and plant, California Motion Picture Corporation, San Rafael, California for releases on the Kriterion program beginning the first of September. Twenty-four reels of one and two-reel dramas and comedies are complete at the National studio in Hollywood, Calif., and ready for shipment to New York.

The National is to send out six reels weekly. Five companies now are at work at the studio, not including Mr. Mitchell's company with which Norma Talmadge, "the International Darling," is being featured in five and six-reel productions, which the National may release through state rights.

Among the popular photoplayers of the National forces who will be seen in Kriterion releases are: "Bill" Parsons, Russ Powell, Rena Rogers, Constance Talmadge and Harry Fisher, in comedies, and Alan Forrest, Eugene Pallette, Hazel Buckham, Jack Livingston, Lemar Johnstone and Edward Sloman, in dramatic productions.

Three Beauties at Triangle Opening

UNUSUALLY ATTRACTIVE LEADS

THE opening of the Triangle film plays at the Knickerbocker theater, New York, September 18, and at the Studebaker theater, Chicago, at a September date to be announced, will bring forward three unusually attractive leading women in the companies of Raymond Hitchcock, Douglas Fairbanks and Frank Keenan respectively. Mabel Normand, who has played the vivacious sweetheart of Hitchcock, is a world favorite on account of her work in the Keystone comedies. The present releases are to be called Sennett-Keystones and they will include all the old Keystone fun-makers, together with a weekly accession of new stars. "My Valet" is the title of the Hitchcock-Normand farce which is so good that, meant originally for two reels, it is going to be shown in the full four reels of its taking.

Another bright luminary of the Triangle opening is Miss Seena Owen, one of those golden haired young Scandinavians whose beauty and naivete have captured the picture world by storm. She is the daughter of a Denmark-born Spokane chemist and has lived some considerable part of her life in Mexico, where a good many scenes of Douglas Fairbanks' new vehicle, "The Lamb," are laid. Those who have seen Miss Owen work with Fairbanks in the Griffith studio on this picture, say she will be a great revelation to Broadway theater-goers.

The third of the leading woman trio is dainty Margaret Gibson, who will appear with Frank Keenan in "The Coward," a man's play for the most part, with the characteristic Thomas Ince punch and the Frank Keenan powerful characterization. Yet there are some pretty love scenes in it, and Miss Gibson is said to be fully adequate for the work she is called on to do.

The Triangle forces are unusually strong in capable and comely actresses. Among those to appear in some of the later productions are Rozsika Dolley, Lillian and Dorothy Gish, Mae Marsh, Enid Markey, Rhea Mitchell, Louise Glaum, Bessie Barriscale, Viola Barry, Mary Alden, Fay Tincher, Julia Dean and the distinguished Frohman star, Billie Burke.

William Alexander, special representative of the Fox Film Corporation, with headquarters in St. Louis, Mo., has called our attention to the fact that the Majestic theater in Detroit, Michigan, which MOTOGRAPHY states in its issue of August 21, runs only V. L. S. E. releases, is also booking Fox features. In justice to the Fox Film Corporation and Mr. Alexander, MOTOGRAPHY wishes to state that during the week of August 8 the Majestic theater ran "Dr. Rameau," in which Frederick Perry is featured, and during the week of August 16 had as its feature Theda Bara in the Fox feature "Lady Audley's Secret."

Margaret Gibson, leading woman with Frank Keenan in Thomas Ince's "The Coward," soon to be released.

Seena Owens, who plays the feminine lead with Douglas Fairbanks in the Griffith supervised play, "The Lamb."

Mabel Normand, the Keystone favorite who appears in support of Raymond Hitchcock in Mack Sennett's farce, "My Valet."

Getting Results in an Artistic Manner

BY HENRY OTTO*

Henry Otto.

WHEN I first started to direct, I found, as so many other producers in their early efforts do, that my chief difficulty was in gauging the possibilities and the limitations of the camera. I was well equipped when it came to the sense of dramatic effects and was much helped by my natural inclinations towards beauty and true art. I had been an actor and a stage manager and knew how to handle men and women and I found that it was natural to me to make a photoplay, so that summed up, my only real difficulty was in fully understanding my camera. This took me some time, but I made friends with my cameraman, who, after all, must be thoroughly interested in his work and in his director to get the right results—the two men must work in perfect harmony. I soon learned what I could do and what I could not do; in other words, what my camera would permit me to cover.

When once I had mastered the camera details the rest became easy to me and I have been able to bend my efforts to getting the best work possible out of my artists and to getting dramatic results in an artistic manner, and that last sentence of mine—dramatic results in an artistic manner—about covers my idea of the perfect photoplay.

I believe in looking up my own locations and in selecting such locations as will exactly fit the needs of the scenes taken in such locations. I do not only look at the foreground, but at the backgrounds as well, so as to make a harmonious whole. Many good bits of business are almost entirely spoiled by the neglect of directors who trust the selection of places and scenery to a subordinate.

I am helped very much by my artists. I have always tried to earn their good will and to allow them to use their own initiative as far as it will fit in with the action required. I thoroughly explain the action and the thoughts to be gotten over on the screen, and then the scenes are rehearsed and alterations made, and I will always listen to suggestions when they come from earnest and experienced workers.

To return to the camera a moment. For some months I just about lived with a camera and made a special study of it and took a number of scenes myself and to this day I watch carefully every new camera effect and endeavor, not to copy any particularly beautiful result, but to improve on it, and I lay a lot of my success to this studying out of new and beautiful photographic effects.

It is the same with the "sets." I discuss every set made with my property man and make alterations when necessary. He is as interested as I am and the result is satisfactory in almost every instance. I was at a certain studio some time back and heard a property man yell to his assistants: "Run up a drawing room for Mr. ———." He did not say what sort of a drawing room or for what class of family, just "a drawing room!" It is just such indifference as this, such "footage rushing," to which the failures of many concerns may be attributed. Things have come to the point where the public is discerning and knows what is what, and will not silently accept any old thing. This was all right some years back, but times have changed and it is the survival of the fittest now.

One of Henry Otto's sets. Mr. Otto is known as "the artistic director."

I also lay a good deal of my success to the fact that I go over my own scripts very carefully and want to show a reason for everything done. Here again quite a number of directors take the script handed them and they make a picture. I find it necessary not only to go over a script very carefully, but often to almost rewrite it, and even then I have to go over the following day's work carefully every evening.

The question of photoplays, the stories I mean, is the hardest one that a conscientious director has to face. I do not find any difficulty in the actual direction and I have capable artists with me, but without a good story all the conscientious work in the world is without avail.

I have read many hundreds of scripts since I started producing, but have come across very few which will make really good photoplays. Staff writers are inclined to get too much in a groove and the submitted stories are for the most part very poor, a good one now and again. That is why companies often pay for a good idea and then have the photoplay entirely rewritten. I have done this scores of times.

I am grateful that I had the advantage of an artistic education, that I sang in opera and worked in stock and with well known artists. I am glad I possessed a natural dramatic instinct, for it is an absolute essential to the making of a photoplay, and I have yet to see the work of a producer who has not had previous stage experience, who has made a big photoplay director.

To be known in the producing world one must have knowledge of dramatic values, and to be remembered by one's pictures one must have a knowledge of the world and be blessed with artistic leanings. Given these and the ability to manage men, one has then but to study the camera to get good results, but there are very, very few really good producers. That is generally acknowledged.

Metro's Autumn Program Announced

MANY STARS FEATURED

THE Metro Pictures Corporation opens its Autumn season with a definite announcement of a distinguished list of stars in pretentious feature offerings and at the Metro offices in the Heidelberg building the schedule for the months of September and October was announced.

Emily Stevens is the first of the September stars. She will appear in "The Soul of a Woman," announced as a five act wonder play supremely contrived by Director Edwin Carewe of the B. A. Rolfe forces. This picture will be released on September 7 and probably will be given an invitation at one of the Broadway theaters with a special musical program to give exhibitors and the critics a chance to inspect it. "The Soul of a Woman" is expected to be one of the motion picture sensations of the season and Max Kargar, B. A. Rolfe's general manager, is authority for the statement that it is the triumph of Edwin Carewe's career as a director.

Francis X. Bushman, in "The Silent Voice," a Quality picture brought to New York from the Los Angeles studios during the past week by F. A. Balshofer and Francis X. Bushman personally will be released on September 13. This adaptation from the Otis Skinner drama is in reality an elaboration of the play and its enthusiastic reception at the preliminary showing in Chicago at the Studebaker and in New York at the Broadway were most gratifying to the Metro forces.

"The Silent Voice" will be followed by "The Better Man," the Rupert Hughes play produced on the speaking stage with Guy Bates Post under the name of "The Bridge." The stars are Henry Kolker, well known to Broadway by his career on the legitimate stage, and Renee Kelly. This five act feature has just been completed by Director John W. Noble, of the B. A. Rolfe Company, and is described as unusual in photographic effects and the celerity of its action. It has socialistic elements that are calculated to arouse discussion. "The Better Man" will be released on September 20.

George Bronson Howard's "An Enemy to Society," with Hamilton Revelle and Lois Meredith as the stars, will follow on September 20. This is a Columbia product in five reels, unfolding a story of high crime and penalties with this theme predominating.

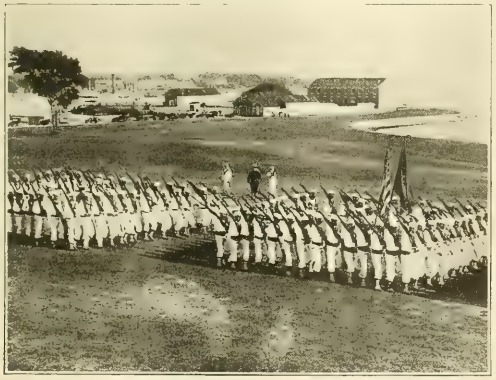
Mary Miles Minter in "The Stork's Nest," a five act picture, will be released in October. The play is now in preparation at the Rolfe studios with Edgar Nigh directing. For Ethel Barrymore, a new play by George Scarborough has been secured and Miss Barrymore found the vehicle so much to her liking that she expressed a desire to present it later on the speaking stage. The play is distinctly original in plot and a sensation is promised. Edward Carewe has already begun work upon its presentation.

The third week in October will see Olga Petrova in "My Madonna" and William Faversham in "One Million Dollars," to be followed by Edmund Breese in "The Song of a Wage Slave," the second series of plays from poems, which began with "The Shooting of Dan McGrew."

Booth Tarkington's "The Turmoil" will follow and a special announcement concerning this picture is to be made later. This brings the Metro's releases definitely into November and from a competitive point of view the array is formidable both in stars and plays.

THANHOUSER STAFF DINES MANY PROMOTIONS ANNOUNCED

An elaborate shore dinner at a popular New Rochelle hostelry last Tuesday night marked the first social session of the entire Thanhouser organization. With a few exceptions made necessary by the press of work, every employe of the company was present. Among the absentees was Director Platt, but he wired his regards from Block Island, where he was at work on a picture, asking all present to have a drink and charge it to him. Eugene Moore and Fred Sullivan, directors, wired him back that his bill was $186.95. Before the dinner was over, Platt's repartee came in a telegram: "Bill out of focus. Order retake at once on somebody else."



Mr. Thanhouser and his executive staff were at the head of the table, and when the cigars were reached a few of the diners were called upon for remarks. Mr. Thanhouser sprang the surprise of the evening by seizing the occasion to announce a list of promotions which meant salary advances for many of the diners. Needless to say, it was received with vociferous cheers. Those who didn't, couldn't or wouldn't make speeches, recited or sang, some whistled and the balance dined until the small hours when Director Nature calls "Lights!"

"GUARDING OLD GLORY" OFFERED ON A STATE'S RIGHTS BASIS

With forceful endorsements from Secretary Garrison, Secretary Daniels, Rear Admiral Benson, General Leonard Wood and General Hugh Scott, F. O. Nielsen and W. H. Rudolph are exploiting "Guarding Old Glory" as an argument for preparedness on the part of the United States. Five reels of scenes in the navy and army, showing all branches of both services at work, have called forth the commendation of the highest officials of the army and navy, and all have urged the public exhibition of the pictures as the best means of waking the people up to actual conditions.

"In fact," said Mr. Rudolph in discussing the film at his New York office, 220 West Forty-second street, this week, "it was at the suggestion of General Wood that the pictures are being brought out. General Wood had a private view of 'Guarding Old Glory' at Governor's Island and was enthusiastic over its possibility in bringing about a sentiment for greater preparedness.

"The pictures were Mr. Neilsen's own idea, and were taken under his direction with the patriotic motive of showing Americans just what their army and navy are. Views of artillery, infantry, cavalry, coast defense artillery and engineering work were taken at the various army posts, and scenes on board ship, showing the manning and firing of the big guns, target practice work, steaming drills and maneuvers, have been made while the battleships were in action.

"There is no play or story, or anything of a dramatic nature woven about these pictures. They are merely the army and navy as they are, with titles to explain everything and enable the public to make a comparison and see just where we would stand in case trouble came.

"The pictures have been finished just at the psychological moment. The talk of preparedness is growing as the war clouds thicken, and we are glad to be able to help along the work in this manner."

The skill with which the scenes have been selected from the different branches of the service met with instant approval on the part of both the naval and military experts. Whether we are for or against larger military forces for the United States, these films present every branch of both our land and sea forces in an inspiring, thrilling, instructive and graphic portrayal of the efficiency and preparedness of the "man behind the gun."

ROBERT T. HAINES MAKES DEBUT IN "HUMAN CARGOES"

Robert T. Haines, the actor, is making his debut in motion pictures in "Human Cargoes," a five-reel photodrama of political life, written by Walter McNamara, which the author is producing for the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation at its studio in Flushing, L. I. In this play he appears in the role of "Bill Madden," a son of the masses, who rises to supremacy through the force of his own character and his indomitable will.

Robert T. Haines.

Mr. Haines has been for years one of the foremost actors of America. After graduating from the University of Missouri, he made his stage debut in 1891 with Robert Downing, and scored such a tremendous hit that the eyes of every manager in the country turned toward him. With Thomas W. Keane in repertoire and with James O'Neill in "The Count of Monte Cristo," the young man repeated the good impression he had made. In rapid succession he achieved successes in leading roles with Walker Whiteside in "Darkest Russia," and then in "The Cherry Pickers," "In the Palace of the King" (in which he played Don Juan with Viola Allen), and in leading roles with Mrs. Fiske, with whom he was associated for two years. This was followed by a long engagement as leading man for Robert Mantell in Shakespearean revivals, which preceded a season with Grace George in "Clothes."

As a stock actor, Mr. Haines has gained every laurel. No present-day actor can boast the great following Mr. Haines has built up, and this, more than anything else, decided him to enter screen circles. During his last stock season, he received no less than six thousand letters suggesting that "he go into motion pictures," which he did, and soon he will be seen in "Human Cargoes."

NEW PATHE OFFICES OPENED FIVE ADDITIONAL EXCHANGES

The Pathe Exchange, Inc., announces the opening of new offices as follows: Detroit, Mich., 40 East Larned street, with L. E. Franconi as manager; Indianapolis, Indiana, 27 Willoughby building, with Jay G. Lytle as manager; a new office is being opened in Des Moines, Iowa, Cohen block, with L. A. Sheridan as manager; the Portland office will be re-established as an independent branch office with Mr. Wessling as manager, and W. W. Kofeldt as cashier.

F. C. Quimby, manager of the Pathe Denver office, is now engaged in establishing an independent branch office in Salt Lake City, and on completion of his work there will take the managership of the Seattle office. He will be succeeded in Denver by Harry L. Knappen, who has been a Pathe solicitor in the San Francisco territory. The opening of these exchanges is significant of the tremendous increase in the Pathe business.

ALERED WEISS NOW GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT OF TRIANGLE

Alfred Weiss, who was last week appointed general superintendent of the Triangle, is another of the able Mutual staff to join the newer organization. Mr. Weiss has been actively and very successfully engaged in the film business since 1904 when, through his Edison connections as a large jobber in Edison and Victor talking machines, he opened the Alfred Weiss Film Exchange at 219 Sixth Avenue, New York City. This he afterwards sold to the General Film Company, and started the Kinetograph Company in New York, later joining the Mutual and turning losing exchanges into big profit yielders. In his eleven years of film activity Mr. Weiss secured a large following among New York exhibitors, and he is looking forward to a very large business in behalf of the Triangle.

ARTHUR JAMES HEADS NEWLY FORMED FILM COMPANY

The Federal Film Corporation, recently organized in New York, capitalized at $1,500,000, has secured possession of Rocky Glen, a few miles north of Pittston, and according to an announcement just made, expects to begin the making of motion pictures in that locality early in October.

Arthur James, who until recently was connected with another concern, is president of the Federal Film Corporation; his brother, Henry F. James, is treasurer, and Merritt Crawford is secretary.

The deal for the purchase of Rocky Glen was closed with Arthur Frothingham, and the company will immediately take possession of the site, together with all the buildings, including the Crystal Palace, which will be used as the main studio. This building is large enough to permit the company to turn out eight reels of one thousand feet in length each, weekly, and in addition, permits of several other companies working, so that it is possible a portion of the studio will be leased to other concerns. The films of the Federal Film Corporation, when completed, it is understood, will be released through either the Mutual or Metro corporations, though an announcement in regard to this will be made later on.

NITRA FRAZER

Nitra Frazer, who has become identified with Vitagraph comedies, in which Wally Van (Cutey) directs and plays the male leads, was christened Anitra Frazer MacTavish. When it was suggested she adopt a name just as pleasing and one not quite so long, she simply dropped the letter "A" from her given name and eliminated her surname. As Nitra Frazer she became known all over the country as one of the best light comedy comediennes.

Nitra Frazer.

Miss Frazer received her education in the New York public schools and Bryant high school. Like many another young girl who had an exceptional singing voice, she cast longing glances toward the operatic stage. It was Miss Frazer's good fortune to be selected as a member of De Wolf Hopper's company in "The Pied Piper of Hamlin," from which she graduated to "The Jolly Bachelors." It was during the latter engagement she was really "discovered" by Werba and Leuscher and given an important part in "The Spring Maid." That she "made good" was evidenced from the fact that she remained with this firm four years, appearing successfully in productions of "The Rose Maid" and "Sweethearts."

Miss Frazer, like numbers of professional people, whose time during the summer hung heavy on their hands, essayed a trial of the moving pictures. Also like a number of other professionals she became enamored of the films and decided to remain. The Vitagraph Company was nearest Miss Frazer's home and quite naturally she applied to the company at Flatbush, the heads of which accepted her without question. Her screen debut was a decided success and she was enrolled as a stock member to play leads with Wally Van.

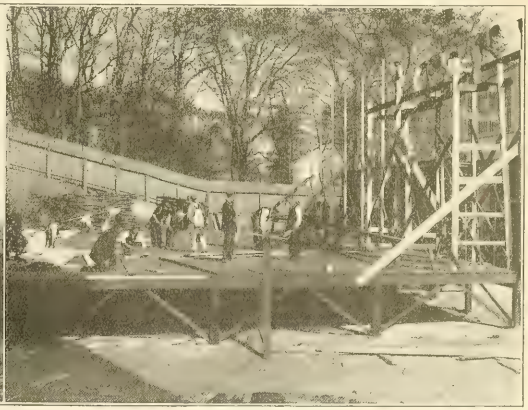
Eastern Film Corporation's Debut

HAS STRONG BACKING

Elwood P. Bostwick

A FEW months ago, three men in Providence, R. I., began quietly to formulate plans and organize a film producing company, which was to be second to none in the motion picture industry, and with this end always in view, they strived and worked for months with little or nothing being heard of the project in film circles. These three men were Fred S. Peck, Elwood P. Bostwick and Benjamin L. Cook. After many weeks of fruitful labor on their part, the result of their efforts is announced to the film world under the name of the Eastern Film Corporation of Providence, R. I., with studios and laboratory covering an area claimed to be larger than any plant in the country; with facilities of the finest kind for the making of high-class moving picture productions; with a roster of international stage and screen favorites among its stock company and backed by the unlimited capital, brains and shrewd business conception of Frederick S. Peck, vice-president of the National Exchange Bank of Providence; chairman of the finance committee of the State of Rhode Island; director of fifty large corporations, and rated as the wealthiest and most influential citizen in the New England states.

Mr. Peck, who is president of the Eastern Film Corporation, has had as his first lieutenant and chief executive in the forming of the company Elwood P. Bostwick, general manager. Mr. Bostwick is a gentleman of many years theatrical experience as stage director and manager with some of the largest producing interests in the country, among whom have been the Shuberts, Klaw & Erlanger and William A. Brady, and is widely and popularly known as the producer of some of the foremost stage and screen successes of the present day. In addition to this, he is a man of large attainments and wonderful powers of organization, and to Mr. Bostwick is due the credit of the enormously large and highly efficient film organization, busy at present turning out photoplays under the brand name of Eastern Film.



B. L. Cook, vice-president of the company, is well known in financial circles and is president-manager of Hornblower and Weeks, the long established firm of stock brokers. When interviewed recently in New York, Mr. Bostwick said: "The Eastern Film Corporation was organized to make features and comedies of high quality, and that only. Thus far we have made forty-eight one-reel comedies. Some of these do not come up to our standard, and will, therefore, be eliminated.

"The executives of two big theatrical concerns recently viewed six of these comedies and accepted five of them. Our plans contemplate the production of two five-reel features a month, and four one-reel comedies a week. In addition to this, we will also make some two-reel comedies. These and the features will be released through the same channel. The single-reel comedies will have a separate distribution. Our methods of release have been provided for and will be announced within a week or two. "Pelican" will be the brand name for the comedies.

"The first feature release of the Eastern Film Corporation will be 'Peaceful Valley.' After that will come 'The Return of Eve,' 'The Red Petticoat,' 'Next,' 'Cap'n Eri,' and others. Tom MacEvoy, formerly Ford Sterling's vaudeville partner, will be featured in a series of light comedies as also will George Bunny, John Bunny's brother. We have forty-three stock people, divided up into eight companies, now working in our Providence

The studio of the Eastern Film Corporation.

The big outdoor stage studios. This, though but a very brief outline of our plans, is all that I care to say about them now. Instead of discussing our plans and ambitions in the future tense now, I would rather wait until we are ready to release, and then show you what we have done. A studio is known by its product, and ours will then speak for itself."

The Eastern Film Corporation, incorporated for $300,000, is a closed corporation. The Providence, R. I., studio, located directly across from the famous old Roger Williams Park, is fully equipped to turn out high-grade pictures. The interior studio affords 190,000 feet of floor space. A new studio, now in course of construction, will bring this up to 450,000 feet. For exterior scenes, quaint, modern, residential, or wilderness, the directors need travel no further than to the park across the street.

ANNA LITTLE, FAMOUS IN FILMS, JOINS AMERICAN STOCK COMPANY

Anna Little, who resigned from the Universal company recently, has accepted an engagement with the American company at Santa Barbara and will commence work next week. She will appear in a series of western comedy-dramas and on their completion will be seen in features. Anna Little first made a name in pictures when she took the leads in western photoplays with the New York Motion Picture Corporation at Santa Monica, when her riding and portrayal of Indian girls brought her into prominence, as well as her expressive acting. Miss Little went to the Universal from Inceville and was featured in a serial and in a number of big dramatic photoplays, principally under the direction of Otis Turner. Among other pictures she was prominent in were "The Black Box" serial, "Damon and Pythias" and "The Open Shutters."

BREESE OFF FOR ALASKA

It has been definitely decided by the Popular Plays and Players Company to stage the next two Edmund Breese productions at Fairbanks, Alaska, in the exact locale of the two vehicles Mr. Breese will use for screen purposes, namely, "The Spell of the Yukon," and "The Soul of a Wage Earner."

Mr. Breese made such a tremendous success of his first Popular Plays and Players-Metro production, "The Shooting of Dan McGrew," that L. Lawrence Weber purchased the screen rights to all of Mr. Service's poems and Mr. Breese, accompanied by fourteen principals, will leave New York for Seattle, Wash., on September 5, and from thence they will sail for Alaska, to be gone three months, during which time the winter scenes called for by the original scripts will be staged. The sailing date from Seattle will be September 11, and they will arrive at Nome, at the beginning of the winter season.

It is hoped by Mr. Breese and Mr. Weber to obtain in Alaska the types of men so graphically and faithfully portrayed in the Service poems. Mr. Breese will take with him two camera men and his own director.

$3 SEATS AT KNICKERBOCKER NEW HIGH RATE ESTABLISHED

Wiseacres predicted that $2 motion picture production would never succeed, but their predictions were falsified by D. W. Griffith's notable "Birth of a Nation" triumph. Now comes the Griffith-Ince-Sennett plays which are to be put forth by the Triangle Film Corporation and for which in New York City $3 will be charged for some of the best seats! It is explained that the prices at the Knickerbocker theater will be the same as those charged now at the Liberty theater, where "The Birth of a Nation" is playing, except as to the so-called private loges. President H. E. Aitken of the Triangle Film Corporation has ordered the entire balcony front reconstructed. Aided by the counsel of McElfatrick, the architect of the building, small private boxes are to be built all the way around, like the famous "Horseshoe" of the Metropolitan Opera House. They will hold four seats and $12 will be charged for each box. A private theater entrance from Thirty-eighth street and private box stairways will give direct access to the boxholders, a large number of whom have already taken their sittings on the weekly subscription plan. It has been definitely decided to open the Triangle season at the Knickerbocker on Saturday matinee, September 18. The public opening will be preceded on Thursday evening, September 16, by a private view of the first week's plays to the press and other guests. The tile of the Douglas Fairbanks play for the Triangle opening was erroneously announced as "The Man and the Test." Advices from the Griffith scenario department in Los Angeles state that it is to be called "The Lamb," the character, although not the plot, being something like Mr. Fairbanks' celebrated Bertie portrayal in "The New Henrietta." The other offerings of the opening, as already given out, are Raymond Hitchcock in "My Valet," and Frank Keenan in "The Coward."

WILLIAM FOX ANNOUNCES RELEASES FOR COMING MONTH

An announcement of interest to exhibitors is made by William Fox this week in presenting the first month's program of his new one-a-week policy. Mr. Fox presents four unusual features to herald the commencement of the new policy.

For the first week in September the release will be a spectacular and dramatic presentation of the famous drama, "The Two Orphans," by Adolphe D'Ennery, in screen form. The picturization of this drama was conceived, written and produced by Herbert Brenon, the director of "The Clemenceau Case," "Kreutzer Sonata," etc., for the Fox firm. Theda Bera, Jean Sothern and William E. Shay are featured in "The Two Orphans," which is one of the most scenically elaborate photodramas so far witnessed and upon which more than $300,000 was expended.

For the second week in September William Fox presents Rockcliffe Fellowes and Anna Q. Nilsson in a visualization of "The Regeneration," based upon "My Mamie Rose," Owen Kildare's world-known novel. This feature, which is directed by Raoul A. Walsh, is remarkable for a noteworthy cast, among whom are William A. Sheer, who plays "Skinny the Rat," a remarkable characterization, and Karl Harbaugh, the author of the scenario, to whom was intrusted the important role of the assistant district attorney. Mr. Walsh has succeeded in incorporating in this photoplay many remarkable scenic effects, among which is the burning of an excursion steamer on the Hudson, which scene, by the way, was responsible for the calling out of the New York police and fire departments.

"The Song of Hate," featuring Betty Nansen, Dorothy Bernard and Arthur Hoops, is the third of the September releases on the new program. "The Song of Hate" is a modern society drama, based upon Victorien Sardou's universally known "La Tosca." As directed by J. Gordon Edwards, it is a poignant exposition of the sins and follies of the twentieth century men and women. The production has been screened massively and engages the services of hundreds of people. From the first scene flashed upon the screen to "Passed by the Board of Censors," there is said not to be a dull moment in the throbbing and thrilling action.

The fourth release is William Farnum, the celebrated star of "Samson," "A Gilded Fool," "Plunderer" and other Fox successes, in "The Wonderful Adventure," which was produced by Frederic Thomson. In Mr. Farnum's support are seen Dorothy Green and a brilliant assemblage of well-known photoplayers. "The Wonderful Adventure" is by Captain Wilbur Lawton and provides Mr. Farnum with a magnificent vehicle for the display of his striking dramatic talent. Mr. Farnum is seen as two characters, John Stanley and Edward Demarest, two men who resemble each other in a startling manner facially, but who are diametrically opposed in their inner souls. Demarest is a profligate and a dope fiend, while Stanley is an upright and honorable man. By a strange freak of fortune, John Stanley becomes "husband in name only" to Helen Demarest. How he solves this strange manner of life problem of Helen Stanley and Demarest makes a photodrama of decidedly unique interest.

HORKHEIMER, BALBOA PRESIDENT TO REWARD FAITHFUL EMPLOYES

Five employes who joined H. M. Horkheimer two years ago and formed the nucleus of his original organization when he opened the Balboa studio in Long Beach, California, are given credit by their employer for the major part of his success in the motion picture industry to date. They are William Beckway, chief cameraman; Robert Brotherton, head chemist; John Wyse, stage manager; May Brotherton, superintendent of the assembly department, and Norman Manning, business manager.

Today the Balboa Amusement Producing Company has a weekly capacity of 20,000 feet of negative films. But for the loyalty and splendid support that these people gave him, Mr. Horkheimer says there would be a different story to tell.

As an evidence of their faith in him, when the clouds were blackest, some of these department heads even loaned their employer money of their hard-earned savings, despite the fact that he was in arrears on salaries to them.

There was one time when Mr. Horkheimer owed his workers $11,000, yet they stood by him, despite the fact that all sorts of stories were told of his insolvency, and the sheriff camped in his office. What is more, they refused to desert him when offered more money to join other companies. Finally the clouds dispersed. The market turned in favor of Balboa, so that Mr. Horkheimer could pay every cent he owed and it goes without saying that he discharged a part of his obligation to the faithful ones, in so far as that is possible in a material way. That they have a life job with him is a matter of course. As soon as it is feasible, they will be rewarded with a working interest in the business which they have contributed so much to build up by their whole-hearted interest and unselfish devotion.

Besides the five already named, there are on Bal-boa's roster today more than forty people who have been with the company in its various departments the greater part of the two years since it began. At the Balboa studio, these men and women are all on the roll of honor. The names on the list, in addition to the five already mentioned, are Bertram Bracken, Joe Brotherton, Jackie Saunders, Henry Stanley, Mollie McConnell, Frank Erlanger, Daniel Gilfether, Charles Dudley, Fred Whitman, Gordon Sackville, Bruce Randall, Harry Harvey, Bruce Smith, Sherwood Macdonald, Roland Groom, William Reed, Frank Kearns, Gene Kearns, James Loy, Guy Ward, Mrs. B. Ahrens, Grace Scott, Nettie Clark, Edgar Moore, R. R. Rockett, Irma Mendenhall, Richard Johnson, Roy Freichett, D. Willey, John Cunnard, Percy Dewey, George Crane, Marguerite Nichols, Madeleine Pardee, William Kearns.

ESSANAY SIGNS THREE BIG STARS FROM LEGITIMATE

Essanay has engaged three Broadway stars to take parts in the photoplay dramatized from F. Marion Crawford's famous novel, "In the Palace of the King." This is a six-act production, to be released in October on the V. L. S. E. program.

Arline Hackett, who has been engaged as William

Faversham's leading woman in "The Hawk" for next season, will take the leading feminine role of Dolores de Mendoza in the photoplay. Miss Hackett has had a wide experience on the speaking stage and for the past three years has starred on Broadway. She played last season in "Today" and in "Dicky Bird" with Mary Shaw. The year before she appeared in "Damaged Goods." She has been featured under the Morosco and the Frohman managements and has starred in Ibsen, Strindberg and George Bernard Shaw plays. She also made a great success in Shakespearean roles, playing Ophelia, Portia, Lady Macbeth and Rosalind. Miss Hackett is well known from coast to coast as a strong emotional actress. Before her advent on Broadway she appeared in stock on the coast, acting for a time in her own theater in San Diego and later appearing in Los Angeles under Oliver Morosco. This is her second appearance in photoplay work, she having led in one feature for the Fox Feature Film Company.

E. J. Radcliffe, the noted legitimate star, has been engaged specially for this play, to take the part of King Phillip II. of Spain, while Lewis Edgar, another well-known speaking stage star, will take the part of the court jester.

Richard C. Travers, leading man with Essanay, who played opposite Viola Allen in "The White Sister," will take the leading masculine role, that of Don Juan.

The play, it is said, will be one of the most stupendous six-reel productions ever produced. Five thousand persons, in all, have been engaged to take part. This includes 500 cavalrymen and the same number of infantry, members of the Illinois National Guard. One hundred professional dancing girls will appear in the play, dancing before the king in the great court scenes. These were largely recruited from the speaking stage in shows appearing in Chicago. A dancing instructor now is engaged in training them for their parts.

The whole of the Essanay yard is being turned into a camp where most of the extra actors will live in tents during the production of the photoplay. A replica of an old Spanish castle has been erected at one end of the grounds, where most of the scenes will be taken. The palace is complete throughout and bears an exact resemblance to an ancient stone castle.

The leading parts are taken by players of wide experience and well-known ability. Ernest Maupain, who was Sarah Bernhardt's leading man for several seasons, will take the part of General de Mendoza; Lillian Drew is the Princess of Eboli; Thomas Commerford, Gomez, the prime minister; Nell Craig, Inez de Mendoza, the blind girl, and Sydney Ainsworth, Parez.

DEWOLF HOPPER TO SPEND A YEAR IN TRIANGLE FILMS

DeWolf Hopper, up from Siasconsett 'cross the bay, lumbered into the Grand Central Terminal Monday afternoon just before the Twentieth Century started for Chicago and a few minutes later was on his way to Long Beach, Cal., to spend the greater part of the coming year with the Triangle Film Corporation under the supervision of D. W. Griffith. In Chicago Mr. Hopper made the following statements:

"I'm going back to William A. Brady when I'm through with the films," said Hopper, "but that won't be for a year, and maybe two, for I have sort of an understanding with the Triangle for a renewal of our contract. Mr. Brady thinks I won't like motion pictures a little bit, but I hope to do for Don Quixoto, Gulliver, Falstaff and other famous characters of the literary classics what I have done for Gilbert and Sullivan."

Then the gate clanged behind the comedian and his valet and chauffeur, whose activities have been limited during the summer by the edict of the selectmen of Siasconsett prohibiting the use of automobiles on the island. Mrs. Hopper and the celebrated baby, DeWolf Hopper, Jr., will follow as soon as the new film star is settled on the coast.

On Saturday another Triangle party will start for the California studios. A special car has been engaged for Billie Burke, Weber and Fields, Sam Bernard and William Jerome. The last named goes to join the scenario department.

HORSLEY ENGAGES MONTGOMERY WILL PRODUCE BOSTOCK FILMS

Frank Montgomery has been engaged by David Horsley to direct the two-reel animal pictures featuring the Bostock collection of performing animals which Mr. Horsley will release through the Mutual. Mr. Montgomery, who is now in Los Angeles, will await the arrival of Francis Worcester Doughty, the author whom Mr. Horsley has engaged to prepare the 'scripts for those releases, to confer on points of production before beginning work. Mr. Doughty left New York last week for the West. The animal subjects will be filmed in the hexagonal arena in Mr. Horsley's new plant in Los Angeles, built especially to facilitate staging such productions. This arena is arranged in six sections of fan-like shape, each with a background to give the locale of the scene to pictures. The background is not made up of artificial "props" but is obtained by the use of full growing trees, shrubbery and vines, as it is in the jungle of the country in which the scenes are laid.

Frank Montgomery.

With this unequaled studio equipment and with the famous Bostock animals and trainers, including Captain Jack Donavita, at his command, to say nothing of scenarios as supplied by such a writer as Mr. Doughty, director Montgomery has every facility to make animal pictures of the type and quality Mr. Horsley has set for a standard.

Mr. Montgomery has long been recognized as a director of unusual capabilities. Years ago he was with the old 101 Bison company, producing western pictures, as a player. Later he was with Kalem as director. Following this he was with the Universal and then directed a company of his own, known as the Liberty Feature Film Company, with studios in San Mateo, Cal. The first animal picture will be released about the middle of September.

SELIG'S CALIFORNIA PARTY HOLDS REUNION AND DINNER

Some forty-six of those who made the trip to California in July aboard the Selig Special assembled on Saturday evening, August 21, in the Green Room of the Kuntz-Remmler Company, 424 South Wabash avenue, for a dinner and reunion. The affair was arranged by Clarence A. Frambers, and Mrs. Maud Moore Clement, and was thoroughly enjoyed by all present, several, even coming from points as far distant as DuQuoin, besides others from nearer Indiana towns.

Following an enjoyable dinner, an address of welcome was delivered by Nelson E. Layman, of DuQuoin, Illinois, followed by a brief talk from Maud Moore Clement. Arthur A. Dennis was present through the courtesy of the Western Vaudeville Association, and gave several dramatic readings, while Brodt and Daniels of the Pantages vaudeville circuit were also on the program for some society dances, but as Mr. Brodt's partner was ill, he danced with Miss Kaempfer, who volunteered at the last moment rather than disappoint those present at the dinner.

After a burlesque on the opera "Faust," given by Messrs. Frambers, Dennis and Robert M. Crooks, the botanical demon of the Selig organization, and another melodramatic burlesque of motion picture work, entitled "Seven Buckets of Blood," J. S. Whyte gave several Scotch character songs, and then H. C. Hoagland, who was in charge of the Selig party during the trip to California and back, was called to the stage and presented with a silver loving cup, as a token of appreciation by those whose cares and responsibilities he assumed during the western pilgrimage. Mr. Hoagland was taken completely by surprise, but voiced his thanks in a few well-chosen words.

The program of the evening was concluded by a spectacular dance number, in which Mr. Frambers outdid all his previous efforts, and it seems safe to say that if Major Funkhouser, second deputy superintendent of Chicago's police department, had had an intimation of the dance, the whole party would have been pinched.

While no definite announcement can be made at this time, it is understood another gathering of the Selig party will take place in October.

CENTAUR OFFICES MOVED NEW QUARTERS OPENED

The offices of the general manager and the publicity department of the Centaur Film Company have been moved from Bayonne, N. J., to 46 West Twenty-fourth street, New York City. The change in location was made to handle more expeditiously the vast amount of business incident to the increase in the productions of David Horsley, who is at the head of the Centaur Film Company and the Bostock Jungle and Film Company, the entire output of which goes through the Mutual Film Corporation.

Previous to his alliance with the Mutual, Mr. Horsley released but one single-reel comedy a week. Under his present arrangement, however, he will release four brands. At this time he is releasing weekly a single-reel comedy under the brand name of Cub Comedy, in which George Ovey is featured. About the middle of September, Mr. Horsley will release his first animal picture, which will be in two reels and feature the famous Bostock aggregation of performing animals. Late in September the first of the Horsley three-reel subjects will be released and this will be followed by the first of the Horsley Mutual Master-pictures in four reels. Broadway stars will be presented in these films.

The one, two and three-reel pictures will be filmed at Mr. Horsley's new studio in Los Angeles, which is well provided with facilities to accommodate these companies. The Master-pictures will be made at the Centaur studio in Bayonne.

JUNE KEITH, ESSANAY STAR HAS EXCITING EXPERIENCE

June Keith, new leading woman for Essanay, avers that dodging bullets is not at all her specialty, although she successfully accomplished this feat a few nights ago.

June Keith.

Miss Keith, who takes the leading feminine role in "The Man Trail," Essanay's six-act feature, was returning to her home in Chicago from "The Pines," where the piece was staged, when a man stepped out in front of their car from behind some trees at the side of the road in Lake Forest. It was dark and the chauffeur thought the man was a robber and instead of halting put on all speed. The man opened fire, three bullets striking the car, one passing through the wind shield and barely missing Miss Keith. She decided it was time to halt. The man proved to be a policeman and arrested the chauffeur, who was later discharged.

Miss Keith is well known on the legitimate stage and had made a distinct hit in Essanay's "A Bunch of Keys" and "The Man Trail." She played the part of Nang Ping in "Mr. Wu," produced by Walker Whiteside in connection with Henry W. Savage. She also starred in "The Woman," "Stop Thief," "The Man of the Hour," "The Spendthrift," and "The Passing of the Idle Rich." Miss Keith is a pretty brunette who can laugh or cry as the part requires. She is a Chicago girl, daughter of Douglass Smith, a wealthy Chicago banker. She has had her share of success in Broadway productions, but now has forsaken the footlights for photoplays.

The Frohman Amusement Corporation has withdrawn from the program of the World Film Corporation. It is said to be in negotiation with two prominent releasing exchanges, but no definite arrangements have been made, as yet. William L. Sherrill, the president, advises us that the success in disposing of territorial rights on "Just Out of College," has been so great, that he is giving serious consideration to the advisability of continuing to dispose of his productions through this channel.

Volume XIV CHICAGO, SEPTEMBER 4, 1915 Number 10

Not a "One Man" Job

IN ALL the trades and professions of the world there is probably none which calls for a wider and more varied knowledge than that of the motion picture director.

He is regularly called upon to produce stories of a widely different character. One day it is a Civil War story with its action laid in the days of '63, and the next it is a modern story of Wall Street and the stock market. On Monday he is expected to stage a drama of Biblical times with all the costumes, furnishings and stage settings of the proper period and design, while by Thursday he is producing a tale of the Canadian Northwest with half-breeds, red-coated mounted police, and whiskey runners as its principal characters.

Yet despite all this, the director who calls in outside assistance to help him with proper stage settings, furniture that will be appropriate to the period, or a costumer who can suggest more suitable gowns for the leading woman, is the exception rather than the rule.

Far too many film manufacturers have grown to expect this comprehensive knowledge on the part of their directors and to rely entirely upon one man's opinion of what is fitting and necessary for stories and plays laid in a particular period. It is not to be wondered at, therefore, that the critical eyes of the public find many flaws in the films released by even the most notable producers, for no human brain can contain an intimate and accurate knowledge of the proper settings, costumes and furnishings of any and all periods of time.

Of late, however, an occasional director can be found who has stood ready and willing to admit his lack of knowledge on certain subjects. A few directors can be called to mind who are far-seeing and broad-minded enough to realize that it is better to summon a real authority to their assistance to clear up certain doubtful points about the style of hair dressing worn by Cleopatra, the kind of furniture that one might expect to see if he were to enter the private homes of some of our modern millionaires, or the sort of clothing worn by the Pilgrim Fathers.

And, strange to say, the very directors who have thus humbled themselves and admitted that perhaps an outside authority might be of assistance to them in staging certain productions are generally conceded to be the biggest men in the industry, the ones whose name on a film is a guarantee to the public that a real feature of extraordinary worth is to be offered.

Instead of losing prestige and popular favor on account of accepting advice from others, these directors have risen to new heights and their productions have become more commented upon than ever. "Two heads are better than one" is an adage as old as the hills, and never has it proven more apt than in the production of motion pictures.

Perhaps you don't pay much attention to the "assist" column in the baseball summary. It's a fact, nevertheless, that "assists" count for just as much as "putouts" when it comes to expressing in cold facts and figures the efficiency of any particular player. Tinker and Evers were just as important a part of the famous "Tinker to Evers to Chance" triple play combination as was the Peerless Leader himself. All three realized that team work and co-operation were necessary if games were to be won and the pennant landed, so there was no jealousy among them, though two had to be credited with "assists" and the third scored the "putout."

By the time motion pictures are as perfect as professional baseball, a similar spirit of team work and co-operation between a director and his assistants, each of whom is an authority and a specialist in his own particular line, will have been worked out. Already one can see it coming on the horizon, for D. W. Griffith announces with pride that he was assisted in getting realism into his battle scenes by West Point officers, that the reproduction of the theater in which Lincoln was assassinated was the result of weeks of study and research, and Thomas H. Ince boldly proclaims that Melville Ellis, an international authority on dress, has been engaged to superintend the costuming of his future productions, or that Lee Bartholomew, a camera expert, has been employed purely in an advisory capacity for the purpose of better acquainting both directors and camera men with many of the seemingly insignificant mistakes the camera is likely to register.

The result of team work and co-operation between real experts in their line and producers of the prominence of Griffith and Ince is sure to show on the screen and cannot but uplift the silent drama to a still higher plane. Film direction is a long ways from being a "one-man" job and the time is rapidly coming when not one or two manufacturers, but the industry as a whole is going to realize it. Then, and then only, will perfect pictures result, pictures that will be classics of their kind, that will go on and on for generations.

THE COURAGE OF ITS CONVICTIONS

THE money that is invested in the motion picture business today is real money. Manufacturers who were fortunate enough to get into the game early were able to take the money for their present extensive plants out of the business itself as it grew. Those who came in later took the money out of other lines of business and diverted it to their purposes. They were able to do this because the picture business is a good business.

The lay observer seems prone to regard the picture business as an investment of the speculative class with considerable risk offset by a promise of high returns. The fallacy of this view must soon become apparent to those who, interested only in the financial phase of the industry, observe the use to which money invested is put. Speculative industries do not invest large sums in real estate and plant.

We have in mind the recent purchase by the Famous Players Film Company of a very large tract of land in upper Manhattan with a tax valuation of over $160,000, and the avowed purpose of the company to improve its holdings to a value of approximately a million dollars.

The details of this transaction are set forth on another page and need not be repeated here. Its significance to the trade lies not in the publicity and praise accruing to the Famous Players, which concern needs no boosting, but in the feeling of substantiality and permanency which it and its like must establish in the minds of business men in all lines of effort.

Manhattan as an administrative center is ideal. As a producing center it is expensive. To buy into it demands solidity and faith in the future. It is needless to point out that the concern mentioned in the transaction has demonstrated those characteristics with a force that should leave its impression on those of a more timorous and conservative turn of mind. A few manufacturers in this industry are building not just for next week, but for a hundred years.

Just a Moment Please

Isn't it funny that the dopesters and press agents of nearly every film concern sooner or later get the editor bug into their bonnets and blossom forth with a little paper devoted solely to the product of their particular film company, while most of the editors think a press agent's life must be one sweet song and wonder how they find time to spend all their money and how blissful it must be to have nothing to edit.

The latest to bust into the limelight with a paper all his own is our old friend Bennie Zeidman, who last week released Vol. 1, No. 1, of Fine Arts Films Press News, a breezy little sheet, crammed with news of the Griffith studios. Hats off to you, Bennie. It's a regular sheet.

An item in the very first column interested us mightily. It's the one about Madame Filbert, the erstwhile Parisian modiste, who "has been engaged permanently for the Fine Arts Films studios." Now if we were so inclined we might laboriously whittle out a wheeze of some sort relative to the Madame being a new kind of "nut," but such humor being far beneath us, we'll leave that for others.

THANKS, LLOYD.

We wish to express our appreciation of the testimonial to the worth of the Caward Art Scollege which has gained some publicity in an eastern paper. The public acknowledgement that it "produced results" sufficient to warrant a large endowment by one of its first pupils is gratifying and we are tempted to get out a special de luxe edition of our 1916 catalogue, with new views of the campus and a page in five colors devoted to a reproduction of the "testimonial."

From the Strand Cafe at Venice, California, we have received a postal of a beautiful girl sent by Kenneth O'Hara, B. Banard and Mabel Condon. Thanks, folks, it stopped us for more than a "moment." We wish we could actually be there long enough to "have one" with each of you, likewise with the girlie who extends the invite to "meet her at the Strand."

Speaking of postals, reminds us that a remarkable four-color view of Hayward Mack crossing the Great Salt Lake came to hand since our last issue went to press. We fear the climate is already having its effect on Mack, however, since on the postal he looks nearly as much like a lath as we ourselves. Hurry back, Mack, before you disappear entirely.

Some Current Releases Reviewed

"The Silent Voice"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward

FRANCIS X. BUSHMAN, star of the Quality Picture Corporation, accompanied by Fred Balshofer, of the same concern, arrived in Chicago on Thursday, August 19, where they staged a private showing of the latest Quality release, "The Silent Voice," which will be released on the Metro program about the middle of September.

The Studebaker theater was crowded with Bushman admirers and Mr. Bushman himself appeared on the stage to explain that the picture was only a sample print and not a completed product and that it was being merely shown to obtain suggestions for its improvement, if such a thing were possible.

From Chicago Messrs. Balshofer and Bushman traveled to New York where the same picture was given a private showing at the Broadway theater in that city, before a specially invited audience. Both at the Studebaker and Broadway theaters the picture was warmly applauded and there could be no question but that it "got over" in a big fashion. As shown in both cities the print was seven thousand feet in length, though it is understood that this will later be trimmed down to about five thousand feet, thereby greatly strengthening the picture which in several places is a bit too long.

The story is an adaptation of the famous drama of the same name in which Otis Skinner was starred and in film form it retains all the powerful scenes that made the drama so impressive. Particularly clever are the director's methods of acquainting one with the home of Starr, the hero of the story, for the camera follows the players around from room to room in a startlingly natural manner and at times is moved the entire length of the long stage for the purpose of getting a close-up, all of the movement being projected without the slightest flicker on the screen and undoubtedly acquainting the audience with the details of the Starr home in a manner that could not be surpassed were they to actually visit the place itself.

Another bit that is worthy of particular praise is the scene in which Starr kills the snake and rescues the helpless family of birds. The scene in which Starr narrowly escapes death when the dynamite explodes is worked up to a big climax and many of the audience were held spellbound, so gripping was the action at this point. Another effective bit is the scene in the doorway, when Starr, his hearing restored, overhears his supposed friend, Robert Delmore, threaten his wife. Next to Mr. Bushman, chief praise is, doubtless, due to Frank Bacon, in the role of Spring, Starr's faithful servant. Marguerite Snow, the leading woman, is winsome as Marjorie Blair and Lester Cuneo makes Delmore a typical cad, while Helen Dunbar creates a most lovable character in that of Starr's mother, though she is only seen in the early portion of the picture.

As the story runs, Franklyn Starr, a wealthy musician, loses his hearing shortly after the death of his mother and later, after marrying Marjorie Blair, he discovers that she is tiring of him because of his affliction and is receiving the attentions of Robert Delmore, his supposed friend. As a result of his discovery Starr becomes a misanthrope, hating God and man and determined to destroy and scoff at all things beautiful in the world. From the roof-top of his home he gazes upon life in the park just across the way and is surprised to discover that by reading the lips of various people in the park through a powerful field glass, he is able to determine their weaknesses, troubles and shortcomings and in many cases to remedy them.

Eventually he is brought to the realization that he has become a power for good and as Spring expresses it "An agent of God." Later his hearing is restored in a wonderful fashion and his faith in his wife's devotion is renewed, for he finds that despite all his beliefs to the contrary she was ever true to him.

Esther, with the aid of Kansas Em, has made a miraculous escape from the burning place and with the woman of the dance halls and Quabba she manages to drag John Powell's body to safety.

This episode of the serial entitled, "Fire, Fury and Confusion," is one which is lively and thrilling. The photography is splendid and all of the cast do excellent work. "The Diamond From the Sky," the cause of all the trouble, is discovered by Marmaduke Smythe on the horns of the deer head and after walking some distance he secretes the gem in a hollow tree. Later a little girl and boy discover the gem and the little girl is admiring it when a bee lights on her arm. In her fright the little girl tosses the gem up into the air. The last we see of it, it is on a bee-hive, the bees swarming all around it.

The nineteenth chapter opens with a scene of the fire which results from the fight which took place in chapter eighteen. Kansas Em, an inmate of the place, manages to help Esther escape and later Esther, searching the ruins, finds Arthur Stanley, who has been crushed by fallen timber. In the sanitarium Hagar has regained her memory sufficiently to ask Detective Tom Blake to search for Esther. Esther, upon discovering that Arthur Stanley has been taken to Los Angeles, boards the train and leaves for the city. When she arrives there, she goes to Arthur's office and there is told that John Powell is dying. She rushes in a taxicab to his mansion, but there is refused admittance to the house. Vivian is informed of John Powell being injured by Durand. She, Blair and DeVaux arrive at the Powell mansion as close friends to receive the injured man. There they plot for the wounded man's millions and are deeply concerned when informed that Arthur will live. Durand tells Vivian that he will be John Powell's physician and she will be his nurse. Esther, after leaving the mansion, returns to her hotel broken hearted and she is here joined by the faithful Quabba.

In the Powell mansion, Vivian and Durand are administering drugs to the dangerously injured and delirious Arthur Stanley.

ON September 9, the Selig Polyscope Company will release a strong heart interest drama in three reels entitled

The telegram concerning the rector's past is received.

"Neath Calvary's Shadow." This story is from the pen of W. H. Lippert and William Robert Daily is responsible for the directing of the production. Wheeler Oakman is cast as John Strong, a young Episcopal rector, and Fritzi Brunette is cast in a dual role portraying the characters of Anne, Strong's sister, and La Belle Favorita, Marion Warner and Virginia Kirtley also play important parts in this production.

Anne Strong and her brother, John, a young Episcopal minister, live together in the rectory of Calvary parish. The rector is engaged to Marjorie, who does not share in her fiance's love for children and spends the most of her time in riotous living with Harold Gordon. Strong's sister Anna disappears. Later a baby is found on Strong's doorstep and to the infant's clothes is pinned a slip of paper asking Strong to protect and rear the child.

Strong learns to love the child, who he named Helen. As she grows older his explanations to the vestrymen fail to satisfy them, so Strong presents his resignation and takes charge of a mission at Goldfield, Nevada. Here he meets and falls in love with Imogene, the daughter of a mine owner. He asks the girl to marry him and her father wires to Strong's former parish for information regarding him. The answer is that Strong was compelled to resign his parish because he could not prove the identity of the child. Strong is exposed to the miners and they wreck the mission.

Harold Gordon, after Anne's disappearance in the East, also goes to Goldfield, Nevada, where he becomes superintendent of Imogene's father's mine. He proposes marriage to the girl but the girl still loves John Strong. Gordon in a dance hall at San Francisco meets La Belle Favorita and after a quarrel with her he is found dead, while Favorita makes her escape.

Helen, now a young woman, saves John Strong's life and assisted by Imogene, Helen takes John to a farm house, where La Belle Favorita is engaged as a maid. As Strong and Favorita confront each other, the woman confesses that she is Anne Strong, his sister, and that Gordon is the father of the foundling placed on John Strong's door step near Calvary's shadow. At the end of Anne's story Strong hands Helen, the foundling, to her mother and Imogene, now satisfied to whom the child belongs, begs Strong's forgiveness.

"Ransom's Folly"

Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

A FOUR-PART picturization of Richard Harding Davis' popular novel, "Ransom's Folly," will be released September 17 by Edison. This story of the romance and daring adventure of a young army officer at a western military post, is good screen material and it will entertain alike those to whom the book is familiar or unfamiliar as the case may be. In the main the novel has been closely adhered to.

Richard Ridgely made the adaptation and directed the production. There is an atmosphere and realism to the picture which makes it hard to believe that the outdoor scenes were enacted within the confines of New York City. The stage-coach hold-up and the Indian camp would be more pleasing to the eye if they were shown against a setting of distant mountains, but the action in these scenes is real and the expansive background is not missed.

Edward Earle has the title role and he fits himself to the part splendidly, using to good advantage his opportunities for light comedy and dramatic action. Mabel Trunnelle is natural and charming as Mary Cahill, and Marc MacDermott in appearance and action is a most satisfactory Pat Cahill. Other members of the cast are George Wright, James Harris, Gladys Leslie and Jessie Stevens.

Having been in active service in the Philippine Islands, Lieutenant Ransom tires of Washington society life and accepts a commission at Fort Stanton. He soon finds that life there is not what he had expected; it is the mere routine army life. Mary Cahill, whose father keeps the supply store, is the only person at the post that interests Ransom. She is not over responsive, feeling that she is not his social equal.

At the mess-hall one evening Ransom's brother officers talk of the road agent who has terrorized the nearby country. He is known only as "the red-rider," and a reward is offered for his capture. Ransom wagers that he can hold up the stage with a pair of shears as his weapon. He pays no attention to their warnings, and wearing a poncho borrowed from Cahill's store, sets out to hold up the incoming stage.

The pay-master, Lieutenant Patten, misses the stage and hires a livery rig to take him to Fort Stanton. Ransom points the shears at the stage driver and commands him to stop. After taking a few trinkets from some women passengers he allows the stage to go on. The pay-master is held up by the "red-rider." The driver is killed but Patten succeeds in keeping the money-bag. In the exchange of pistol shots the outlaw is shot in the right hand.

The next day Ransom is arrested on the charge of having held up the paymaster. Mary takes dainties of her own making to the prisoner. This gives Ransom his opportunity, and he asks her to marry him. Pat Cahill visits the prisoner. He tells conflicting stories as to the reason for his right hand being bandaged. When he learns that Mary and Ransom are to marry he commits suicide, leaving a note stating that he is guilty of the hold-up and begging them to keep the knowledge from Mary, as he stole to pay for her education.

Universal's "Jewel"

Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

COMMENDABLE in both production and interpretation, "Jewel" has a distinct advantage in carrying a story of such general appeal; for in addition to having a splendid moral effect, it is highly entertaining. This Broadway Universal feature is a picturization of Clare Louise Burnham's novel of the same name. While "Jewel," the book, met with flattering success, the film version is almost certain to equal if not surpass the novel in popularity, if for no other reason than that Lois Weber, who adapted it, has given the subject broader treatment.

The fact that the philosophy or doctrine set forth in this story will not be understood, or rather accepted, by many, does not in the least detract from its quality of sustaining the interest which is created by the able handling which the subject has received. The theme concerns a little girl who unites in felicity a group of individuals whose erstwhile discontent, which, according to the theory advanced, is the outcome of selfishness and a general misconception of life itself.

The production, directed by Phillips Smalley, is all that could be desired. Equally effective is the photography. Ella Hall portrays the title role, and her performance is one that will live long in memory, and that gives evidence of good judgment and skill. Rupert Julian can be justly proud of his work in this picture; as Mr. Evringham he is consistent and finished. Miss Brownell as Eloise is also deserving of praise. Completing the cast are Hilda Hollis Sloman, Dixie Carr, Lule Warrenton, T. W. Gowland, Abe Munden, Jack Holt, Frank Elliott and T. D. Crittenden.

Left penniless upon the death of her husband, Mrs. Lawrence Evringham decides to take her father-in-law's hospitality for granted, and with her daughter, Eloise, takes up her residence with him. Elois objects to this, but her mother domineers the situation. They are in the house but a short time when Mr. Evringham receives a letter from another son, asking him to take care of Jewel, Harry's little daughter. Evringham is about to send a wire refusing this request, when his daughter-in-law, whose plans are well laid, voices her approval. This, however, has just the opposite effect, and Jewel is invited to live for a time with her grandfather.

Jewel, who was brought up to love everyone around her "because they are a thought of God," is not long in discovering that she is in a house of discord and hatred. Her reception is cool to the extreme. The only one to speak to her is the housekeeper, and then it is to give her instructions as to what she should not do, which is, in effect, practically everything a child of her years would like to do.

The child takes a great liking to her grandfather, and gradually wins his affection. One night he notices that she has a fever and sends for his physician, who prescribes for her. But Jewel refuses to take the medicine. The following morning she is up and well. This and her many other evidences of a wonderful philosophy excite Evringham's curiosity. Jewel makes her belief clear to him. He is at once impressed and accepts her "Science." She also converts Eloise and her mother. Jewel finally brings harmony into the home which before was barren of happiness.

SOME exceptionally beautiful stage settings, a pretty love story and clever acting by such players as Darwin Karr and Beverly Bayne make "Hearts and Roses," the three-reel Essanay feature to be released on Tuesday, August 24, a thoroughly enjoyable one. Darwin Karr makes his first appearance as an Essanay star in this three-reel feature and proves wholly delightful. In some respects he resembles a former Essanay leading man, who became exceedingly popular with the public, though in some of his mannerisms and physique he will undoubtedly prove even more acceptable with the public and in time become even more popular. He is undoubtedly good looking, wears his clothes well, makes love in a manner that is sure to please the feminine picturegoers and is fully convincing as a manly man for the picture fans of the sterner sex. Miss Bayne is given plenty of opportunity of playing up to him in the big scenes, and Karr and Bayne look like a winning combination and one which will quickly find favor with exhibitors.

The story of "Hearts and Roses" is from the pen of Joseph Roach and while not in the least sensational or spectacular, proves a pretty romance that moves smoothly along toward a happy ending. The production is well handled with a single possible exception, that of the scene showing the hotel room occupied by Baxter just before he departs, after jilting Ruth, and immediately upon his return, when he again sets out to win her love. In both these scenes a picture of Miss Bayne together with an ink bottle and a pen are exceedingly prominent on the table in the foreground, despite the fact that many months elapse between the two scenes. This tiny detail excepted, the picture is satisfying in every way.

As the story runs, Ruth Willard, the daughter of Daniel Willard, a prominent banker and exceedingly wealthy, scorns the honest affections of Dr. Norton, a respected friend of the family, and accepts the proposal of John Baxter, a shallow young man, who pays her considerable attention. When Ruth's father is suddenly attacked by heart failure and dies, leaving the girl poverty-stricken, Baxter immediately jilts her. In time the girl marries Dr. Norton, who proves himself thoroughly capable of assuming the responsibilities of her father's troubles and debts, though neither husband or wife can forget the lover who proved so fickle.

Sometime later Baxter returns and calls upon Mrs. Norton. Norton, discovering by chance the meeting between the

THAT the surroundings and evil influences are character builders of children is one of the ideas which is brought out in the two-reel American production, "The Divine Decree," to be released on August 30. The ever-popular American stars are featured, Winnifred Greenwood portrays the part of Dora, a winningly sweet country girl, and Edward Coxen as Tom, a brazen city tough, who afterward, through the good influence of Dora, starts out anew, is very good.

"The Divine Decree" is a very pretty and interesting story and the photography is excellent throughout. Miss Greenwood and Mr. Coxen are well supported by Otto Nelson, Lizette Thorne and Edward Rainey.

As the story opens, we see Darby and Burson, two crooks, who reside in the squalid tenement, emerge from a bank, after having entered through the iron doors, overcome the night watchman and managing to get away with a large sum of money. Mrs. Darby is on the point of death and she awakens her small daughter and asks her to go down and get Mrs. Burson. Mrs. Burson, followed by her son Tom, who is about Dora's age, comes up to Mrs. Darby's rooms and there tries to comfort here. Darby and Burson arrive home and are quarreling over their loot when Mrs. Burson comes upon them and tells them that Mrs. Darby has passed away. Dora is taken to the country and placed in the care of her aunt Jane. Her father returns to the tenement, and there one night he and Burson are captured and sentenced to fifteen years in the penitentiary.

Fifteen years elapse. Dora is now a very pretty and innocent young girl, who has been made to believe that her father is in Alaska, and she is patiently waiting for the day he will return.

Tom has also grown up, and the environment of the tenement has had its evil influence over him. With a pal, he is following in the footsteps of his father. He and his mother go to the prison gates to greet Burson and Darby. The two white-haired men are freed and they have learned their lesson. Darby, being short of funds, starts to walk to the country to see Dora, and Burson goes home with his wife and son.

Dora is very happy when she sees her father, and when she is getting ready to retire that night, she happens to think of her old playmate, Tom, and wonders if she should not pray for him. She does, and her prayers are answered. In the city Tom is in the act of breaking into a bank, when he sees the form of little Dora standing near him. He stops his operations and just then two policemen, seeing him, give chase. After eluding his pursuers, the young man boards a passing freight train.

Tom rescues the country boy.

In the country Dora is going fishing with one of the country youths. They are out on the pier when the young man grabs Dora in his arms. Her screams are heard by Tom, who has just left the freight train, and he rescues the girl and pushes the youth into the water. He then jumps in and saves the country boy's life.

Dora takes Tom home with her. Just as she is relating to aunt Jane how the young man had saved her from the country boy's attack, her father comes up. As she introduces the men a look of recognition passes between them. The girl notices this and asks Tom if he knew her father in Alaska. With a knowing look the young man replies, "No, I have been on the road to Alaska, but with your help I am turning back."

"Salvation Nell"

THE California Motion Picture Corporation has given a most elaborate production to the adaptation of Edward Sheldon's play, "Salvation Nell." The subject deals with life in the slums of New York City, and therefore offers unlimited occasions for quick, stirring action. The picture, in six reels, is highly finished in every detail of settings and general action. Scenes of the poverty-stricken tenement district are as repulsively squalid in their every phase as are the "uptown" cafes bizarrely sumptuous.

In the endeavor to draw a striking contrast, these two institutions of every large city are frequently exaggerated, but this is not the case in "Salvation Nell." Beatriz Michelena will occasion much comment by her portrayal of the title role, which, though it has its difficulties, is certainly not without opportunities. While she is forceful in the dramatic moments, she keeps well within the bounds of naturalness, and renders a thoroughly artistic performance.

William Pike, as Jim Platt, is excellent. He is always the vicious, debased product of the slums, but with all he has the magnetic personality which makes Nell's love for him seem quite reasonable. Irene Outtrim is repelling as Myrtle, which is the highest tribute Miss Outtrim can expect in the character she plays. Completing the cast are Myrtle Neuman, James Leslie, Andrew Robson, Frank Hollins, Clarence Arper, Kathrine Angus and Nina Herbert, all of whom are deserving of praise for their splendid work.

Nell's three friends, Jim, Sid and Myrtle, persuade her to live with them after the death of her parents. Jim and Nell fall in love. Though the girl has been brought up in a tenement district where the moral code, if any exists, is lax, she has an inherent desire to keep "straight," and refuses Jim's proposal that she live with him. Jim turns his attentions to Sal, a girl less scrupulous. Nell's jealousy causes her to forget her ideals and she consents to live with him.

After a year, Nell's "husband" has scant consideration for her. The money she earns scrubbing floors, he spends for drink. In a fight he kills a man and is sent to prison for five years. Nell becomes a Salvation Army worker in the district she is so well acquainted with, and accomplishes a world of good. Major Williams asks her to marry him, but she refuses. She is determined to reform and marry Jim.

As soon as he is discharged from prison, Jim returns to the city. He meets a former pal, who gives him glowing details of the big haul he can make by robbing a certain apartment. Jim decides to do this. Nell learns of the proposed robbery. She follows him to the house, and while he hesitates to give the signal for the maid, who is an accom-

ON SEPTEMBER 2 the Pathe Exchange will release the first chapter, in two reels, of the Pathe-Balboa serial, "Neal of the Navy." The story is in fourteen chapters, and was written by William Hamilton Osborne. The high expectations, which had their rise in the advance notice making brilliant claims for this continued photoplay, are not to be compared with the promises for interesting action in the chapters to come, with which the first release fills one.

Somehow one gets the impression that "Neal of the Navy" will create a new record for serial offerings. This, of course, is only an impression. But "Neal of the Navy" has been so widely heralded that its first chapter should draw large audiences, and as the initial release gives great promise in the way of a thrilling love story, fine acting and elaborate, realistic staging, it seems only natural to expect that this production will be immensely popular.

The featured players, William Courtleigh, Jr., as Neal

Hardin, and Lillian Lorraine as Annett Illington, do not take an active part in the first chapter. They are seen at the close of the picture, but it is only to make a curtain bow. Edward Brady, the popular Balboa "heavy," is Martinez, and Robert Conklin plays Ponto, the two South Americans who at the close of the chapter swear that they will secure the packet of charts which are now in the possession of Annett.

Both Neal and Annett are children in the opening of the story. The thrill in this picture is supplied by a volcano eruption. The scenes of the volcano belching forth smoke and ashes were photographed during the last upheaval of Mt. Pelee, some time ago. These pictures are effectively used, the inhabitants of the town at the foot of the volcano are seen rushing toward the sea and the occasional cut-back to the smoking crater makes for startling realism.

In the opening scene a trading vessel under command of Captain Hardin anchors in the harbor of Martinique. Hardin's wife and his little son Neal are with him. Illington, an American, lives in the town. Ponto and Martinez negotiate with him to learn the whereabouts of Lost Island. Illington shows them a packet containing the charts. Just then they are startled by the cry that Mt. Pelee has become active. Ponto and Martinez rush from the house. Illington carrying his little daughter, Annett, and followed by her nurse, hurries after them.

They enter a small boat and row out to Hardin's ship, which by now is crowded with women and children. Hardin consents to take the child and her nurse aboard. Illington writes a note and places it in a locket, gives it with the packet of charts, to the nurse. Shortly after the nurse dies. Her dying words are spoken to Neal, who promises her to take care of Annett. After leaving the harbor, the ship takes fire. Neal, his mother and Annett enter one of the life boats. Hardin is drowned with the other passengers.

Illington, Ponto and Martinez are washed ashore on an island. When the South Americans learn that the child has the charts, they overpower Illington. Then, swearing to find the little girl and secure the documents, they walk inland, leaving Illington lying unconscious. Mrs. Hardin and the two children are picked up by a United States cruiser. The note written by Illington is found. It begs whoever may find Annett to care for the child and to jealously guard the packet.

THAT fascinating detective story, "Monsieur Lecoq," from the pen of Emil Gaboriau, has at last found its way to the screen through the medium of the Thanhouser Master-Picture, which will be released on Thursday, August 26, on the Mutual program.

In adapting the story from the book to the screen, the Thanhouser Company has lost none of the elements of deduction on the part of the detective, nor any of the suspense that held the reader spell-bound until he had solved the mystery, and knew the real facts behind the tragedy at the Pepper Box Inn, which scene opens the story.

William Morris is cast in the role of Monsieur Lecoq, the hero detective, and he plays a subtle part in a fashion that is wonderfully effective, though one wishes the producer had shown a bit more clearly the methods by which Lecoq was able to solve some of the problems that confronted him, rather than merely presenting the problem and the solution, without showing the intermediate steps, which are so carefully described in the novel.

Florence LaBadie is seen as the duchess, and Alphonse Either, as the duke, her husband. Both are fully capable of getting everything possible out of the parts assigned them, while Julia Blanc as Mother Chupin, the keeper of the inn, proves herself a remarkable character woman.

Photographically, the picture, which is in four parts, is above criticism, and is sure to delight audiences for some months to come.

As the story opens, M. Lecoq, the famous detective, is attracted to the Pepper Box Inn, just outside of Paris, by hearing several revolver shots, and upon reaching the inn finds two men dead upon the floor, while before him stands another man, in the garb of a laborer, with a gun in his hand.

Mother Chupin, proprietor of the inn, declares the laborer shot in self defense when he was attacked, but Lecoq discovers a woman's diamond ear-ring on the floor. That there is more mystery in the case than at first appeared is evident, and both the laborer and Mother Chupin are arrested.

After examining the outside of the inn and finding several other clews, Lecoq discovers a woman and a lame man with a brown overcoat were present on the night of the murder.

It is found such a man was locked up with the laborer the same night when he was found drunk upon the street. Ere Lecoq visits the jail this man has been freed. Lecoq brings out the fact that the duke was the man responsible for the double tragedy at the inn.

Admitting his guilt, the duke asks Lecoq to listen to his story, and after relating the real facts of the tragedy, proves that he shot in defense of his wife. Lecoq realizes that no good can come from the duke's punishment for the crime, and consents to keep his secret and burn the incriminating evidence he holds against him.

Irene Fenwick is ideal as the "little woman," whose pleasing charms and strong womanly character captivate the sympathies of the audience and compel genuine admiration for her pluck in the face of adversity. Ben Taggart impersonates the manly character of Tom Grayson. His part calls for several muscular skirmishes with his enemies, and the physical as well as the moral strength of this character is clearly evinced. The scene in which Tom forces confession from the scoundrel who has so long hounded his sweetheart is well staged and enacted. PATHE'S stirring romantic serial "The Romance of Elaine," is clearly nearing its end if one may judge by episode ten, which is entitled "The Flash," as ere the installment ends Elaine and Jameson, her friend and Kennedy's former assistant, are in possession of a bit of evidence which clearly shows that Del Mar is anything but what he represents himself to be. The mysterious Professor Arnold is again in evidence, this time disguised as a fisherman, and assists Jameson and Elaine in foiling a certain plan of Del Mar's to secure some fortification plans.

Jameson is proving himself an apt disciple of Craig Kennedy's, for in this particular chapter of the serial he makes use of the scientific methods he has learned from Kennedy to set a trap for Del Mar's expected arrival, by placing a camera in such a position and so equipped that when the intruder enters a flashlight will be discharged and the camera will photograph his features.

As the story begins, Professor Arnold disguised as a fisherman, receives from Lieutenant Woodward a note informing him that J. Smith, a clerk in the war department, has disappeared with a copy of the Sandy Hook defense plans and asking that Arnold keep an eye out for him. Arnold disguises himself as a chauffeur and meets the train, resulting in his securing Smith as a passenger and taking him to the home of Del Mar, the foreign agent.

Peering through the window Arnold sees Smith remove his disguise and give Del Mar the stolen plans, which the latter carelessly places in a book lying on the table. Arnold then pretends to be injured in an automobile accident and has himself carried into Del Mar's home by Elaine and Jameson, who discover him apparently helpless beside the road. While everyone's attention is distracted Arnold removes the plans from their hiding place in the book and slips them into Elaine's vanity box.

When the doctor is summoned to care for Arnold, it is discovered that he is wearing a disguise and a fight follows in which Arnold escapes, closely pursued by Del Mar, but the latter eventually is left behind.

Elaine discovers the plans in her vanity box and when Jameson finds how important they are he is fearful lest an attempt be made to steal them; so he sets the camera trap in the hope of photographing whoever comes for the plans, taking care, of course, to remove the plans themselves so that they cannot be found.

The story is a melodramatic romance built around the great industry of the South and the financial activities of the New York exchange.

Dramatic situations are numerous and stirring even though some of them do seem far-fetched. But in melodrama, authors are licensed to stretch a point in order to obtain the desired dramatic effect. Therefore "The Cotton King" should be classed among the best of this type of story. The production is well handled. Director Eagle has placed the action in appropriate settings throughout.

George Nash, who has appeared in some of the most successful plays on the legitimate stage, is well suited to the John Osborne, a broker, refuses to join a group of Wall Street men who desire to corner the cotton market and sell their holdings at an inflated price. Osborne returns to his home town and buys the Ashton Mills from Henry Stockley. He retains Stockley's son Richard as his general manager. Elsie Kent, a young working girl in the mills, is in love with Richard, and she is betrayed by him.

Henry Stockley is killed in an accident. His will states that Richard is to be his sole heir, on the condition of his marrying Hetty Drayson. Stockley had greatly wronged the girl's mother and he made this condition in a moment of remorse. Hetty has since become engaged to Osborne. Osborne determines to sell all his holdings in cotton. He sends a telegram in code to his broker to sell. Richard sees his opportunity to ruin Osborne and changes the code number to read "hold," and as a result Osborne is practically ruined.

Richard then spreads the report that his employer has betrayed Elsie. The mill workers march to Osborne's office swearing to lynch him. To save her employer Elsie tells the truth about Richard. The men turn on the latter, but Osborne prevents them from attacking him. Osborne leaves for New York, and Richard follows him. While riding in the country in his automobile, Osborne is held up by two thugs who take him to a deserted farm house and hold him prisoner.

Hetty learns of the lynching party.

This is Richard's plan for being rid of his rival for the hand of Hetty.

He returns to Ashton. Osborne escapes from the farm house and makes his way back to the mills. Richard sends for Hetty. In his office he informs her that her lover is dead and proposes that she marry him. The girl repulses him, and in a fit of anger he pushes her into the elevator shaft. Osborne arrives at the mill in time to rescue Hetty from the descending elevator. Richard is unmasked and put under arrest.

"The Phantom Happiness"

Reviewed by John C. Garrett

WITH splendid photography, a well balanced cast and many heart stirring scenes, "The Phantom Happiness," the Lubin three-reel production to be released on September 3, is a picture which is wonderfully gripping.

Ormi Hawley as Mary Allison, a strange, unrestful creature, does excellent work. Earl Metcalfe takes the part of Don Emerson, a novelist, contented with life as it is without wealth, and Rosetta Brice portrays the role of Alice Emerson, his wife, a woman who is devoted and true to her husband but has a longing for the joy and luxury that accompanies wealth.

Don Emerson, a novelist, is working on his latest book manuscript when there crosses the garden a stranger, Mary Allison, who is fortified by a power of fascination in her hitherto unsuccessful search for happiness. Don realizes that Mary is the embodiment of his fiction character and his startling glances toward her bring forth an explanation and he shows her the fragment of his manuscript containing an apt description of her.

As the girl is leaving the garden Emerson's wife, Alice, enters, excited over the sudden receipt of a letter telling of an inheritance of a magnificent sum of money. After being established in a mansion, Alice Emerson spends money and time in lavish entertainments. Her husband tries to concentrate his mind on his work but finds it impossible.

One night Alice is giving one of the biggest affairs of the season to celebrate her birthday and Don is in his study reading. She bursts into the room with some of her friends and insists that he join the party. After a few words he leaves in a fury, telling Alice to remain with her happiness while he seeks his. The days pass and Alice is broken-hearted over Don's absence. She calls on her lawyer for advice and later he goes to see Mary with a check for $5,000, asking her to relinquish all claims on Don. The girl takes the check, tears it up and tells him to go back to Mrs. Emerson with it. Alice then decides she will go to the house herself and plead with Mary. While she is gone Don returns home to get some missing manuscripts and in his study finds everything as it had been before he left except there is a fresh vase of roses near his picture. He returns to Mary's home and overhears Alice offering Mary sum after sum of money if she will step out of their lives. Mary remains impassive to the appeals of Alice, who leaves heart-broken.

Don steps into the room, tells Mary that soon they would have discovered their happiness to be a phantom and leaves her and returns to his wife. Mary is on the point of killing herself when she realizes that she can find happiness in bringing happiness to others and we last see her bringing joy to small children in an orphan home.

Itala's "Maciste of Turin"

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon

IT is a novelty in these days to meet with a story, written or filmed, in which the hero establishes himself as such through physical attainments alone. But this he does in Itala's new seven-part feature, "Maciste of Turin," and the respect and admiration inspired by his tremendous strength equal, if not surpass, that aroused by the slender, well-dressed hero of modern day dramas with his scientific methods, strategy and captivating good looks.

Further identification than that Maciste played the part of the big slave in D'Annunzio's "Cabiria," is not necessary, for the picture-going public. "Cabiria," recognized as the film world's greatest spectacle, played for months in the largest houses, and for variable periods in practically every town in the United States. And Maciste is the character that remains foremost in the mind of nearly everyone who viewed "Cabiria."

Feats of strength when labeled and performed as such are not exceptionally interesting or entertaining, but when worked into "Maciste of Turin" as events in the giant's romance they assume an air of grim humor and unstaged realism that few will fail to appreciate. One of Maciste's accomplishments is hanging by one arm from the coach of a speeding train and scooping a man up from the road in his other arm. In another crisis he is seen to fell seven men, bind them hand and foot, and load them, two at a time, upon a cart. Again, he picks up two men, one in each hand, and carries them around like suitcases.

Maciste's Samson-like proportions inspired the story, and it is written around him. In private life Maciste is Ernest Pagano. Arline Costello's duties as Josephine consist chiefly in getting into difficulties and having Maciste extricate her. Roar Armond as the Duke Alexis, and Dorothy Farnsworth as Josephine's mother are other principals in the cast.

Briefly, the story deals with Maciste's experience while delivering Josephine's mother from the power of the Duke Alexis and his hirelings. The duke, to gain control of the woman's fortune, bribed Dr. Krauss to confine her in the Lonely Valley insane asylum. Her daughter Josephine enlists Maciste's aid in the attempt to rescue her mother, and shortly afterwards herself falls into the duke's power. Maciste locates the house in which the girl is imprisoned, and, after a hard fight, frees her. He then applies for a place as servant in the duke's household. Accepted, he lays a trap for the duke, and as a result succeeds in freeing Josephine's mother. The duke and his men Maciste turns over to the police.

FELIX MALITZ ISSUES STATEMENT EXPLAINING ATTACK UPON HIM

Felix Malitz, vice-president and general manager of the American Correspondent Film Company, Inc., having been requested by several newspaper men to make a statement in regard to the article which appeared in the New York World of August 15, 1915, in which his name was mentioned, has prepared the following statement:

"I was vice-president and general manager of Pathe Freres, Jersey City, and Pathe Exchange, Inc., New York City, for some time, and was compelled to give up these positions, which were controlled by French interests, on account of my German origin, in spite of having declared my United States citizenship.

"As a matter of consequence I had to look out for another means of livelihood and I agreed to conduct the business of the American Correspondent Film Company, Inc., upon the condition that I have full power to run that corporation in a straightforward, business-like and neutral American way.

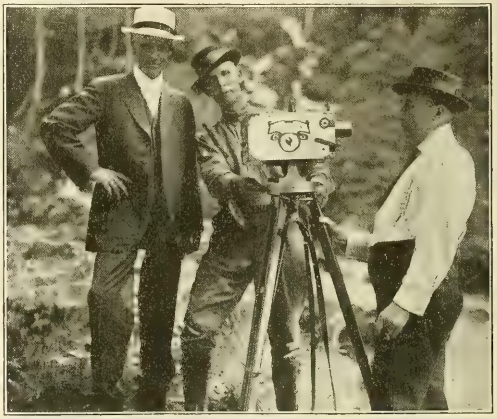
"It is true that M. B. Claussen, the president of the corporation, has paid into the bank the sum of $22,000 as a loan to the corporation, but I personally can say that I have never seen the agreement of which the World speaks. All I desired in undertaking this work was to be properly financed in order to carry on the business. As to the authenticity of the war pictures turned out by the American Correspondent Film Company, Inc., I always have emphasized verbally and in all my correspondence and in all my advertising that these are 'Official' war pictures. So there is certainly no mystery about it, and I do not see that the World discovered anything that I had not announced broadcast long before the World helped me to advertise this fact.

"If there is anybody who doubted the genuineness and the exciting interest of our pictures on account of so many fake war pictures having previously been put on the market, I am sure he has changed his mind by this time, and believes that the right stuff is now being offered and that when I said ours are genuine official war pictures, I certainly made no misrepresentation as to their particularly authentic value.

"I call attention also to the fact that the American Correspondent Film Company, Inc., is not engaged in the manufacture of war pictures alone, but in addition is making pictures of general interest, the object being to conduct a film business in the proper, legitimate manner and personally I feel that I have the same right to do this without interference as any other man who has declared his intention of upholding the principles of this Republic."

VIRGINIA PEARSON NOW A FEATURED VITAGRAPH PLAYER



The Vitagraph Company has recently secured a new star. Virginia Pearson, the beautiful stage favorite, has heard and answered the call of the screen and the Vitagraph Company is lucky to be able to secure such a versatile actress. Her stage career was a most brilliant one. She was co-star with some of the most noted legitimate actors and she has been responsible for the success with which many of the recent stage hits have met. Miss Pearson was the original vampire with Robert Hilliard in the memorable drama, "A Fool There Was"; she was leading woman with William Faversham in "The Hawk" and played opposite Bruce McRae in the successful comedy "Nearly Married." Eugene Walters and other stage favorites also realized Miss Pearson's ability and she was cast with them in some of their notable plays. Her first work in motion pictures was done for Famous Players, she being featured in "Aftermath." Some of the releases in which Miss Pearson will appear in the stellar role for the Vitagraph Company are "The Writing on the Wall," "The Turn in the Road," "The Reward," and "Thou Art the Man."

MC DOWELL STILL USING FILMS IN HIS PUBLICITY

Lloyd W. McDowell, well known in the picture industry in his former position as publicity manager of the Great Northern Railway, where he had occasion many times to make use of motion pictures in an advertising way, and who more recently had been in charge of the advertising of the Portland Rose Festival, is now connected with the Portland Chamber of Commerce and, as before, finds motion pictures one of the most satisfactory methods of obtaining the sort of publicity he desires.

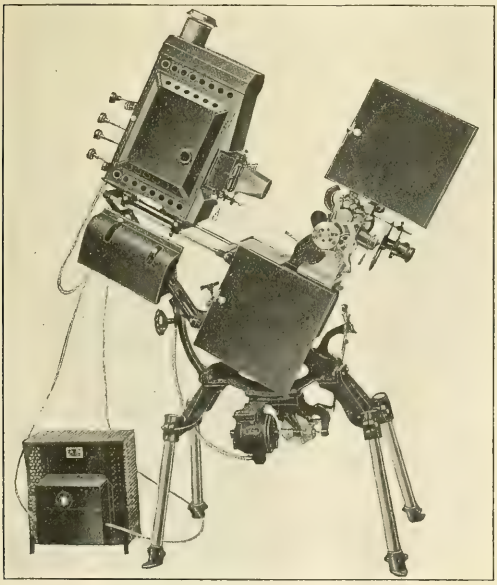
The accompaning picture shows S. Benson, one of Oregon's best-known citizens and probably the only man for whom a day at the San Francisco Exposition was ever set aside; W. A. Van Scoy, representative of the Pathe Weekly in Portland, and Mr. McDowell, himself, at Benson Park, which Mr. Benson recently donated to the city of Portland. As time goes on Mr. McDowell expects to find more and more frequent use for motion pictures in his publicity work.

The volume of V. L. S. E. business has increased with such leaps and bounds, and the demands of the exhibitors and the newspapers and magazines for special publicity matter on the Big Four features, have been so insistent and so voluminous, that Mr. Giegerich has been compelled to devote his entire attention to the preparation of special advertising and news stories for the Big Four features.



The editorship of the house organ is one of the most arduous of tasks, and to continue in charge of the paper would have entailed so much time and attention, that the best interests of the exhibitors could not have been properly looked after. With Mr. Giegerich giving his entire time to the preparation of special news articles, exhibitors using the V. L. S. E. service will receive the finest sort of co-operation as regards their publicity needs.

Banquet recently given by Nicholas Power.

NICHOLAS POWER EVOLVES NEW TYPE OF PROJECTION MACHINE

The name Nicholas Power has been synonymous with the projection of motion pictures practically since the inception of the motion picture industry. A pioneer in the game, he has won deserved recognition and has devoted the best years of his life to perfecting the mechanism of the motion picture projecting machine, with the result that today we view with wondering eyes the picture as it is thrown on the screen without flicker and with the eye strain eliminated.

Mr. Power in the many years of his connection with the industry has invented many projecting machines and continually added improvements until the model Power's Cameragraph No. 6A seemed to fulfill every expectation of both himself and the entire trade. Not content to rest upon the wonderful success of this machine, Mr. Power studied, experimented and with the inventive ability and great genius along mechanical lines which he possesses, he evolved the latest and what he considers the last word in projection machines—Power's Cameragraph No. 6B.

Many mechanics and engineers of international repute who have seen this new model have pronounced it a marvel of the age and a fitting tribute to Mr. Power. This machine constitutes all the most necessary and desirable features in modern up-to-date projection that years of study, experiment and experience have adduced and is designed to give perfect satisfaction under any and all conditions. The mechanism has reached the point of ultimate refinement through the use of the finest material with best of workmanship for each part, giving proper study to its particular functions. Many alterations, changes and additions, suggested by field experience, have been made. The stand, entirely new in design, is exceptionally rigid and substantial in construction. It consists of two sections; the lower, which is fixed, being fitted with a central hub on which the upper section rocks; both are securely fastened together by heavy bolts through slots, permitting a tilting of the upper section which carries the mechanism and lamphouse. The motor drive and lower construction remain horizontal. The finest adjustment is obtainable by means of a worm, the control of which is easily accessible, permitting the centering of the picture on the screen even during operation at all times. A simple hand wheel locking device gives additional rigidity to the entire equipment.

The take-up is simplicity itself, consisting of two metal disks, one fibre faced, revolving one against the other and running on ball-bearings. The extent of friction surface has been carefully computed, permitting an even and continuous but slightly intermittent tension, causing the film to be wound to the proper tightness on the take-up reel. Once the adjustment is made by a simple collar and set screw, no further attention is necessary. In test this device has taken up 3,000 feet of film, maintaining an even tension throughout.

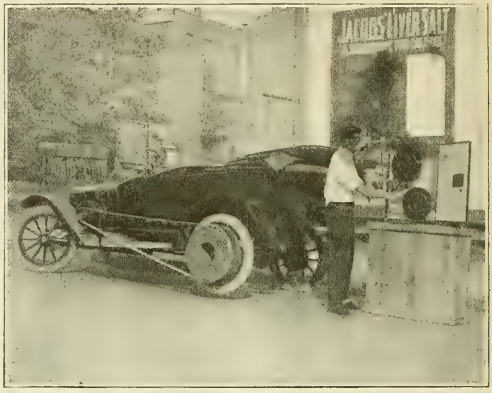
The new lamphouse deserves special attention; it is of very substantial construction, permitting easy access. It has been specially designed with a view of allowing the best possible ventilation. The doors are of double metal with air space between; cooling chutes are provided both above and below the condenser mount, securing a very desirable arrangement. The cooling of the interior of the lamphouse is procured by an ingenious duct construction in the top, leading to a vent and efficiently drawing off the heat. Radiation is reduced to a minimum.

MANAGER TOBIAS SETS RECORD FOR BOOKING

Fourteen bookings on "The Diamond from the Sky," the American's picturized novel, is the record for the week made by Maurice F. Tobias, who has just returned to the managership of the Mutual Film Corporation's Western Film branch, formerly known as "The Western Exchange."



M. F. Tobias.

Mr. Tobias has had a highly interesting career, and an eventful one. He was born in New York in 1876 and was reared in Milwaukee, Wis. He attended the University of Wisconsin. In 1907 he entered the employ of the William Fox enterprises. Next he went to George Kleine, going thence to the Actograph Branch of the General Film Company. When J. C. Graham, now assistant to the president of the Mutual, took charge of the Western Film Exchange, Mr. Tobias was engaged to cover the upstate territory and in view of his record was given the task of opening the Boston office of the Mutual Film Corporation. As a reward for his efforts there he was made manager of the Western Film Exchange, remaining there almost two years. Then he became district manager of Warner's Features, Inc., and W. L. Sherry, knowing Mr. Tobias as a business getter, induced him to exploit "Famous Players" in New York state.

PORTABLE MOTION PICTURE APPARATUS PROVES SUCCESSFUL

An interesting portable outfit for showing motion pictures has been developed by W. H. Weingar, district salesman for the Maxwell Motor Sales Corporation, Columbus, Ohio, for use in showing motion picture scenes from the Maxwell factories. The apparatus, which is shown in the accompanying illustration, includes a Robbins & Myers 110-volt direct current flywheel-pulley generator which is belted to a 24-inch pulley attached to the left rear wheel. The generator is mounted on a 2-inch plank on the running board at the front of the automobile, as shown in the illustration. To operate the motor, the rear wheels are raised before the belt is connected to the pulley, power being obtained from the automobile engine. A switchboard is mounted on the wind shield of the car and is equipped with a voltmeter, field rheostat, switch, and three receptacles. One of the receptacles is for a switchboard lamp, another for the motion picture machine, and the remaining one for a Robbins & Myers fan, which is usually placed in front of the engine radiator to cool the motor. The motion picture machine is mounted on the front end of a scenery wagon, and at the rear of this wagon there is a framework to which a screen is attached. The picture machine is operated by a 500-watt incandescent lamp which is said to give a very satisfactory picture up to a projection distance of 60 feet or 70 feet.

KEMPTON GREENE, LUBIN JUVENILE, TELLS OF PHOTOPLAY BEGINNING

Only three years in photoplay, with an inconspicuous beginning with one company, would ordinarily mean a limited amount of experience in the work, but I think I can put in a claim for a graduate's diploma—that is, so far as having passed the grammar grades. I never expect to be wholly finished.

Kempton Greene.

Instead of spending my vacation away from the city, I joined a friend and got a chance to play small parts at the Lubin studio for Colonel Joseph Smiley. Summer lapsed into autumn and then winter came. I was still increasing my experience as a screen player. One thing led to another, until George Terwilliger gave me my first leading part in his play, "The Cry of the Blood." Last winter he chose me to go to St. Augustine with his special company, where I played a succession of important parts and had some unforgetable escapes.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker, MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Los Angeles

The most notable social event ever given in the history of California motion picture life will be a grand after summer dinner dance at the famous Alexandria Hotel, September 4, in honor of David Wark Griffith, premier producer; Thomas H. Ince, director-general of Inceville; Mack Sennett, the comedy producer de luxe, and hundreds of invited guests. The affair is to be given under the auspices of Morgan Ross, manager of the hotel, who has invited the movie people to meet Los Angeles society on that event. The affair is limited to five hundred people and is by invitation. Many leaders in film life have been invited, and elaborate preparations are being made to make the affair particularly notable.

The arrival of Billie Burke, the famous star of the legitimate stage, whom Thomas H. Ince will introduce into the mysteries of motion pictures, is awaited with unusual interest. In a recent issue of MOTOGRAPHY a splendid story told about the preparations made for the new movie star, and it has created a semi-sensation in screen circles.

The Balboa Amusement Producing Company, under the general direction of its president and general manager, H. M. Horkheimer, continues to steadily advance and add new ground and buildings to its studios at Long Beach. The company has one of the best-equipped and most picturesque locations in southern California, with the ocean, shipping attractions, and general surroundings right convenient.

Henrietta Crossman is the latest of the big stars to arrive at the Universal studios. Special features will be especially written adapted to the Broadway star for forthcoming productions by Harvey Gates.

Francis Ford and Grace Cunard have been staging scenes of unusual interest during the present week for their big battle scene picturization of the armies of Gretzhoffen and Grahaffen. Several hundred extra people were used as soldiers in the huge sets, and Ford thinks it will be a masterpiece release for the Universal program.

Some 600 visiting midshipmen from the Annapolis Academy, U. S. N., have been sojourning in and around Los Angeles during the present week. Many of them visited the Big U studios and other picture headquarters, where special films showing the boys of the navy in uniform were made. These pictures will have an educational value, as hundreds of thousands of people will see them throughout the country.

Director Otis Turner, the dean of Universal producers, has been taking a much needed rest at Arrowhead Hot Springs, well earned after his task of directing the celebrated comedian, Nat C. Goodwin, for a Universal picture, in "Business Is Business."

William Worthington and company are taking special pictures at Catalina Island for the picture Fair God of Sun Island, a scenario by James Dayton, which will be an early Universal release.

Oklahoma

That moving pictures are popular with the negroes as well as with white people is evidenced by the starting of the second moving picture theater in Oklahoma City, Okla., which was opened August 16 at 216 West Reno street. The first negro picture house was started last week on East Grand. Both houses will show to negroes exclusively.

Damages aggregating $2,509.51 are asked from the North American Film Corporation in an amended petition filed in the district court at Oklahoma City, Okla., August 16, by Arthur G. Hull. The plaintiff alleges that the defendants are the sole owners of the right to exhibit and lease for exhibition the motion picture serial, "The Diamond from the Sky," and that he entered into contract with them in March, 1915, to take charge of and manage their business in the state of Oklahoma at a salary of $45 weekly. At the time he was representing the Thanhouser Film Corporation and the Syndicate Film Corporation, which the defendants knew, and agreed that he should retain this employment. He claims that in five or six days after the contract was made the North American people demanded that he give up his positions as manager for the other concerns, and that ten days later discharged him from their employ. He sues for $1,080 for loss resulting from giving up the Thanhouser and Syndicate jobs, and $1,440 on the North American contract. In addition, he has a claim of $24.51 for expenses.

The business men of Tecumseh, Okla., have a novel means of attracting farmers to town during the busy part of the year, known as the Farmers' Free Show. The business men pay the moving picture show to put on free shows every Saturday and the town people are also attracted downtown during the afternoon. The merchants also take advantage of the opportunity to advertise during the shows and immediately following them. The scheme has proved a decided financial success and the free picture shows on Saturdays will be continued indefinitely.

Illinois

Instructions in the operation of a moving picture machine is being given ministers attending the Methodist camp meeting now in progress at New Lenox, Ill., by Rev. James O'May of Aurora, Ill. Moving pictures having been used with much success in a number of churches in Illinois and in other states, it was decided by the Conference to provide for free instructions so that the ministers could operate the machines and avoid expense of hiring operators when showing pictures in the churches in connection with the regular religious services.

North American Film Corporation: The report that a certain percentage of the preferred stock will be retired at 110 this fall, together with the steadily increasing amount of bookings (now past the $800,000 mark) have had their due effect upon the stockholders. Preferred stock was bought at 65 during the last week. There have been a number of trades in both common and preferred and stock is now in demand.

Biograph Company: The market on this stock has flattened out with numerous offerings around 60 and under, but no bids.

Mutual Film Corporation: The new program of the Mutual can probably be summed up in the word "variety." According to exhibitors in the different sections of the country, it is the best program this company has ever given to its patrons. The preferred stock was fairly active during the past week, and, as no change is expected in regard to the preferred dividend, the investment return—around the present level of stock—is between 13 per cent and 14 per cent. As to when dividends on the common stock will be resumed seems to be a matter of considerable divergence of opinion. A good business policy would seem to dictate the establishment of a substantial surplus before any further distribution on the common issue takes place.

On the 16th instant the Syndicate Film Corporation declared a final dividend of $14.95½. This brings to an end the most successful career of this company, which was organized by John Burnham & Co. in April, 1914, to distribute the serial motion picture known as "The Million Dollar Mystery."

The total capital paid in was $100,000 and to the stockholders there has been returned $605,780. In addition to the amount paid the stockholders in cash, they have received a pro rata share of a purchase of $100,000 in the Randolph Film Corporation, a new company which will operate along the same lines as the Syndicate Film Corporation. Mr. James Sheldon, who was president of the Syndicate Film Corporation, will also head the Randolph Film Corporation.

The returns which the stockholders enjoyed in this instance on their investment indicate what can be accomplished by the direct application of energies, and the conserving of all interests for the benefit of those who invested their money in the project.

interested in the making of a moving picture film of some 6,000 feet, which has just been completed. Local talent, including the Wiley brothers, J. H. Davis and Ed Flowers and cowboys, have been working for the past two months at Shalk Bluff on the Nueces Canyon. Several narrow escapes from serious accidents, which were not intended as part of the film, were experienced. Percy Rowland fell off his horse and collided with a stump, while Wiley, in riding his horse across a log which spanned a deep ravine, barely escaped death to horse and rider by the animal slipping while on the bridge. The plot had to do with numerous robberies by a band of outlaws, who escaped over Chalk Bluff by means of a rope to the lake, some 300 feet below. The pictures will be developed in San Antonio.

M. L. Oppenheimer has commenced the construction of a new theater and office building, to be located at 111-113 West Houston street, San Antonio, Tex. The building will cost about $30,000, not including plumbing, wiring or fixtures and equipment. The building will be two stories in height. It will have reinforced concrete skeleton, with brick and tile walls and terra cotta facing. The theater will have a seating capacity of about 1,000 persons and has already been leased for a moving picture show.

The city board of commissioners of Dallas, Tex., by an ordinance passed August 18, provided for a censor and a board of appeal to consist of seven persons to be appointed by the city commissioners. The ordinance is entirely acceptable to the moving picture interests and, it is believed, will satisfy the majority of moving picture goers.

Omaha—The General Film Offices and Exchange has moved its offices and employees to Des Moines, Iowa. It will only have a branch office henceforth in Omaha to supply local exhibitors.

The Bohemian Music Company, incorporated in the state of Nebraska, has just purchased the new South Thirteenth Street theater, which is expected to be finished by October 1. It will be managed by Mr. Hodek, the president of the new corporation. The new Theater Bohemia will have 700 seats and a 60-foot stage and will show vaudeville and the Universal program. It is located at Thirteenth and Williams streets.

Henry Roff has started building the Reel theater. It will have 400 seats and is to be located at the corner of Twenty-sixth and Leavenworth streets. Excavations are just completed.

The old American theater will be remodeled for pictures, as the Bond Amusement Company of Des Moines has determined to make it the Theater de Beautiful. A mirror screen is to be installed and possibly a pipe organ. They will show the Shubert photoplays in seven and eight reels. It will be managed by A. W. Thompson, former Chicago showman.

Fremont—The Lyric theater has been remodeled into a classic picture house with a five-piece lady orchestra. It will have four shows daily. The program includes vauleville and special feature program. The house is leased by George H. Bonner of Pittsburgh, who will manage it.

NEW YORK ITEMS.

We hereby congratulate John W. Grey, assistant to Albert E. Smith, treasurer of the General Film Company, treasurer of Vitagraph, and president of V. L. S. E., on the recent advent into his family of a baby girl, Marguerite L. Grey, and through him extend a sincere welcome and our best regards to the little lady.

Percy Heath, who for a week filled the publicity chair at World Film vacated by Jake Wilk, has returned to the legitimate forces, joining Chas. Dillingham in his exploitation of "Chin Chin," starring Montgomery and Stone.

Harry R. Raver's latest Itala production, featuring Maciste, the big slave in "Cabiria," will be released as soon as the title of the production is decided upon. This is to be determined by a contest among the reviewers of the film, the titles suggested to appear in their reviews.

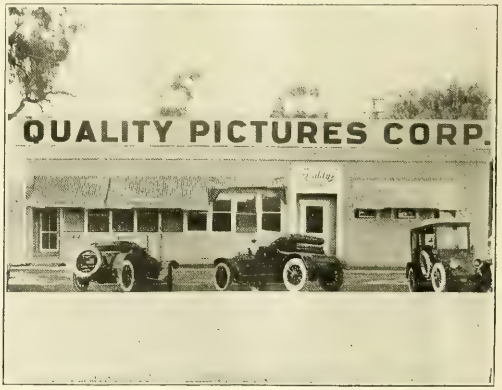
The Radium Gold Fibre Screen Company contemplates enlargng its present quarters on the tenth floor of the Candler building to make room for the firm of Winick & Brock, possessor of the world rights, outside of the United States, on World Film productions, which will move its offices in with Radium's.

L. J. Rubinstein has been seen riding to and from New Rochelle so much within the past few weeks that casual patronizers of the N. Y., N. H. & H. R. R. have begun to think him a property commuter, installed to convince the public that a person can ride on the New Haven and still live. On his busy days Ruby's record has soared to three round trips between New York and New Rochelle—some relay.

Al Lichtman, of the Standard Program, has returned from an extended tour through the West, where he established a string of Standard exchanges.

S. L. Rothapfel is more than optimistic about the prospects of the Rialto theater, which is in course of construction on the site of Hammerstein's old Victoria theater. Rothapfel expects the theater to be finished in December, and promises that it will be the best in the world. Coming from Roxy, this promise is not an empty one. The seating capacity of the house will be about 2,100.

Charles Horan, well known in studio circles through his geniality and former connections with Thanhouser and Universal, is producing features for the Rolfe company at Metro's Sixty-first street studio.



Henry James, formerly business manager for Reel Life, is now a member of the Metro publicity department of which his brother, Arthur James, is manager.

L. W. Atwater, sales manager for the Precision Machine Company, manufacturers of Simplex projection machines, returned last week from the Coast, where he had charge of the Simplex exhibit at the fair.

Bill Barry, the man behind Nicholas Power advertising, is taking his vacation in week-ends. He enjoyed the first section last week, spending Friday, Saturday and Sunday at Nantucket and Thursday and Sunday nights on the boat between New York and there. On the return trip the boat worked six hours overtime tumbling about in a storm, and Bill, despite his generous proportions, had difficulty in resisting the call of the magnetic railing. He did, though—for which we gotta give him credit.

L. Case Russell, scenarioist, with offices in the Times building, is spending the summer up at Green Lake, N. Y. She expects to return to the city about Labor day.

Frank C. Bangs, recognized in theatrical circles as one of New York's foremost photographers, opened the McKinley Square theater, located at 169th street and Boston road, New York, on August 27.

John Wild, formerly connected with Eclair and Gaumont, is now American representative and manager of the New York office of the Hepworth-American Film Corporation. Mr. Wild's acquaintance with the motion picture business dates back nine or ten years. In England, he became familiar with all the branches of the business on both the exhibitor's and manufacturer's sides. He became connected with the Eclair Company in this city as John D. Tippett's assistant. He left Eclair to join the Gaumont Company as sales manager. His next connection was with the Hepworth Company as publicity and sales manager. On W. Arthur's leaving for the home office of the firm in London, Mr. Wild took his place as American representative.

The offices of the Centaur Film Company, formerly located in Bayonne, are now to be found at 1423-17 West Twenty-third street, where Chester Beecroft and H. Poppe are in charge.

F. O. Nelson, the man behind "Guarding Old Glory," left New York last week after a few days' conference with his representative here, W. H. Rudolph.

Lloyd Robinson, formerly editor of the motion picture section of the New York Morning Telegraph, and one of the conspirators perpetrating under the name of Gordon Trent, is now a member of the publicity department of the Famous Players Film Company, where he will co-operate with Ben P. Schulberg, director of advertising and publicity and scenario editor of the concern. David Wallace, well known in theatrical circles, formerly press representative with "Omar, the Tentmaker," and "The Bird of Paradise," takes Lloyd Robinson's place.

Arthur James, director of publicity for the Metro Pictures Corporation, was one of the busiest men on the grounds at the exhibitors' carnival at Brighton last Saturday. Immediately on alighting from his Peerless, he took up the trail of the cameraman who should have been waiting for him, and Hawkshawed on his trail until he finally ran him down and had him take some cracking good pictures of Metro's dress-machine—an automobile dream in white, decorated with orchids, roses, and snow-white doves.

CHICAGO GOSSIP

Ben Juddel, Chicago manager of the Mutual, is starting a series of weekly letters to exhibitors in this territory. Any exhibitor that doesn't get a weekly hunch from Ben is requested to send in his name and house location.

Mr. Juddel stated on Monday that the latest tip he had from the home office was to the effect that Crane Wilbur and a well known female lead had just about been signed to appear in three-reel features.

B. S. Moss, who has been touring the tanks securing bookings for World Film is now hanging his hat up in the Mutual Chicago office.

Geo. K. Spoor in a recent interview stated that he is breaking ground for a new studio to be 140x300 feet. This will give Essanay three studios in Chicago. The addition is being made to take care of the tremendous increase in their output.

Joseph Finn returned from Santa Barbara and Los Angeles Wednesday carrying a heavy cold in his "bronchial" tubes.

Aaron Gollos had on exhibition at Orchestra Hall at handsome painting in oils, 6x8 feet large, of Sarah Bernhard. The Hamburg Engstrom Company made the painting and handsomely framed it.

F. C. McCarahan was a visitor at this office August 23. Mac is having considerable success with a new business in which he is part owner.

Frank L. Hough is the inventor of a new kind of vacation. During the week that Frank took off he was to be found at his desk every day. To heighten the effect he had travel pictures from Geo. Kleine's big stock run off on the screen during the noon hour.

The Mutual Film Company opened a new office at Des Moines last week. Iowa exhibitors who were formerly served by Chicago or Minneapolis branches now get their films direct from Des Moines.

B. N. Juddel went to Minneapolis on Monday to argue with the furniture movers. Ben is going to be a regular citizen when his household goods arrive. He left his competent young brother on the job, who is the world's greatest exponent of "truth in advertising."

Newspapers in Chicago, at any rate, do not take kindly to the efforts of moving picture press agents, but they all printed the story last week of June Keith's holdup in one of our north shore suburbs. Miss Keith is a new Essanay star.

George U. Stevenson brought the tang of the sea with him on a visit to this office August 21. George is recovering his health fast and expects to go to Jersey and eat watermelons to put the finishing touches to the cure before going back to London. More power to you, George.

George Sheldon, champion advertising man and golfist of Nichols-Finn, has invited the ad man to be present when he trims Tom Quill on the local links. We advise Sheldon to be cautious as Quill may not let him ride back in the W. K. Hudson after the game.

R. M. Vandivert, who is a stellar ad man for the W. K. News, is in Chicago this week calling on the trade.

Charles C. Pyle has added a service agency to his regular job of selling Bartola instruments. Anyone buying an instrument now is given names and addresses of expert Bartolaists and, so as not to put anyone out of a job, Chas. is teaching regular piano players the intricacies of the attachment.

M. G. Watkins, general manager American Standard Film Company, was a caller last week. Watkins is full of pep about a new stunt his company is pulling off.

Geo. L. Cox is producing a three-reel "back to the land" picture for his company and later starts a picture for the Simmons Manufacturing Company of St. Louis.

The Advance Motion Picture Company took pictures of the Elgin road race Friday and Saturday for A. M. Gollos. They will be released through the Photoplay Releasing Company.

Ben Beadell, the hustling president of the National Waterproofing Company, has just returned from one kind of a vacation. Ben took a ride down the canal to Morris, Ill. Some trip. Just like taking the boat around Spuyten Duyvil.

C. L. Worthington emerged from the hospital last week, nine pounds lighter. Don't ask me, I don't know what it was.

Fred Balshofer, accompanying Francis X., arrived in town last week and stayed a couple of hours and says he will spring some news through the press in a few days.

E. A. Hamburg says he closed quite a contract with one of the big Chicago manufacturers for life-size lobby displays. A splendid achievement for so young a firm.

DeWolf Hopper stopped off Sunday on his way to the coast, where he goes into pictures for Tom Ince.

The owners of big theaters who met here about six weeks ago to discuss forming a new manufacturing combination or a new renting combination, will meet the 25th at the Sherman House to crystallize their deliberations. An announcement by William Sievers, chairman of the meeting, will be published next week.

Geraldine Farrar, Metro's star, stopped in her private car last week en route to the big city.

W. R. Rothacker is back from the Pacific coast. Mrs. Rothacker and family returned with him.

H. A. Spanouth is wearing the smile that won't come off this week. The new war pictures taken by the Chicago Tribune's representatives, and the enthusiastic crowds packing the Studebaker every day to see them may be the reason.

Paul Kuhn, a native New Yorker now, flitted into the Chicago office of Nichols-Finn on the 21st. Paul believes Coney Island beats the White City, says we have no subway, and generally looks with contumely on this world's greatest summer resort. Paul is like a phonograph with only one record, "The Mutual is the greatest program on earth and the Mutual advertising is the best on earth." If I had a couple of boosters like Paul I'd run for president, and make it, too, I'll wager.

NOTES FROM ALL OVER

An interesting event occurred the other day at the Reliance-Majestic studios in Los Angeles when Ninon Fovieri, sister of the Reliance actress, Adoni Fovieri, made her screen debut in "Providence and the Twins."

Thomas Walsh, assistant director of Universal company, has joined the Quality Picture Company as assistant director to W. J. Bowman. Lee Smith, also of Universal, will act as Mr. Walsh's assistant.

Ruth Stonehouse, leading woman with Essanay, was a guest of the manager of the Vaudette theater, Springfield, Ill., recently. She appeared on the stage both afternoon and evening after the showing of the three-reel drama, "When My Lady Smiles," in which she stars.

Five multiple reel "Broadway Favorites" features are among Kalem's regular release for August. They are "The Maker of Dreams," featuring Hal Forde; "The Runaway Wife," featuring Stewart Baird; "The Legacy of Folly," featuring Lois Meredith; "The Barnstormers," featuring Myrtle Tannehill, and "The Masked Dancer," featuring Anne Orr.

June Keith, a leading actress with Essanay, has covered much territory in the short time she has been with Essanay. She began her work in "A Bunch of Keys" and toured Michigan with the company producing this play. She then went to Chattanooga, Tenn., taking part in the Mary Roberts Rinehart plays. As soon as she returned to Chicago she was rushed East to join the company headed by Joseph Byron Totten and now "The Man Trail" has taken her to "The Pines," near Waukegan, Ill., where she takes the leading feminine role, opposite Richard C. Travers.

Helen Ware and Frank Campau are the two most recent legitimate stage celebrities engaged by Mr. Griffith to be starred in Triangle "Fine Arts Films."

A young woman of promise who is a newcomer to the screen world is Lillian West. She has joined the Balboa forces lately and will soon be seen in some good parts.

A recent addition to the stock company at the Reliance studios in Los Angeles is Clyde E. Hopkins. Mr. Hopkins had a varied and successful career on the speaking stage. His associates look forward to his screen debut with considerable interest, as they believe that his face, figure and art are especially adapted to the screen drama.

Frank Ormston, who has long been connected with the Universal Film Company in a technical capacity, was this week made head of the technical department at Universal City.

Rollin Sturgeon, chief of the Western branch of the Vitagraph company, is at present engaged on a phtoplay which was written especially for Ann Shafer and which is well suited to her methods.

Ashley Miller, the director, who is staging the "Ashton Kirk, Investigator" series for Arnold Daly and his wife, Ethel Browning, have started on a brief vacation cruise on their houseboat "Arkady," in which they have been living all summer. On his return the director will resume his work on the Arnold Daly series. The first aventure, just completed, is "The River Alley Mystery."

Thomas A. Edison, Inc., announces that it has secured the rights to William Hamilton Osborne's famous novel "The Cat's Paw." Work on the big production is already under way with a carefully selected cast of Broadway players. The production will be released through the various offices of the Kleine-Edison Feature Film Service. The first Edison Feature to be handled by the new service is Mrs. Fiske in "Vanity Fair." for release September 8th.

Pathe announces the purchase of the picture rights to Geo. Scarborough's play "At Bay," which had a long run both on Broadway and on the road.

Charles Richman, supported by Arline Pretty, Ethel Corcoran, Katherine Franek, Leo Delaney, William Dunn, Charles Eldridge and Robert Gillard, have begun work under the direction of Theodore Marston, on the Vitagraph's production of "The Surprises of An Empty Hotel."

Film men privileged to witness advance showings of George Kleine's feature, "The Woman Next Door," are loud in their praise of the work of Irene Fenwick in the role of Jenny Gay. This is Miss Fenwick's third picture following her premier appearance in "The Commuters," and later her splendid delineations of the spendthrift wife in "The Spendthrift."

Miss Charlotte Walker's new photoplay production, "Out of Darkness," by Hector Turnbull, formerly dramatic critic of the New York Tribune and now a member of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company literary and photodramatic staff, is a severe arraignment of the inhuman conditions of labor in some of the big canneries of the United States.

The Selig Polyscope Company entertained about 150 theatrical managers at its studio on Friday, August 13. The theatrical men were in Chicago to attend the Mid-West Managers' Convention, and the trip to the studio was one of the features of the gathering. A cameraman took motion pictures of the party and these will be released by the Hearst-Selig News Pictorial in an early issue of this animated weekly.

Frank Lloyd, the new director for Pallas Pictures, brings with him as assistant a well known technical man, Harry Weil, who has been in the show business and pictures for the past fifteen years.

Forrest Stanley, as great an idol as the Los Angeles matinee girl ever had, has said his adieux to the famous Burbank Theater Stock Company, where he reigned supreme for four solid years, and is now established in his new position as leading man with the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company.

"The Closing Net," by H. C. Rowland, a coming Pathe Gold Rooster Play, will have a strong cast. Edward Jose, who is producing it, has signed Howard Estabrook, the popular leading man now appearing in the new play, "Search Me," at the Gayety Theater, New York, for the lead. He will be supported by Bliss Milford, Katheryn Browne-Decker, and Madaline Traverse.

The marriage of Miss Glen M. Wilkins, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. A. Wilkins, and Frank A. Garbutt, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank A. Garbutt, took place in Los Angeles last week The bridegroom's father is vice-president of Bosworth Incorporated.

Members of the Talmadge family again are united, and all are happy. Mrs. Margaret Talmadge, mother of the famous screen star of the National Film corporation, Norma Talmadge, has arrived in Los Angeles from New York, accompanied by her daughter Natalie and "Honey" Talmadge, the latter being the pet French Poodle that the Talmadge family prize so highly and which belongs to Miss Norma.

In accordance with the general policy of expansion adopted by Thomas H. Ince, the scenario bureau of the N. Y. M. P. producing plant is being enlarged. The latest announcement concerning the department is to the effect that Monte Katterjohn, the well known eastern free lance writer, has been signed to write photoplays for the Ince force.

Henry Mac Mahon, general representative for the new Triangle Film Corporation, and who has been visiting the Keystone studio as a guest of Mack Sennett, has returned to New York, where he will launch a campaign of advertising, featuring Raymond Hitchcock, Mabel Normand, Chester Conklin, Fred Mace, Mack Swain, Roscoe Arbuckle, Eddie Foy, Syd Chaplin, Ford Sterling and others.

William T. McCaully has been added to the producing forces of the National Film corporation and is making comedies, featuring Miss Rena Rogers, Russ Powell and Harry Fisher. He has Louis Scherer as his assistant. Mr. McCaully is a product of the Keystone studios. He is putting plenty of action in his productions, which fill a niche in between the slap-stick and the more refined comedies.

All the hard luck that has visited the Keystone studio for the past two or three months has seemed to center itself on Syd Chaplin and his company. Syd was shot in the eye with a piece of fireworks; his director, Chas. Avery, is in the hospital and will be likely to remain there for several weeks more as a result of an accident that took place recently while the Chaplin company was putting on a scene. Last week the company went to San Diego and while there Chaplin, his new director, Chas. Parrott, Wesley Ruggles and Glen Cavander, were all stricken with ptomaine poisoning and were seriously ill for nearly a week after.

J. H. Hazelton, who claims to be the only man who actually saw the shot which Booth fired, assassinating President Lincoln, in the Ford theater in Washington the night of April 14, 1865, and who was a program boy in the theater, is playing an important role with Norma Talmadge, "the International Darling," and Bruce Mitchell, Alan Forrest and Jack Livingston in "Captivating Mary Carstairs."

Tom Mix, the intrepid cowboy producer-actor of the Selig Polyscope Company, has been working in Las Vegas, New Mexico, just about one month, and in that time he has completed six pictures, the first of which will shortly be released.

"Miss Sticky Moufie Kiss," the first story from the pen of James Montgomery Flagg, ever secured for motion pictures, has been put in production by the Vitagraph Company under the direction of Sidney Drew.

Beatriz Michelena, the operatic star, who left the stage something over a year ago to join the producing forces of the California Motion Picture Corporation as leading woman and who has since become one of the most popular favorites of the screen, is just returning from a visit of several weeks to New York City and other Eastern points to begin work on her next picture at the California studios at San Rafael.

"Mortmain," a picturization of Arthur C. Train's story of the same name, produced under the direction of Theodore Marston, will be the next Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature to be released through the V-L-S-E, the announced date being Monday, September 6th.

Mack Sennett, managing director of the Keystone Film Company, has been so thoroughly occupied with supervising the direction of eight separate and distinct Keystone companies that he has not put on a make-up and worked in a picture for many months. When Raymond Hitchcock started work, however, Mr. Sennett decided to both act and direct in "The Stolen Magic" and "My Valet," the two feature Hitchcock releases which will soon be seen on Triangle programs.

His herculean work in preparing the largest motion picture organization which ever left this country to sail for Jamaica proved too much for Herbert Brenon last Tuesday, and he broke down completely the day before the great William Fox company was scheduled to leave. His physician decided that a few days in bed would set Mr. Brenon right, and it did. The sailing was postponed for one week, until August 25. Mr. Brenon has entirely recovered.

DeWolf Hopper has returned to New York from Siasconset for a few days. He will start on Sunday, August 22, for the Griffith studio in Los Angeles, where he is to portray some of the great comedy characters in the world's greatest classics for the Triangle screen. All of Mr. Hopper's camera work will be under the direct supervision of D. W. Griffith.

Henry Otto, the American director, is in Los Angeles and is under the doctor's orders. He is suffering from acute nervousness brought on by hard work. He expects to be away from Santa Barbara about a week, and is already feeling much better for the treatments and the rest.

A complete demonstration of the railway mail system is one of the features of "Caught," an Essanay three-act photoplay.

To keep pace with the demands for clever stories for the two-reel feature stories that the Keystone is releasing under the Triangle brand, Managing Editor Hampden Del Ruth is still adding writers to his staff. Harry Williams, writer of songs and plays, and Vincent Bryan, another clever writer, were hard at work when Jean Havez, fresh from his New York successes, arrived. Jean Schwartz has been busy arranging music for the new features, and these, together with Frederick Palmer, Clarence Badger, "Chuck" Wiesner, William Campbell, Jack Byrne and others, form the greatest comedy writing staff in the world.

Al Lichtman, vice-president and general manager of the Standard Photoplay Distributors, Inc., wires in from the coast that Sol L. Lesser, president of the All Star Features Distributors, Inc., handling the Metro Program in California, Nevada, and Arizona, has completed arrangements to serve the Standard Program to the theaters of the above territory through his well known Golden Gate Film Exchange in San Francisco.

Among the Lubin players present at the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Carnival at Brighton Beach were: Billie Reeves, the famous English comedian; Mary Charleson, who played the principal role in "The Road o' Strife"; Rosetta Brice, who is playing the lead in Louis Reeves Harrison's great war play, "The Rights of Man"; Richard Buhler, who enacts the role opposite to Miss Brice; Octavia Handworth, Frances Joyner, Patsy De Forest, the "flirt" of the Lubin studio; Clarence Jay Elmer, who palyed "Patsy Bolivar" in a serial of that name; William Potter, Charles Brandt, James Cassady, Peter Lang, Bartley McCullum, Arthur D. Hotaling, Jack Standing, Mae Hotely, Kempton Greene, Jack O'Neil, and others.

Having finished the picture for which he was engaged by the Balboa Amusement Producing Company of Long Beach, Calif., William Elliott has returned to New York to begin work on his fall productions for the legitimate stage. Mr. Elliott has extensive plans which will keep him busy for some time.

In order to make the Universal Animated Weekly stronger and even more comprehensive than ever, a Pacific coast edition of the Weekly will be issued from Universal City, Cal.

After more than two years' constant work with the Edison Company, Marjorie Ellison, whose work in both leading and heavy roles has gained her much flattering praise, has decided to take a much deserved vacation. She has planned a trip to California to visit the Panama Exposition and undoubtedly visit many friends in the city of Los Angeles. It is rumored she may listen favorably to a certain offer from one of the large producing firms in Los Angeles.

The Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House of Representatives, accompanied by members of the Chamber of Commerce of Los Angeles, visited Universal City recently.

John Steppling has been given the directorship of the second American Beauty Company, recently formed at the Santa Barbara studios of the American Film Company, Inc. Already Director Steppling has produced three comedy-dramas, the latest of which is "Uncle Heck, by Heck," which will be released Tuesday, August 31.

At the Lake Tahoe branch of the Universal's Pacific Coast studios, the Kerrigan-Victor Company is this week completing the final scenes in their production of a three-reel film entitled "A Kentucky Idyl." J. Warren Kerrigan is featured in the production with Buck Connor, Norbert Myles and wife, and May Talbot supporting him.

When the Vitagraph Company sent out the announcement that they would set apart Friday of each week beginning October 1 to be known as "Sidney Drew Day," on which they would release a Drew comedy, they were flooded with letters from exhibitors asking to advance the time to as early a date as possible. In compliance with the many requests, the Vitagraph Company now announces the first "Sidney Drew Day" for Friday, September 3. The four releases for the month of September will include "Their Night Out," "Unlucky Louey," "The Professional Diner" and "Back to the Primitive."

George W. Terwilliger, one of the Lubin directors, is planning a big naval scene at the Newport Studio of the Lubin Company. To prevent a foreign agent from escaping with plans of something important, Captain William S. Sims, U. S. N., will go into motion pictures next week by permitting one of the destroyers of the Atlantic destroyer squadron to send to the bottom with her battery the 100-ton schooner Azaba, of Providence. The schooner was purchased recently from Frank White by the Lubin company.

Ed. J. LeSaint, with Frank Keenan and Stella Razeto and supporting company, have been spending some days in the desert, and it is nice and hot there now.

In one of the last scenes in Tom Terriss' latest features to be completed, "A Woman of the World," a garden party was given by Dudley Olcott, vice-president of the Central Trust Company, at his beautiful home in Morristown, N. J., his guests participating for the first time in a moving picture.

Warren Kerrigan, the Universal star, who recently was confined to the hospital for several weeks, is rapidly recovering his health at Lake Tahoe near San Francisco. With his Kerrigan-Victor company Mr. Kerrigan is encamped scarcely a stone's throw from Lake Tahoe high up in the Sierras where the air is cool and pure and where the fishing and hunting is without equal.

"A Sultana of the Desert," a Selig special in two thrilling reels, will be released in regular service on Monday, October 4. This Selig special was written by and features Kathryn Williams. Miss Williams achieves even a greater artistic triumph, if that were possible, than in her recent Selig Diamond Special triumph, "The Strange Case of Talmai Lind."

James Dayton, the man who wrote and rewrote six hundred photoplays in three years and who never had a rejection, has gone to the American Company in Santa Barbara, where he will take charge of the story department. Mr. Dayton is regarded as one of the heads of his profession.

Anna Little left the Universal last week, and although she had made up her mind to take a holiday, she had to change her mind. Miss Little had no less than four offers for her services and had to make a quick decision. She decided to accept an engagement offered her by Mr. S. S. Hutchinson, of the American Company, and will commence work at Santa Barbara on Monday, the 16th of August. She will probably be seen in a western series.

Al Lichtman is now on his way to the New York headquarters of the Standard and an interesting announcement is promised for the near future.

Jack Richardson, one of the "Flying A" heroes, has just returned from a camping trip in the Santa Ynez mountains.

Tom Terriss, the director of the Terriss Film Corporation, is doing big work at his studio in Yonkers. Next month the two big features, which he went to Jamaica, West Indies, to produce, will be released one after the other. They are "Flame of Passion" and "The Pearl of the Antilles."

The Lubin company has decided to name its great war play, now being produced under the direction of Jack Pratt. with Rosetta Brice and Richard Buhler in the leading roles, "The Rights of Man; The Story of War's Red Blot."

The filming of Hoyt's "A Stranger in New York" has nearly been completed at the Chicago studio of the Selig company. T. N. Heffron is the producer in charge, and Otis Harlan, king of American comedians, will make his second bow in motion pictures in this Hoyt comedy. Grace Darmond also figures largely in the fun making.

Already the officials of the Universal's Pacific Coast Studios are making ready for the arrival of that favorite of the speaking stage, Henrietta Crossman, who is expected sometime within the next two weeks. Several novels are being considered by the scenario department as possible vehicles.

Maurice Tourneur, the peerless director of the World Film Corporation, suggests Wagnerian operatic dramas for the film. "It is a field," he said, "which has not been touched, and offers a wide scope for the silent drama. I should like to produce 'Tristan and Isolde,' with but two players. Accompanied by Wagnerian music, the people in the audience would be imbued with the spirit of the beautiful story."

Latest of the entrants in the recent Universal Film Company's National Beauty Contest to enter the motion picture game under the banner of that concern is pretty Lois Wilson, candidate from Alabama.

Edgar Lewis, the director of big features, has invented a simple device with which the director can signal the photographer when to begin grinding his camera, without letting the actors know that the picture is actually being taken. The new device, consisting of a tiny rubber tube and two bulbs, one held in the hand of the director and the other by the operator, resembles that attached to some snap-shot cameras.

After many weeks of hard work, the new Marie Dressler picture, which will be released by Lubin in September, "Tillie's Tomato Surprise," is completed. Of course, Miss Dressler plays Tillie. But she was not the only one who worked hard to make a success of this amazing five-act farcical comedy.

E. J. Le Saint and his company of feature players have returned from a short stay in the back country near Los Angeles and are again busy with the production of a filmization of Peter B. Kyne's "The Long Chance," picturized by Harvey Gates especially to meet the requirements of the Broadway star, Frank Keenan, who is being starred in the leading role.

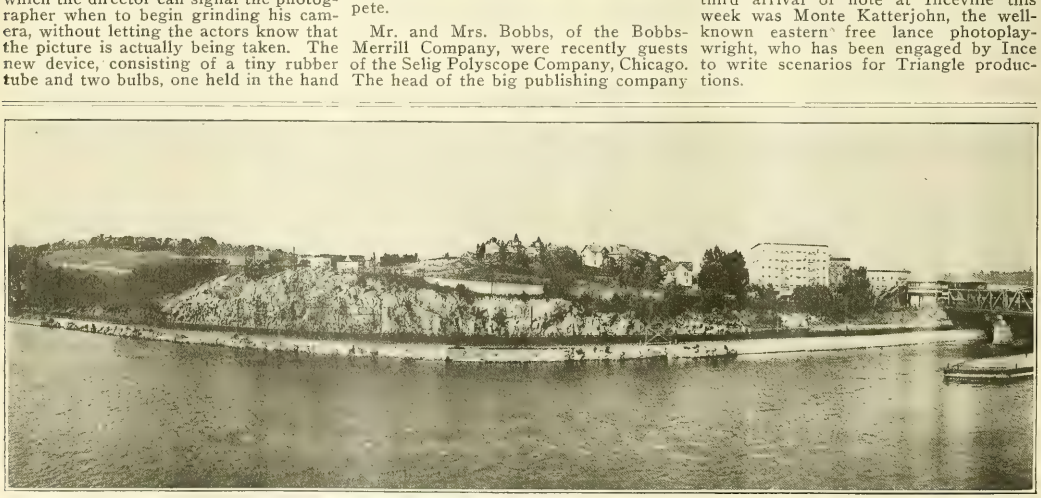
Helen Relyea, who formerly was prominent on the legitimate stage, was elected a member of the Vitagraph Stock Company on Friday, August 13th.

Pathe announces the cast of Donald Mackenzie's production of Richard Carle's play, "Mary's Lamb," as follows: Richard Carle, Jessie Ralph, Marie Wayne, Lillian Thatcher, James Renne and W. J. McCarthy.

The labor organizations of Los Angeles, Cal., will engage in a great Labor Day celebration at the Selig Jungle-Zoo, on September 6th. One of the most extensive and interesting programs ever planned for the day has been arranged. There are to be races, contests of strength, a big base ball game, and one of the features of the day will be a wild animal show.

Such is the popularity of Charles Chaplin that the Columbus (Ohio) Chamber of Commerce has arranged, as a special feature of one of the "big days" of the Ohio State Fair, to hold a statewide "Charles Chaplin contest." It will be the first affair of its kind conducted on such a large scale, and amateur "Chaplins" from all over Ohio will compete.

Mr. and Mrs. Bobbs, of the Bobbs-Merrill Company, were recently guests of the Selig Polyscope Company, Chicago. The head of the big publishing company and his wife came from Indianapolis, Ind., to Chicago to view the Selig Red Seal play, "The House of a Thousand Candles," written by Meredith Nicholson.



An interesting announcement is made by the Vitagraph of the first of a series of Sunny Jim comedies by Elaine Sterne, featuring Bobby Connelly.

Two of America's greatest stage stars, Ethel Barrymore and William Faversham, will soon be working side by side and under the same roof and for the same releasing company as soon as work of production can be started on the Rolfe-Metro feature in which they will be seen. Ethel Barrymore will appear in an original play, especially suited to her talents, written by George Scarborough, author of "The Lure" and other stage successes. William Faversham will appear under the direction of John W. Noble in "One Million Dollars," the scenario of which has been prepared by George D. Proctor from the novel, "One Million Francs," by Arnold Fredericks.

Mary Miles Minter, the Metro star, and supporting company, including Niles Welch and Charles Prince, who will be seen in the Columbia Pictures Corporation five-reel production of "Stork's Nest," left recently for Delaware Water Gap to photograph the exterior scenes amid the beautiful scenery.

Wid Gunning, formerly connected with the New York Mail, has recently become affiliated with the Universal Film Company.

Mary Boland, renowned in theatrical circles for her many remarkable performances as John Drew's leading woman, has arrived at Inceville and is preparing to make her photodramatic debut under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince. Almost simultaneously with the arrival of Miss Boland, Bruce McRae, the popular Broadway leading man, reached Los Angeles also and reported to Producer Ince, under whose supervision he has been signed to appear. A third arrival of note at Inceville this week was Monte Katterjohn, the well-known eastern free lance photoplaywright, who has been engaged by Ince to write scenarios for Triangle productions.

Huge tract of ground in upper Manhattan purchased for Famous Players new studio.

A wealthy young man accustomed to gaieties of the cafe life, marries a poor girl, but fails to give up his fast friends and continues to live a gay life. One night when he returns home intoxicated his wife packs her grip and goes to the railroad station, where while waiting for the train she faints. The husband awakens and finds his wife gone. He rushes to the police station, where he learns that his wife has been taken to the hospital. Hurrying to her bedside he promises never to drink again.

A Triple Winning—BIOGRAPH—AUGUST 30.—Featuring John K. Roberts, Isabel Rea and Hector V. Sarno. Tom Brown, the deputy sheriff, is in love with Mary, the sheriff's daughter. Manuel Lopez, a bandit, holds up the stage coach and a reward of $1,000 is offered for his arrest. Brown starts out to capture him, but receives a note from Mary asking to meet her at a rendezvous in the woods. He goes to the broken oak, but Mary is not there. The sheriff, noticing Brown's absence, accuses him of cowardice and confiscates his badge. Brown is wandering in the woods when he meets the bandit and after a hand to hand encounter captures him. He is wounded in the struggle, however, and faints at the girl's door, but she prevents the outlaw's escape. He wins not only the reward, but also the badge and the girl.

The Masked Dancer—(THREE REELS)—KALEM—AUGUST 30.—Featuring Anna Orr. Wright, an art dealer, visits the Orient and accepts the invitation of Mustapth to join him and friends in a game of cards. A quarrel ensues between Mustapth and Wright and in the course of the battle the lights are extinguished and when they are relighted a knife is found in Wright's hand which had been thrust through Mustapth's heart. Hera, the Persian's daughter, vows to slay the murderer and follows Wright to New York, where she obtains a position as a dancer in a cabaret. As she always wears a mask she arouses curiosity and Wright is delighted when he is invited to her home. Alam, who has been madly in love with Hera, follows her to America and hides in her closet. Wright also falls in love with the girl, but she suddenly turns upon him and attempts to slay him. He learns her story and tells her he is innocent. Alam breaks through the door and in a struggle wounds himself. With death near, the Persian confesses that it was he who had stabbed Mustapth and we last see Wright taking Hera into his arms.

A Romance of Mexico—LUBIN—AUGUST 30.—Featuring Jack Lawton, Vinnie Burns and Henry Russell. Jim French, a young mining engineer, loves Carmen, sister of Pablo Cortez, who in turn is in love with Nita Garcia. Juan, who also loves Carmen, tells Pablo that Jim is in secret Nita's lover, his attentions to Carmen being merely a blind. Pablo comes upon Jim just as he is climbing a rope, which is hanging down the face of a cliff and at once begins to climb after him. Carmen witnesses the affair and begins to shoot at the rope between the two. It parts and Pablo falls to the ground, but is not seriously injured. Carmen and Jim go to his assistance and it is soon proved to him that they have been victims of a trick. It is later apparent that Juan is the guilty person, but in the completeness of their happiness they do not seek revenge upon the futile coward.

The Way of a Woman's Heart—(TWO REELS)—SELIG—AUGUST 30.—Claude Harris and Rose March, two members of a theatrical company, are lovers. Claude accepts an offer from his uncle to enter business and tells Rose he will return and marry her. He meets Amie Dante, a beautiful young society girl, and soon forgets Rose, who sends for him. He tells her that marriage is impossible. Three years pass and Amie, whose secret ambition is to go on the stage, tells Claude she is going to interview Rosalind Ayre, a noted actress, who has come to the city, and see what she says about her taking up a stage career. Claude determines to see the actress first and tell her to discourage the girl. When he arrives at the opera house he finds that Rosalind Ayre is none other than Rose March, the girl of his past. He tells her that she holds his happiness in her hands and Rose in contempt tells of how her child was born after he had refused to marry her. Claude succeeds in melting the woman's heart, however, and she discourages Amie about taking up a stage career and the girl tells Claude she will marry him at once.

Mr. Jarr and the Visiting Fireman—VITAGRAPH—AUGUST 30.—Featuring Harry Davenport and Rose Tapley. Jarr grossly deceives the Smalltown Fire Company by pretending to be a "smoke-eater" from the city. His wife sees him leading a parade with a "chicken" on each arm and things look bad for Jarr, but a fake fire and rescue set him right again.

The Mystery of Henry Villard—(TWO REELS)—BIOGRAPH—AUGUST 31.—Featuring Isabel Rea with an all-star cast. Henry Villard, who is engaged to the youngest of the De Bevoise girls, is made manager of their investments. He loses the girls' money and conducts an affair with the tavern host's daughter. Uncle Darby, the negro servant of the girls, tells the older one of Villard's crookedness. Frances later hears of this and dies of a broken heart, and Grace, embittered, insists on Edgar Calhoun, her fiance, avenging her sister. The next morning Henry Villard is found dead on a lonely trail and Grace receives a note from Edgar reading "Frances is avenged." After some time it is discovered that Villard, challenged to a duel by Edgar, had bribed a lounger to attend the meeting and secretly to shoot Edgar in the back, but the lounger had lost his nerve and the duel proceeded, Villard firing first and missing.

The Return of Gentleman Joe—(Two Reels) — Essanay — August 31. — Nell Craig and Edmund F. Cobb featured. Dominica while escaping after robbing a woman of a necklace meets Gaston Le Grand, a notorious crook, who has threatened to kill her. To escape him she accepts the escort of Mickey Ryan, a wealthy young man, who attempts to make love to her in a cab and in the struggle she drops the pearls, which she had stolen. He tells her she must yield to his wishes or he will tell the police. While he is threatening her in his apartment her old sweetheart, who had been imprisoned in America, returns and quickly disposes of the black hander and then marries Dominica. They return the pearls to the prefect of police and tell him they want to live a straight life. When Dominica gives information as to Le Grand's whereabouts she and Gentleman Joe, her husband, are permitted to go free.

Avenging Bill—Lubin—August 31.—Lucy, when Grouch blackens Bill's eye, gets after him with a knife and Mrs. Grouch phones the police and when they arrive they refuse to believe that weak and clinging Lucy could attack a husky brute like Grouch and go away. Then Lucy licks Mrs. Grouch and Bill does up the boss and later Bill and Lucy go off to get married. On the same reel with:

The Haunted Hat—Lubin—August 31.—A little kitten gets under the boss' discarded straw hat and goes on a jaunt, hat and all. The town folks had never before seen an auto-hat and seeing this one travel about, think it is a spook. Finally the police and fire department are on the trail of the hat and after many hairbreadth escapes they capture and rescue the cat. On the same reel with:

Mile-a-Minute Monty—Lubin—August 31.—Cartoon by Leon A. Sells, depicting the adventures of Monty, who upon being driven from his home by the squawking of a baby, escapes in a flying machine, his wierd and wonderful adventures in the clouds, in the desert and other outlandish places.

The Leaving of Lawrence—Selig—August 31.—Lawrence and James Thornton, twin brothers, are left fortunes by their father. James goes west, while Lawrence remains home and squanders his money on wine, women and song. Bessie Grant, a young heiress, falls in love with Lawrence and gives him her photographs, writing her name thereon. As a last resort Lawrence tells his creditors that he is going to marry an heiress and that all of his bills will be paid. Later they approach Bessie Grant's father and he assaults Lawrence. James Thornton strikes it rich and returns home, where he is mistaken for Lawrence. Bessie goes to Lawrence's home to get back her picture and while there James approaches and mistakes her for a burglar. He afterward tells Bessie that he is Lawrence's twin brother and it is a case of love at first sight with them.

Hearts Ablaze—(Three Reels)—Vitagraph — August 31.—Malvini, broken-hearted over the elopement of his young wife, retires to a monastery. After twenty years he returns to find his daughter Valeria accused of killing the man with whom his wife eloped. Mario, the girl's lover, had shot the man in self defense and the victim's last words accused Valeria. Mario goes temporarily insane, but recovers at the last moment and tells his story. The priest secures audience with the king and the result is that Valeria is released and Mario pardoned. The priest then reunites them in marriage.

Dora—(Three Reels)—Biograph—September 1.—Featuring Isabel Rea and an all-star cast. Farmer Allan takes his niece, Dora, into his house and plans a match between Dora and his own son, William, who is secretly betrothed to Mary, a servant in his father's household. William and Mary elope and when his father discovers this they are disinherited and ordered from the house. Dora secretly places baskets of food outside William's cottage and Mary believes it is Luke, with whom Dora is in love. Farmer Allan makes his will, leaving his property to Dora. Just before William dies his wife discovers that Dora is her benefactress. Later Dora goes to live with Mary and schemes to bring William's child to the old man's attention and through the child the man of stone is softened.

The Simp and the Sophomores—Edison—September 1.—A one-reel comedy of college life directed by Will Lewis. The Simp is tormented by the sophomores, who cheapen him in the eyes of the college belle. He visits the gymnasium of Professor Arm-Strong to receive instruction in the manly art. After seeing the professor in action, however, he decides it would be better to hire him to square accounts with the "sophs." This he does. His revenge is sweet when, standing with the pretty one, he sees his oppressors, profusely bandaged, pass meekly on their way to class.

Joe Boko in "Saved by Gasoline"—Essanay—September 1.—Cartoon by Wallace A. Carlson. Joe Boko receives a message from Ida Clare, his sweetheart, that the villain Hardie Nails is holding her for ransom. Joe hurries to the rescue. His machine balks many times, but he finally reaches the rendezvous. There he overpowers the villain by puffing a huge cloud of deadly tobacco smoke into his face. He then hurls him to the lions and sets his sweetheart free.

The Stranger in the Valley—Biograph—September 2.—Claire McDowell and Herbert Barrington featured. Mabel Burton, through the agency of her child, meets the mill owner's son. Dr. Burton had won her heart, but she had left him. Later her child was taken ill. She sends for her husband, the great specialist, but he is killed in an automobile accident. She finally consents to wed the mill owner's son.

Versus Sledge Hammers—Essanay—September 2.—Western Essanay Company featured. The count receives word that Sophie Clutts will inherit a million dollars and he goes to her father's hotel to win her hand. Mustang Pete, discovering the man making love to her, proceeds to insult him and the count challenges Pete to a duel. Being a blacksmith, Pete chooses sledge hammers as a weapon. The count draws a revolver, which is almost as deadly as a pea shooter. Mustang Pete pulls out two colts about the size of small cannons and fires in the air. The count flees and Mustang is free to woo his sweetheart in peace.

The Fire Escape—Vitagraph—September 2.—Lillian Walker featured with an all star cast. Minnie and Jack are in love with each other, but Minnie's father wants her to marry Doyle, the ward boss. Krausmeyer, a saloonkeeper, after seeing Jack and Minnie making love on the fire escape tells Doyle and Schwartz and an exciting chase follows. Jack saves Harris, a wealthy politician, from being robbed by Doyle's stool. Doyle is "sent up," while Jack is made Harris' secretary and later Schwartz consents to the marriage of he and Minnie.

The Wanderer—Biograph—September —Featuring Harry Walthall, Mae Marsh, Claire McDowell and Lionel Barrymore. The young idealist in the Spanish village charms the ears of all with his music. Years pass and the wanderer still makes music. Time has wrought a change in others besides himself. The lovers of years ago hushed into happiness by the strains are now astray in bitterness and sin. The woman has another lover and is willing to slay and rob her lord for him. The dagger is poised when they hear the flute and stand appalled. A little girl who years before had been humbled at the voice of the flute, fleeing from a crafty merchant, who wishes to marry her, meets the wanderer and together they go down the long sunlit road with love ahead and behind them, the happiness which the wanderer has brought to others.

The Quitter—Essanay—August 3.—Featuring Edmund F. Cobb, Ann Kirk and Hugh E. Thompson. Frank Gates, a young architect, seeks partnership with his father-in-law, who says that he must make good first and Frank competes for the new city hall job. Frank suspects that Remington is using his political influence to defeat him and upon going to his father-in-law's office sees two council men hand Remington a set of plans. When Remington sees Frank spying on him he tears up the plans and tells Frank that they were his own which had been accepted. Remington produces a duplicate set and calls up his daughter, tells her that Frank is an awful quitter, but draws fine plans and later Remington tells Frank that he will take him into partnership.

The Phantom Happiness — (THREE REELS)—LUBIN—SEPTEMBER 3.—Featuring Earl Metcalfe, Ormi Hawley, Rosetta Brice and William H. Turner. Don Emerson, a novelist, whose wife longs for luxury and joy that accompanies wealth, meets Mary Allison, who Don realizes is the embodiment of his fiction character. Sometime later Alice is left an inheritance of magnificent proportions. The marked contrast in Mary and her quiet, peaceful home and in Alice with her changed nature and her noisy, social-ruled house causes Don to leave his wife with her happiness, while he seeks his. Alice in desperation goes to her lawyer, who tells her that the only way she can win Don back is through her money. Don overhears Alice offering Mary money if she will step out of their lives, but Mary remains impassive to the appeals of his wife. Don enters and tells Mary that they soon would discover that their happiness would be a phantom and he returns to his own home, where a final understanding is made complete. For a longer review, see another page of this issue.

In Spite of Him—LUBIN—SEPTEMBER 3.—Thruston Hall, Ethel Clayton and Florence Williams. Nathan Biddle, because his wife's gowns that she has been wearing for the past year have no worn spots, concludes that they are still good enough and refuses her money to buy a new one. The girl writes to her mother for advice and receives a check with which she is to buy a new gown. Nathan tells his wife that he is going to bring Mr. and Mrs. Kirk home to dinner, that she must look her prettiest. She asks him for money for a new gown, but he refuses and she makes the quick reply, "there is another who will buy it for me, then." Nathan demands to know what she means, but she says nothing more. She goes downtown and buys the gown her heart is set upon and that night she gains the admiration of the guests and her husband's displeasure. After the guests have left Nathan demands to know where she got the gown and losing his temper makes an accusation against her. She concludes that there is only one thing left to do and that is to leave him. When she is leaving he again pleads to be informed, but she turns from him and in his hot temper he tells her to go and never see him again. Later he goes to her room, finds her mother's note and he hastens to Elsie with a penitent heart and receives the blessing of her forgiveness.

The Quarrel—VITAGRAPH—SEPTEMBER 3—All star cast featured. Mr. and Mrs. Jiggs have their first quarrel and hubby pretends sickness to avoid a visit from his mother-in-law. He gets hold of a letter to his wife containing the suggestion that she put a little strychnine in his food and not knowing that it refers to the pet dog, he nearly has a fit. He sets out in search of his wife and Hennessey, the cop, and half the town join in the chase. Later frantic explanations prevents serious trouble and all ends in a big laugh.

Their Night Out—VITAGRAPH—SEPTEMBER 3.—Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew featured. Harold Keffe and his wife, Edna, through the influence of Frank Evans, "a man about town," decide they will both take a night out every week. Instead of going out the first night as they pretend, both slam the front door and sneak back into separate rooms and both imagine the other to be out with Frank and his sporty friends. At midnight Frank is admitted by Harold, he demands to know where his wife is, but at this moment his wife appears and everything is cleared up.

The Wheel of the Gods—BIOGRAPH—SEPTEMBER 4.—Augusta Anderson featured with an all-star cast. Mrs. Bagley, the wife of a middle-aged physician, starts a flirtation with Falkner. He proposes an elopement, but she is horrified when at the appointed hour he bursts into her boudoir. The doctor returns and Falkner pretends to have come for medical advice. The doctor, who is aware of the flirtation tells the astonished man that his heart valves are worn out and the hand of death is on him. Terrified, Falkner, convinced that he is doomed to a horrible end, fulfills the doctor's vengeance by committing suicide.

The Whirlpool—(THREE REELS)—ESSANAY—SEPTEMBER 4.—Nell Craig and an all star cast featured. Graham Howard, whose duties take most of his time, neglects his wife. She is led into a dangerous friendship by an unscrupulous artist, who compromises her by calling her on the phone and telling her to come to his office or he will end his life. Crossed wires permit Amos Howell, a friend of Agnes' husband, to hear the conversation and he hurries to the artist's studio. Just as he arrives he hears a shot and finds Agnes Howard trembling with fear and in an inner room he finds the body of the artist. Howell is arrested, but keeps silence, knowing that Mrs. Howard's reputation would be smirched if he made a statement. Howell's sister had been ruined by a man unknown to him, but dying she has confessed. A picture of the man was found in Howell's pocket. This motive for the killing and his presence at the scene of the shooting made conviction sure. Mrs. Howard is about to confess her part in the tragedy when Annette demands to be heard. She confesses that it was she who killed the artist who had wronged her.

The Awful Adventure of an Aviator—SELIG—SEPTEMBER 4.—McFutt is always talking aviation and he finally buys an aeroplane. Way up in the air, the seat breaks and Harold drops into the mouth of an oil well and continues through the center of the earth until he reaches the wilds of Africa, where he has all kinds of exciting adventures with wild beasts and savages. As he is about to be put into the soup pot by an African chief, he awakens to find it all a dream. On the same real:

Knockout Dugan's Find—SELIG—AUGUST 31.—A lively Selig farce-comedy.

The Offending Kiss—(TWO REELS)—VITAGRAPH—SEPTEMBER 4.—A strong cast featured. Kate, the sister of a western settler's wife, is in love with Captain Hayne and when she sees Hayne kiss Milly Lee she is heart-broken and joins her sister and husband on a long journey across the plains. Indians attack and capture Kate and Hayne heading a rescue party becomes separated from his men and is also captured. Kate saves him from the stake by threatening to drop the Indian chief's child over a precipice. After escaping from the Indians Hayne explains the kiss incident satisfactorily and the lovers are joyfully reunited.

Neath Calvary's Shadow — (THREE REELS)—SELIG—SEPTEMBER 9.—All star cast featured. The story tells of how the sister of an Episcopal rector disappeared. Some few months later an infant is left on his doorstep and because his explanations to the vestrymen are not satisfactory, the young rector is forced to leave the town and he goes west, where he meets and falls in love with Imogene. News of Strong having to leave his first parish on account of the child reaches the western town and Strong is again humiliated. Later he meets his sister, who confesses that Harold Gordon is the father of the child left at his doorstep and she is the mother. For a longer review see another page of this issue.

Ransom's Folly—(FOUR REELS)—EDISON—SEPTEMBER 17.—A screen adaption of Richard Harding Davis' novel with Edward Earle in the title role. Lieutenant Ransom wagers that he can hold up the incoming stage with a pair of shears, and succeeds in doing so. In the meantime Lieutenant Patten, the paymaster, in a livery rig, is held up. The driver is killed. The next day Ransom is charged with the crime and arrested. When Pat Cahil, the keeper of the supply store, learns that Ransom and his daughter, Mary, are to be married, he confesses that he is guilty and commits suicide. places with the doomed man. He escapes, disguised in her cloak. Next morning Dora is stood up to be shot in her lover's place. Swain gets wind of the execution and grabbing Conklin by the neck, he dashes to Dora's rescue. Conklin is put in the fair girl's place and the command given. Conklin dodges the bullets, jumps backwards into the open grave, and hurriedly throwing up breastworks, uses the guns he finds in the grave, scatters the whole staff, and escapes. After Conklin opens up cannon fire, and houses, barns, cattle and whole hillsides are blown up, the general ends his orderly's career with a brick.

Editions de Luxe—Reliance—August 25.—Freda abandons her life of crime and becomes engaged to Jack McCarthy, a detective. "Conny Peters," a confidence man, persuades Freda to go back to old practices, and McCarthy loses sight of her. He becomes betrothed to Grace Manley. A year later McCarthy is detailed to trail "Conny Peters" and his accomplice. He captures the man first and discovers that the woman is Freda, whom he had once asked to marry him. He offers her her freedom. While in Freda's room McCarthy is set upon by the gang and the girl battles to save his life. A passing policeman sees the trouble and officers are sent to his rescue. Grace Manley comes with them and the crooks overpowered, she rushes to her lover. Freda, realizing that her place has been filled by another, goes silently away.

Uncle Heck, By Heck—Beauty—August 28.—Featuring John Steppling, Beatrice Van and John Sheehan. Billy Jones and his wife receive a letter from Uncle Heck saying that he is coming to the city but is not going to spend a penny. Uncle Heck arrives and goes to Billy's office. He flirts with Billy's stenographer and she laughs at him. He is later running around town and when a smartly dressed woman smiles at his appearance he thinks she is flirting with him and when he speaks to her is soundly buffeted. He flirts the third time and the object of his attentions happens to be Billy's wife, who has him arrested. After being bailed out, Uncle Heck is ushered into Billy's house and is perilously near apoplexy upon meeting Billy's wife. He offers the women his entire bank roll if they promise not to tell Billy of his flirtatious tendencies. The Jones finally succeed in getting all of Uncle Heck's money.

Shocking Stockings—Komic—August 29.—Ed, in his eagerness to rescue Fay from her papa and show her the sights at the beach, persuades that young lady to come out of the sand, where she has petulantly buried herself, and let him substitute a pair of wooden legs wearing stockings exactly like Fay's. Papa is duped by the shocking stockings, and Fay and Ed escape. They start off in the ferris wheel, but are frustrated in their joy by Chester, the villain, who carries off Fay and starts off to sea with her in a row boat. The ferris wheel is stuck in mid air. Ed, frantic, leaps out of the wheel into the ocean, rescues Fay and wins the gratitude of papa.

The Vagabonds—Thanhouser—August 29.—The innkeeper is just putting a beggar and his dog off the grounds when a wealthy man rides up and pities the poor fellow. He orders food and drink for him and listens to the man's story. It seems that when a youth the fellow had become addicted to drink and thereby lost the beautiful girl whom he had proposed to marry. Several years later he met the woman he loved who had become a minister's wife, but she did not recognize him, and dropping a coin into his hand, passed on. "Little she dreamed," said the beggar, "as on she went, who kissed the coin that her fingers dropped." After the sad tale, the vagabond and his faithful dog wander off to continue their career of fiddling and performing for the public.

The Divine Decree—(Two Reels)—American—August 30.—Winnifred Greenwood and Edward Coxen featured. Dora Darby and Tom Burson, whose fathers are two crooks, and who are sentenced to fifteen years' imprisonment, grow up together until they are about seven years old. Then Dora is sent to the country to live with her aunt and Tom grows up in the tenement. He follows his father's footsteps and becomes a thief. Tom and Dora's fathers are released from prison and Dora's father comes to see her. Later Tom is in the act of committing a crime when a vision of his little playmate of years before dissuades him from a criminal career. He finds the girl in her country home and there their old affections are aroused. For a longer review see another page of this issue. J. C. G.

The Massive Movie Mermaid—FALSTAFF—AUGUST 30.—The director of the Desperation Film Company is putting on what he regards as the greatest "water tragedy" that was ever written. He knows that it is great because he has written it himself. He engages the heroine on the misleading evidence of a photograph, and when she arrives she is as large as all out of doors. There are an infinite number of misgivings in the taking of the picture. When it is shown later in the projection room of the factory, the director gets the credit of producing a winner in slap-stick comedy and is detailed to do all the comedy thereafter. The director blandly takes all the credit and never explains how the comedy came to be.

For His Pal—RELIANCE—AUGUST 30.—Jim and Joe are pals in the gold fields. They stake the same claim and Jim's wife, Priscilla comes on from the east to join her husband. It is then discovered that Priscilla is an old sweetheart of Joes. Jealousy begins to creep in between the two pals. Ling Hung Foo, the Chinese cook, outrages Priscilla's housewifely ideals and she discharges him. Joe chances to be in the cabin. Ling takes his revenge by bolting the door on them and telling Jim that his partner is making love to his wife. Jim returns to the house, finds Joe and Priscilla and is overcome with rage. Joe makes it appear that he is trying to rob Jim of his nuggets and that Jim's wife is holding him up. The ruse breaks the friendship between the pals, but it saves the woman's honor. Long afterwards, Ling, dying, confesses to Jim that he lied.

Green Apples—BEAUTY—AUGUST 31.—Webster Campbell and Neva Gerber featured. Herbert Astor, a young physician, seeking quiet moves into a country bungalow, which is adjacent to the home of Madeline Selfridge, who corrals fifty newsboys and gives them an outing at her place. The boys discover an apple tree and descend upon it and gorge themselves with green apples. That night there is many a stomach ache in the newsboys' tummies and young Astor is called. He has formed an acquaintance with Madeline and from that time on he is the hero of the boys. One day while helping the boys explore a rugged bit of nearby country Astor is hurt and the youths carry him to Madeline's house. Convalescent, the young physician discovers his love for Madeline and makes it known to her. What follows insures ensuing happy summers for the newsies and ensuing happy years for Madeline and Astor.

Hearts and Flowers—MAJESTIC—AUGUST 31.—Alfred Wantez, a violinist, leaves his wife, Olga, and their boy, Billy, to go on a concert tour. On the way to the train he is knocked senseless by a tramp who dresses in his clothes and boards the train. The train is wrecked and the tramp is buried for the dead musician. Olga receives word of her loss. The musician is carried to a hospital, but on recovery from injuries his memory is a blank. Several years later, an itinerant musician wanders into a seashore community, whither Dr. Allen, a friend, has sent the widowed mother and her boy. The strains of "Hearts and Flowers" bring Mrs. Wantez out of her cottage and she finds Billy with his father walking at the head of a little procession of children. Dr. Allen operates upon Wantez's brain and he is restored sane and happy to his wife and child.

The Spirit of Adventure—AMERICAN—SEPTEMBER 1.—Vivian Rich, Walter Spencer and Jack Richardson featured. Dick

Barrows, a young bachelor, who believes that the spirit of adventure is dead, is looking out of the window of his apartment when he sees a beautifully gowned woman seized by a black bearded man and bundled into a waiting taxicab. Dick rushes to the scene and finds a vanity box which contains an assortment of rare and priceless jewels. He sees the taxicab return and the bearded man looking for the lost vanity box. The taxicab again speeds away and Dick follows on a bicycle. He sees the man enter a skyscraper and follows him. He later discovers that the man was a detective and the woman a notorious jewel thief. When Dick hands over the vanity box the last link of the chain of evidence against the woman is forged. Dick returns home with his belief in the death of the spirit of adventure somewhat changed.

The Turning Point—RELIANCE—SEPTEMBER 1.—David Drummond surprises a thief in his Alaskan cabin, but frees the man. Years later, in Washington, D. C. he meets the same person and learns from him of a plot against the government incriminating Senator Delafield. Drummond is in love with Elinor Delafield, the senator's sister. Delafield and Drummond are almost the counterparts of each other in physical appearance. The Alaskan determines to save Delafield from turning traitor to his government. The latter falls ill and cannot attend a committee meeting. Drummond impersonates the absent senator. The speech he makes is not at all the one Delafield had intended to deliver, but it saves the senator's honor and wins Drummond the grateful Elinor for his wife.

Making Matters Worse—CUB—SEPTEMBER 2.—Featuring George Ovey with an all-star comedy cast. With Curlock Bones, the famous detective, on his trail, Jerry decides to adopt some unusual method to evade the clutches of the sleuth. He chances upon two pretty girls, who have been harassed by members of the police force. They ask Jerry to take the place of their maid so that they may avail themselves of his masculine powers in case the policemen insist upon carrying on their annoying tactics. Seeing an opportunity to outwit Bones, Jerry accepts the job. For a while he has a time of his life flirting with the police officers. In the spirit of fun he chides the master of the house, who takes the impostor in his arms just as his wife enters. She strikes the intruder and her husband with a flower vase and Jerry's wig falls from his head just as Curlock Bones enters. Jerry permits Bones to escort him to jail, adding another coup to the detective's long list of triumphs.

Hidden Crimes—RELIANCE—SEPTEMBER 3.—Grant, the grazer, who sells hides to the sheriff, a dealer in pelts, is jealous of Horace Dunn, the sheriff's assistant.

Both young men are in love with Celia, Sheriff Groton's daughter. Grant informs Celia's father that Dunn is an ex-jailbird and the sheriff orders the assistant to leave the district. The girl, however, disbelieves Grant and she elopes with Dunn. Grant, in a fury, follows them and in Celia's absence he assaults Dunn. Thinking that he has killed his man, Grant starts a forest fire to cover his guilt. But Celia is convinced of the grazer's criminal liability and she obtains help from an unexpected quarter. When her lover, who has only been badly injured by his enemy, is carried before Grant, the latter breaks down and confesses. Grant himself is the ex-jailbird. The young assistant and Celia are happily married.

The Mystery of the Tapestry Room—(Three Reels)—Big U—August 26.—Mable Brooks is the ward of Tom Sharpleigh, a detective. There are love interests between Mabel and Sharpleigh's nephew, Frank. Sharpleigh is assigned to the Addison case, in which family there have occurred several murders. By reason of evidence, the butler of the family is suspected. The butler proves to be Sharpleigh's estranged brother, but before arresting him the detective decides to await developments. Tom Sharpleigh spends a night with Howard Addison in the "Tapestry Room." At midnight a masked intruder comes out of a panel-door and in the struggle that follows, the man is victorious, and escapes. The second night, however, one of the detective's bullets brings the man down as he is making another dash for liberty. The man is brought back into the tapestry room and unmasked. It is none other than Frank Sharpleigh, son of Adam, the butler, and nephew to old Tom. Frank dies and Tom and Adam, now reunited, return to Tom's home, where they break the news to Mabel.

Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde—(Two Reels)—Imp—August 27.—King Baggott as Dr. Jekyll. Dr. Jekyll, a young London physician, whose appetite for experiments in drugs is insatiable, finds a drug by means of which his evil nature predominates and he is changed into a misshapen creature of malicious and violent passions. During the periods of his transformation he is known as Mr. Hyde. Usually he is able to antidote this condition and return to his normal state before any harm accrues to himself or others, although this evil self comes on most unexpectedly, even without the use of the drug. One day he kills the father of his sweetheart, but before the police can catch the murderer, he is once more transformed into the peaceful doctor. Ultimately he spills the vial containing the antidote. The butler is sent out to have the prescription renewed, but during the interval of his absence the police return. Fearing discovery, Hyde's raving turns to a fiendish fury, and he drops dead. His sweetheart rushes in and has to accept the consolation that her lover died a noble martyr to medical science.

Bravest of the Brave—Joker—August 28.—Mr. Brown is having a distressing time getting into a costume for the ball. Because Mrs. Brown insists that he hurry faster, hubby gets peeved and flatly refuses to attend the ball. Wifey arrives at the scene of the festivities, and the hostess, seeing her alone, introduces her to a handsome stranger. The latter gains wifey's admiration by vividly describing his heroic deeds. Having his eye upon her necklace, he offers to escort her home. When they arrive at the house her newly acquired companion takes a good look around before departing. Hubby is found asleep beside a decanter of refreshments and cigars, and he soon has to submit to a warm reception. Wifey then goes to bed. Because of his wife's taunts hubby makes several attempts to commit suicide, each ending with a drain on the decanter. He finally wins favor with his wife, however, by capturing the aforementioned gentleman, who returns for the necklace.

A Maid and a Man—Nestor—August 30.—Jack has just won the amateur golf championship. The handsome and wealthy golfer accompanies his chum, Neal, to the latter's home for a vacation. Neal has two sisters, Billie, to whom all the world pays homage, and Jane, who is on the verge of becoming an old maid. The mother arranges things so that Jane will have an open field to catch the celebrity, with the result that Billie is forced to act as the maid. Jack is smitten with the maid, and slights Jane. At the big reception given in his honor, Billie appears in one of her best gowns, and pretends she never saw Jack before. The chums return to the house to satisfy themselves whether or not she is the maid. Billie gets "wise," however, and beats them home. The next morning Jack hears Billie telling Neal how she beat them to the house. Jack then confronts Billie and she is forced into a laughing confession. Billie accepts Jack's proposal and mamma is forced to give her consent.

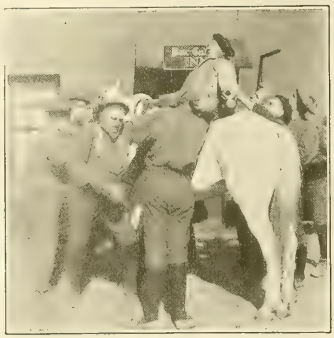
Misjudged—(THREE REELS)—GOLD SEAL—AUGUST 31.—Caleb Baldwin, a mining broker, is in partnership with Egbert. The latter, during Caleb's absence from the office, carries on illegitimate stock schemes of his own through the mails. He is tipped off that a raid is going to be made on him and he makes off with all the money in sight. Baldwin has perfected on invention to be used in the mills and Egbert tries to get the plans at his house. In a fit of passion he embraces Mrs. Baldwin. Caleb happens in and denounces his wife. When Caleb gets to the office and sees the way his faithless partner has turned all the evidence against him, he leaves at once for the west. Time passes and Caleb's wife, on her own resources has marketed the invention. She makes a trip to the west and again meets Egbert, who is living in luxurious style. She suspects he is the culprit and determines to catch him. One night in a dead drunk, Egbert confesses his guilt. The case against Baldwin is held up pending Egbert's trial and man and wife are brought together.



The Only Child—IMP—AUGUST 31.—With King Baggott. Papa is much disliked at the office because he harps continually on the virtues of his "only child." Papa often frequently calls up his "only" and talks baby talk over the phone, which disgusts the manager. But the longsuffering office men really have cause for complaint when the child is left at the office by wifey while she goes to the matinee. Papa's darling succeeds in upsetting the entire office staff. Finally the disturber wanders out into the street, dropping her hat by the timelock safe. Of course baby is in the safe, and papa runs out for the only safe-blower in town. This individual probably works by the hour, judging by his speed. Finally the safe is cracked and no child is there. Then wifey walks in with the "little dear" whom she has discovered on the street. The irate boss makes hubby buy a new safe.

For Professional Reasons—(TWO REELS)—VICTOR—SEPTEMBER 1.—Amelia, the sister of County Attorney Earnest Clay, loves John Duvall, a physician, but Duvall only returns a friendly feeling. Georgia, the sister of a gangster, is shot while trying to dissuade her brother, Pico, from participating in a brawl. Pico takes her to Dr. Duvall's house, where she is slowly healed. There springs up a strong affection between the doctor and his patient, and Amelia is strongly jealous. She steals some of Duvall's heirlooms and the guilt points to Georgia, being the sister of a gangster. Through the help of Pico, the real thief is discovered and Amelia confesses her act. The young doctor takes Georgia in his arms and Pico swears to live straight.

Tam O'Shanter—(THREE REELS)—BIG U—SEPTEMBER 2.—Tam is a habitual drunkard. Jean, Tam's daughter, and Jock, the blacksmith, are in love. The innkeeper refuses to give Tam any more drinks unless he settles up his past accounts. Not able to pay, Tam promises the innkeeper his daughter Jean in marriage, and the two set out to find her. Jock comes to her rescue. The latter finally formulates a scheme whereby he will cure Tam of his drinking habits. As the drunkard and his pal are returning at night from a spree, they are surrounded by a devil and his imps, and are badly scared. The devil makes him sign the pledge never to drink again, and to release Jean from the bargain to the innkeeper. Later, Tam's misery is eased by the loving ministrations of his wife, and Jock comes into his just reward.

brother, who has been away from home several years. She arrives in San Francisco and falls into the hands of Glynn Savoy, a white slaver, and is dragged to the gang's hangout. Dick, one of the gang, commonly known as "The Eagle," takes pity upon the girl, and later, when she is trying to effect her escape, he gives her assistance. The police make a raid upon the place, but Dick, who has discovered that the girl is his own sister, succeeds in getting her and himself out of the place safely. Reformation and happiness follow, while Glynn Savoy and his companions pay the penalty for their misdeeds.

Lizzie and the Beauty Contest—(Two Reels)—Nestor—September 3.—Jed is a devoted lover of Lizzie. He reads in the paper that Universal is running a beauty contest, the winner to take a trip to Universal City and the fair. Lizzie is selected to represent her section. When the line up for selection is ready, the judge is strong for Lizzie but he has much opposition. Jed becomes informed of the whereabouts of a famous beauty doctor, who can make even an "Egyptian mummy" good looking. He slips Lizzie away to the "doctor." Lizzie is steamed, vapored, frozen and anointed, and when she emerges from the ordeal she is a stunner. The proud Jed loses no time in rushing her in and of course she walks off with the prize.

Coral—(Four Reels)—Bison—September 4.—Starring Marie Walcamp and Wellington Playter. Dan McQuade, an old fisherman, finds a woman and child cast up by a storm. The woman is beyond human aid, but the child is alive and he takes it to his cottage. Years pass and the child has grown to be a beautiful and innocent young girl, making happy the life of the fisherman. Phillip Norton, a wealthy young artist, and his wife, on their honeymoon, enter the little bay where Dan and Coral live. Phillip has found out that his wife has married him merely to satisfy her vanity, and that she has no love for him. Phillip meets Coral and a love interest develops in spite of himself. Dan dies, and despite his wife's hate, Phillip takes the girl to his father's home in New York. His wife, Helen, at last contrives things so that Coral is accused of a diamond theft. Later Phillip's father discovers that Helen is at the bottom of the theft, and Helen leaves and is killed in a railroad wreck. Coral also leaves and takes up the study of art with Paul Dore. Eventually Phillip locates her and in the happy ending Dore is found to be the girl's father.

Gertie's Joy Ride—L-Ko—September 5.—Hank takes Gertie's indifferent smile seriously, therefore, when he hears that Reggie is to take her for an auto ride he determines they all shall die and takes the chauffeur's place. There is a wild ride on slippery pavements and a good deal of destruction of property before the voyage comes to an end. Hank carelessly takes the side of a house off and as the inmates run around in their negligee, several brazen bystanders feel constrained to make remarks. Many squads of policemen follow in the wake of the destructive car. A sixty-mile speed jump from a pier into the ocean culminates the chase. Reggie and Gertie come up on a tire, but they are still dragging for Hank.

The Shot—(Two Reels)—Powers—September 5.—Hal Garrett, a western mining superintendent, receives an invitation to his brother's wedding. He flies into a fit of anger and at once leaves for the east. Arrived at the old homestead, he surprises his brother in his dressing room and in the struggle that follows, Hugh is shot. Hal later gives himself up to the police and is resigned to his fate. At the prison Hal is induced to relate his tale. Ever since their childhood the brothers had known Agnes. Hal had proposed to Agnes, only to find out that she loved Hugh. He was loyal to his brother until he accidently learned that Hugh had an incurable disease and was warned of the doctor not to marry. Before leaving for the west he had told his brother that if he dared to marry the girl he would return and kill him. After an autopsy on Hugh's body it is discovered that the wound was merely superficial and that he really died of heart disease. Hal wins his freedom and there are indications of deep feeling between him and Agnes.

Vagabond Love—Victor—September 5.—Vitturo Caggoni is a gay-hearted Italian troubadour. He has serenaded Marjorie and won her love, but she is distrusting because of his improvidence, and finally marries the more practical merchant. The latter, however, is not practical enough to show her any affection, and her life becomes miserable. Finally, the husband, grown rich by his miserliness, deserts his wife and baby for another woman. Vitturo provides for her, but makes no advances. He follows the man that has caused the unhappiness and forces him to give up his liaison and return to his wife and child. A regeneration takes place in the husband's heart, and he and his wife are joyfully reunited. After witnessing this happy consummation, Vitturo takes up his violin and mongrel dog, and walks away.

Great Northern

The Doctor's Secret — (MULTIPLE PARTS) — GREAT NORTHERN — Beatrice Morgan's father discovers a formula for the cure of cancer, which formula is known only to himself and daughter. His assistant, Jackson, attempts to obtain the formula and kills his master. Beatrice goes to Paris and Jackson, disguised, follows with his sweetheart, Violet. In Paris Beatrice is injured in an accident and loses her mind. Violet applies for position as trained nurse at the hospital and attends Beatrice, hoping to gain possession of the formula. Dr. Heppel takes Beatrice to his mother's home and one night in her sleep she walks into the laboratory and writes the formula upon the blackboard. Jackson, who is on the spot, is about to obtain his aim when he is arrested by the police, summoned by Dr. Heppel. Upon the sight of her father's murderer Beatrice's mind suddenly clears and subsequently she is happily united with the doctor.

Kliene-Edison

The Woman Next Door—(FIVE REELS) —KLEINE—SEPTEMBER 1.—Featuring Irene Fenwick. This story concerns the efforts of an unprincipled promoter of worthless mining stock to sell the same and to ruin the life of a girl who has refused his proffer of marriage, both of which schemes are happily frustrated. The woman's standing in the community is restored and she marries her liberator. For a longer review see another page this issue.

Mutual Masterpictures

"Monsieur Lecoq"—(FOUR REELS)—"THANHAUSER"—An adaptation of the famous detective story by Emile Gaboriau, featuring William Morris, Alphonse Either, and Florence Labadie. A double shooting at the Pepper-Box Inn gives Monsieur Lecoq, the famous detective, a mystery to solve. After many and startling developments he learns that the Duke of Sairmuse, a prominent member of the nobility, had killed the two men while defending his wife from attack. Believing no good can come from prosecuting the duke, Lecoq agrees to drop the case and destroy the evidence. A longer review will be found on another page of this issue. N. G. C.

North American

The Diamond from the Sky—(NINETEENTH CHAPTER, "FIRE, FURY AND CONFUSION") — NORTH AMERICAN — Arthur Stanley is injured by the falling walls from Pete's Palace. He is taken to Los Angeles by Durand and there Vivian, Blair Stanley and DeVaux, having heard of his injuries, are at his home to welcome him. Esther and Quabba escape from the fire and in Los Angeles the girl goes to see John Powell, who she has learned is supposed to be dying, but she is refused admittance to his home. "The Diamond from the Sky" is now resting on a bee-hive with thousands of bees buzzing around it. Hagar having recovered, asks Blake to look for Esther. Paramount

The Marriage of Kitty—(FIVE REELS) —LASKY—Fannie Ward supported by an all star cast. A will forbids Lord Belsize to marry an actress. He is already engaged to Helen de Semiano of the Gayety theater. Travers, his lawyer, guarantees to please all by having his client wed his god-daughter, Kitty and after six months she can get a divorce and the lord is free to marry Helen. Kitty, who is undeniably beautiful, appears as a stupid and awkward girl at the wedding. Several months after the wedding Lord Belsize sees a picture of his wife as she really is and writes the actress and rushes to Newport, where he is instantly captivated by the lovely Lady Belsize. Helen follows him and demands that divorce arrangements proceed. To establish grounds for divorce, witnesses are assembled behind a curtain and Belsize is to strike his wife, but he decides that a divorce is the last thing he wants and in the latter scene he throws Helen's brother out of Kitty's room and the actress and her brother are ordered out of town.

Pathe

Colonel Heeza Liar, War Dog.—PATHE —(SPLIT REEL)—An animated cartoon from the Bray Studios picturing a series of laughable adventures of the brave and ingenious colonel. These episodes appeared in various editions of the Pathe Weekly and their great popularity brought many requests to assemble them on the same reel. On the same reel with:

Intimate Study of Birds—PART FIVE.—Close-up pictures of the linnet and the bunting, caring for their young.

T. C. K.

Soaking the Clothes—PATHE.—A one-reel comedy. Three young chaps arrive in the big town, prepared to have a good time. Two of them set out to see the sights immediately. The third advises them to leave their money with him. He decides to take a nap, and to make sure that the money is not stolen, sews it in the lining of his coat. His two friends return to get some more change, and when they cannot awaken him, decide to pawn his clothes. Then there is a lively time until they regain the "soaked" clothes.

The Monopolist—(THREE REELS)—PATHE.—Produced in Italy by Pathe. Mercedes Marston consents to marry Norton to save her father from financial ruin. As time passes Norton's consideration for her and his desire to do everything to make her happy, convince Mercedes of his sincerity. The picture ends with Mercedes and her husband on a belated honeymoon.

A Ringer for Max—(TWO REELS)—PATHE—Max Lindor featured in a dual role. Morand resembles the famous comedian. He masquerades as Max and his identity is not questioned. Morand even collects the salary due Max from Pathe Freres. Max has the imposter arrested. In court the judge cannot decide which is which, so he proposes that they each give a comedy performance. Max performs his famous boxing-bout on roller skates. By this he is recognized immediately. T. C. K.

World

The Cotton King—(Five Reels)—World.—An all star cast featured. John Osborne after becoming wealthy in a cotton deal returns to the town of his birth and buys the cotton mills from Henry Stockley and his son, Richard, and retains the son as general manager. Elsie Kent, a working girl falls in love with Richard and he betrays her. Osborne falls in love with Hetty Drayson, who lives with her mother. One day Henry Stockley is out riding horseback and is thrown off and brought home in a dying condition. He leaves his property to his son Richard on the condition that he marry Hetty Drayson. Richard wants the money and he knows that Hetty loves Osborne. He spreads the report that Osborne is the betrayer of Elsie, thus alienating Hetty's affections from Osborne and the men of the mill hearing this report threaten to kill him. The mill workers come to attack Osborne, but Elsie comes in and tells them the truth about Richard. He is about to be lynched by the angered men when Osborne saves him. After trying to rid himself of Osborne, Richard is finally unmasked and led away to prison, while Osborne and Hetty are happy in each others' affection.

Miscellaneous

Salvation Nell—(Six Reels)—California Motion Picture Corporation—An adaptation from Edward Sheldon's successful play featuring Beatriz Michelena. Nell, who has recently joined the Salvation Army, refuses to marry Major Williams, telling him of her former life with Jim Platt, the man she had lived with up to the time he was sent to prison for killing a man. She is determined to reform and marry Jim. After he is released from jail he at first repudiates her insistent request to join the Salvation Army. But by prayer and perseverance she finally converts him. For a longer review see another page of this issue.

TRIANGLE PLANS

BETWEEN September 20 and October 1 the four model theatres of the Triangle Film Corporation will be opened in New York, Chicago, Philadelphia and Boston respectively. The bill for the opening week will be—

DUSTIN FARNUM IN "THE IRON STRAIN"
(Ince-supervised five-reeler)

RAYMOND HITCHCOCK IN "MY VALET"
(Sennett-Keystone four-reeler)

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS IN "THE LAMB"
(Griffith-supervised five-reeler)

That characterizes the service which Triangle Film Corporation will offer to the leading exhibitors of the country, one in each district, beginning a short time after the dates of the presentations in the model theatres. Foremost stars of the American stage, several of them, in each entertainment; the artistic supervision of Griffith, Ince and Sennett; the elaborate orchestral music arranged by William Furst, the famous composer and director.

Contracts are now making with exhibitors for the service in all important centers. The demand to rent the Triangle service has been so extraordinary that we are obliged to ask our correspondents to exercise a certain patience.

The rental service itself will start during the latter part of October. Exactly the same plays and music as presented in the four great cities will be assured to the exhibitors. The unusual efforts of Messrs. Griffith, Ince and Sennett and the enthusiastic co-operation of the stars promise a complete and generous output for the entire year.

Balboa Announces New Feature Series

BIG PRODUCTIONS PROMISED

ADDITIONAL contracts for Balboa products have been brought back to Long Beach, Cal., by Elwood D. Horkheimer, secretary and treasurer of the Balboa Amusement Company, who has just returned from a six weeks sojourn in New York. He intimated that there are several trade combinations forming, in one of which Balboa may figure. But the time is not yet ripe for announcement.

"Business conditions are improving steadily," said Mr. Horkheimer, speaking of his trip. "With the fall revival of interest in amusement matters, the motion picture business promises to re-open bigger than ever. True, an active season is planned for the spoken stage; but nothing of any magnitude will be put on, as far as I could learn. The producing managers are cautious.

"But screen productions continue to be made on a constantly increasing scale. The people who have been predicting a wane of interest in films for several years, have not yet had the satisfaction of saying 'I told you so.' But the struggle for survival is becoming keener among picture producers every day. It's not my policy to look for untoward developments; but I cannot help feeling that before long some manufacturers will have to quit. The market is not sufficiently elastic to absorb all that is offered.

"In the face of this condition, I am happy to be able to say that the future never looked brighter for Balboa. This summer, we have been unusually busy, working five companies on multiple-reel features, one of which, 'Neal of the Navy,' promises to be the feature of New York's fall opening. This production will set a new pace in photoplay serials and will speak for itself, when released early in September.

"As soon as that is completed, Balboa will begin the filming of a new series of silent dramas, to follow up the 'Who Pays' group. This series made such a strong impression that Pathe has been getting numerous requests from exhibitors and their patrons for more screen stories of the same type. While the new series has not been definitely named, its tentative title is 'Who Is Guilty.' This indicates the theme that will underlie the group of twelve stories. The word 'guilty' is not used in its criminal significance, but rather implies 'who is to blame' for the things that go amiss in life's conflicts."

H. M. Horkheimer, president and general manager of the Balboa Company, will be in New York the first part of September to attend the opening of "Neal of the Navy," which the twenty Marcus Loew houses have booked through Pathe. In this way, there is always one of the Horkheimer brothers in New York to look after Balboa interests.

ESSANAY'S NEW STUDIO

Building Three Hundred and Fifty Feet in Length and Correspondingly Wide Now Being Constructed.

The Essanay company has drawn plans for what probably will be the largest indoor photoplay studio in the world. Ground will be broken for the new building about the middle of September, as soon as the gigantic temporary building, which was built for the taking of scenes in Essanay's six act photoplay, "In the Palace of the King," written by F. Marion Crawford, is torn down.

The studio will be three hundred and fifty feet in length and one hundred and seventy-five feet in width. Making a total floor space of 61,250 square feet. Its estimated cost is $150,000.

The building will be a two-story brick structure and will be a gigantic addition to the two studios located on Argyle street, Chicago. The entire lower story will be used as a studio, while the upper floor will be utilized for the offices of directors and assistants and other officials of the company. The offices on the second floor of the old building will be given over entirely to dressing rooms for the increasing number of actors Essanay now is engaging. The two present studios will be continued, the company needing all the floor space available.

Since increasing the number of weekly releases to eleven reels, exclusive of the Chaplin comedies and the V. L. S. E., multiple reel features, Essanay has been considerably cramped for indoor studio space. The extra features has entailed the engagement of a larger force of actors and directors as well as officials.

$10,000 FIRE DAMAGES INCEVILLE— HEROIC WORK CHECKS FLAMES

Inceville, the big plant of the New York Motion Picture Corporation in the Santa Ynez Canyon, west of Santa Monica, had a narrow escape from extinction by fire last evening, says a Los Angeles daily of August 24. As it was, damage amounting to about $10,000 was done when the paint shop, the carpenter shop and one of the stages were destroyed before the flames were checked.

The fire is thought to have started from spontaneous combustion in the paint shop. It communicated with the carpenter shop, which adjoins, and then to a section of the big stage. Inceville has its own water works and fire department, but so threatening were the proportions assumed by the blaze that the Santa Monica department was asked to send aid. All of the damage was confined to buildings on top of the hill, which is covered with structures.

The heaviest loss was sustained in the destruction of scenery and properties which were being made for the forthcoming production of a photoplay in which Miss Billie Burke is to be featured.

Director General Thomas H. Ince was at his Hollywood home when notified of the fire and he arrived in time to take charge of the fire fighters, after an auto dash which took just twenty-seven minutes.

V. L. S. E.'S NEW TRADE MARK

The trade mark selected to brand V. L. S. E. productions finally decided upon by the Big Four, is like the policies and features of the four affiliated companies — decidedly distinctive. The new trade mark which will soon be seen on the screens of the entire nation, and later when the European differences have been settled, on the screens of the entire world, consists of a number of intricate parts representing the separate individualities, aims and ambitions of the four companies, yet all welded into a concrete unit, forming a perfect circle representing the V. L. S. E. as a whole. In its entirety, the new trade mark is simplicity itself, yet by the unique arrangement of alternate white and black quarter circles, it is a trade mark that at once indelibly impresses itself on the mind and for that reason it will quickly familiarize itself, and in a short space of time will be recognized as the mark that brands the big picture play productions of the Big Four. The new trade mark was designed and drawn by Charles J. Giegerich, publicity director of V. L. S. E.

KLEINE'S EXECUTIVE STAFF AND MANAGERS MEET

The second annual conference of eastern branch managers and executives was held in the George Kleine studios at 11 East 15th street recently. Managers were present from Atlanta, Chicago, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, Toronto and Boston, as well as the executive heads of studio, scenario auditing, and publicity departments.

The day proved a busy one for all concerned. A great deal of business was transacted and a good deal of fun was sandwiched in between, the latter including a hastily improvised moving picture scenario featuring George Kleine, ably supported by W. E. Raynor and W. D. Cooper, managers respectively of the New York and Toronto offices. There were twelve other supports, incidentally, of varying degrees of excellence all determined to avail themselves of their only opportunity to see their ghostly doubles, under the able direction of Louis Myll.

Mr. Kleine called the meeting to order about 11 a. m., and from that time until the adjournment to the studio about 4 p. m. questions of policy were decided and plans for a busy fall and winter were made. Local conditions in the various territories were discussed with benefit to the different managers and departments affected. Altogether the afternoon proved highly profitable and advantageous.

Later in the day the meeting was adjourned to the Brevoort Hotel where a typical George Kleine feast was prepared. The dinner broke up about midnight when fifteen tired but enthusiastic film men found their way to trolleys, subways and out-of-town flyers.

Those present were George Kleine; Merle E. Smith, general branch manager; Douglas H. Bergh, traveling representative; W. E. Raynor, manager of New York office; H. A. Bugie, manager of Philadelphia office; M. F. Gibbons, manager of Pittsburgh office; W. D. Cooper, manager of Toronto office; R. D. Marson, manager of Boston office; Ben F. Simpson, manager of Atlanta office; John J. Dacey and Foster Moore, traveling out of New York office; Louis Myll, manager of productions; Frank Phelps, general auditor; J. C. Miller, editor, and O. F. Doud, publicity manager.

CLUNE BUYS FAMOUS PLAYERS STUDIO AND WILL PRODUCE

One of the biggest business deals to take place in Los Angeles for some time past is the half million dollar investment of W. H. Clune, motion picture magnate, in the Famous Players studio, located at Bronson and Melrose avenues, Los Angeles.

This is Mr. Clune's latest venture in the picture producing business and was made necessary by the demand for elaborate feature productions of sufficient length and interest to cover an evening's performance. For some time past there has been a rumor in the air that Mr. Clune would go into the film producing side of the motion picture business, but heretofore he has refused to give out any statements.

The Famous Players studio has a reputation from New York to the Pacific coast for its equipment, lighting effects and spacious quarters. Nothing better could be desired by the new Clune company. After a great deal of negotiating between the New York owners and the westerners satisfactory terms were agreed upon.

Manager Lloyd Brown, of the Clune Auditorium theater, will also manage and personally supervise the selection of subjects and the general laying out and staging of all pictures. As his director, Mr. Brown has chosen Donald Crisp, well known to the film producers.

"Ramona," a California story by Helen Hunt Jackson, long since considered an American classic, will be the first picture turned out by the new studio. Money, time and genius will be lavishly expended upon this film to make it the greatest motion picture drama ever staged in America. What "The Clansman" is to the South, "Ramona" is to the great western coast and particularly California.

HORSLEY ENGAGES CRANE WILBUR, JAY HUNT SIGNED TO DIRECT HIM

David Horsley announces the engagement for a long period of time of Crane Wilbur, the popular photoplay star, for the leading parts in the new brand of three-reel features which Mr. Horsley is producing and which will be released through the Mutual program beginning September 29. The engagement of Mr. Wilbur at this time is a coup for Mr. Horsley, as he is today one of the most popular players in pictures. He is an ideal type of leading man and as such has scored emphatic successes. His greatest hit was made in the Pathe serial, "The Perils of Pauline," in which he assumed the leading male role, playing opposite Pearl White. His work in this serial made his name a household word the country over, and easily established him in the front ranks of the world's greatest photoplayers. So signal had been his success that as soon as he had finished his season with Pathe he was engaged by the Lubin Company to play the leading male part in "The Road of Strife," a serial which is now running. In this, too, he scored a success, adding much to his already enviable reputation.

Crane Wilbur.

Jay Hunt, one of the most noted of present day motion picture directors, has been secured by David Horsley to direct the production of the Crane Wilbur three-reel features, and Mr. Hunt is now at work on the first picture, "The Protest," which will be released September 29. Mr. Hunt comes to the Horsley studios from Inceville where for three years he was associated with Thomas Ince in the production of pictures for the New York Motion Picture Corporation. His latest works for this company were "The Mill by the Zeuder Zee," and "His Brother's Keeper," both two-reel subjects which Mr. Hunt not only directed but played the leading character parts as well. These productions were of such exceptional merit that they created a great deal of comment. Besides being recognized as an excellent director Mr. Hunt is looked upon as one of the best character actors in motion pictures, a line of acting he followed many years on the speaking stage as well as in pictures.

Jay Hunt.

GREAT OVATION GIVEN MARY PICKFORD AT BABY PARADE

Mary Pickford, star of the Famous Players Film Company, who was last Wednesday extended the unusual distinction of being the guest of honor of the City of Asbury Park at a Silver Jubilee Baby Parade—the first actress, in all the twenty-five years during which Asbury Park has annually celebrated a Baby Parade, to receive this signal honor, a preference shared in past years by President Wilson, Ex-President Theodore Roosevelt, and other national celebrities—was tendered the greatest ovation with which this famous seaside resort has ever welcomed a visitor.

A significant feature of the parade was the numerous impersonations of Miss Pickford's various creations by the children, principal among which were "Tess of the Storm Country," "Hearts Adrift," "Such a Little Queen," and "Mistress Nell." Another interesting aspect of the event was the fact that Miss Pickford has obtained the addresses of three of the youngsters who appeared in the parade, and in whom she detected screen possibilities.

EDGAR JONES, METRO DIRECTOR, MODESTLY PROUD OF NEW PLAY

Edgar Jones, who directed the coming five-reel Rolfe-Metro feature, "An Enemy to Society," regards this motion picture as his greatest dramatic achievement. "An Enemy to Society" tops a long dramatic record for Mr. Jones, though but a little more than thirty years old, played important roles on the speaking stage for fifteen years and has been in motion pictures for three years and a half, during all of which time, except the first six months, he has been directing notable productions.

Mr. Jones recently joined the Rolfe-Metro producing forces where his first work is an adaptation of "An Enemy to Society" from the book of the same name by George Bronson Howard. Lois Meridith, Hamilton Revelle, H. Cooper Cliff, and Henry Bergman are the stars in the picture.

MAC CULLOCH JOINS MAC MAHON

The many newspaper and professional friends of Campbell MacCulloch will be pleased to learn that he has been appointed national publicity manager of the Triangle Film Corporation. He will make his headquarters with Henry MacMahon, the general press representative, in the Longacre building, New York city. Mr. MacCulloch will have supervisory charge of questions of national publicity. He will originate ideas.

MacCulloch and MacMahon worked together on the Morning Telegraph fourteen years ago. The Scotsman was later appointed general press representative of the Liebler productions, a position in which he made great success as a publicity promoter of such stars as Eleanor Robson and Viola Allen and such plays as "Salomy Jane," "Mrs. Wiggs," "In the Palace of the King," "The Dawn of a Tomorrow," etc. Subsequently Mr. MacCulloch transferred his activities to the editorial department of The Century magazine, where he again demonstrated his fitness to handle literary and artistic subjects. Of recent years he has not been active in press affairs except as New York correspondent of a Boston newspaper.

VITAGRAPH'S "MORTMAIN" WILL SHOW UNIQUE BIT OF MAKE-UP

In the filming of "Mortmain" the Vitagraph five-reel feature that will be the first V. L. S. E. release for the month of September, close attention to detail will be noted in the make-up of Robert Edeson's right hand. The whole action of this piece evolves around the grafting of another man's hand on to the wrist of Mortmain, the character played by Mr. Edeson, and it was therefore, of the highest importance that the new hand have all the appearance of being different from the original member, and quite apparently not the mate of the left hand.

To make the illusion perfect, the Vitagraph Company's official make-up man consulted with several noted physicians and made exhaustive experiments before attempting to make up Mr. Edeson's hand for the character. How well he succeeded in creating the desired impression, was attested by Mr. Edeson's remark that "if it was not for the sense of feeling, he would have actually believed that a new hand had been grafted on to his right wrist."

It is said that the ridges that would naturally result through the stitching made by the surgeon at the point where the new hand was supposed to have been joined to the wrist, were a combination of nose putty and liquid court-plaster. The whole appearance of the hand was then changed by shaving it clean, whitening it to give the natural pallor of a member through which the blood circulation was as yet imperfect, and narrowing the general proportion of the hand by the use of blue grease paint. The make-up is so perfect, and the difference between the hands so marked, that the spectator immediately notices the difference as soon as Mr. Edeson's hands are brought into view.

MANY EXPERTS ASSIST IN STAGING ESSANAY'S FORTHCOMING FEATURE

No pains are being spared by Essanay to make "In the Palace of the King," the six-act feature photoplay from the famous novel by F. Marion Crawford, perfect in every respect. Experts in costuming effects and in the styles and mannerism of the time of the action of the play have been engaged to drill the thousands of "extra" players who have been employed for the picturization of the novel. The film will be Essanay's October release on the V. L. S. E. program.

Among the experts who have been engaged by Essanay to bring "In the Palace of the King" to the highest degree of perfection, is Mrs. Arend Van Vlissingen, who "discovered" and brought out Isidora Duncan, the world-famous danseuse. Mrs. Van Vlissingen is past master in terpischore and was obtained especially to train the several hundred professional dancers who appear in the beautiful court dance of "In the Palace of the King."

Mrs. Van Vlissingen has had a wide experience in her line and is known from coast to coast for her success with classic dances. Another important factor was taken into consideration in the engagement of Mrs. Van Vlissingen, besides her recognized ability as an instructor. This was the fact that she was a close personal friend of F. Marion Crawford, who wrote "In the Palace of the King," and that all of his works are therefore thoroughly familiar to her.

"In the Palace of the King" features Richard C. Travers, Essanay's leading player, who takes the role of Don Juan, of Austria, half brother of King Phillip II. Miss Arline Hackett, of the legitimate stage, was engaged especially for the part of Dolores de Mendoza, leading feminine character, and E. J. Radcliffe, as King Phillip, and Lewis Edgar, as the court jester, also were employed for this particular play. They, too, are well known in the legitimate.

Other Essanay stars in the cast are Miss Nell Craig, as Inez, blind sister of Dolores; Ernest Maupain, as General de Mendoza, commander of the king's guard; Sydney Ainsworth, as Parez, the king's secretary; Miss Lillian Drew, as the Princess Eboli, co-conspirator with Parez against the throne of Spain, and Thomas Commerford, as Gomez, the prime minister. Besides these, there are hundreds of grandees, courtiers, court ladies, guards, troopers, gentlemen-in-waiting, musicians, and even judges of inquisition, an executioner and a cardinal. The play is being produced under the direction of Fred E. Wright.

MURIEL OSTRICHE, FAMOUS STAR, HAS BEEN SECURED BY EQUITABLE

Muriel Ostriche, formerly star of the Thanhouser, Princess brand, and recently star of numerous Vitagraph productions in which she appeared jointly with Robert Edeson in big feature productions, has been engaged by the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation for appearance in that concern's productions.

After a brief vacation in Atlantic City, she will begin work at the Equitable Flushing studio in a series of serious and important dramatic vehicles now being selected for her by the directors of the Equitable concern.

The scenario department of the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation will begin work immediately upon the adaptation of several successful novels and plays which have already been selected and which are adaptable to Miss Ostriche's peculiar talent and youthful beauty.

"The Filer" is the title of the first Kleine comedy featuring Bickel and Watson. It is scheduled for release through the Kleine-Edison Feature Service, September 15.

A Bigger House — How to Fiance It

BY SAMUEL M. FIELD*

Suggestions for the solution of a problem that must confront every successful exhibitor, and a story of the success of one who saw opportunity to grow with the growth of the film business—the experience of a man who didn't stand still.

ARE you running a 500-seat house in a 1,000-seat territory? A lot of motion picture exhibitors are guilty of just that mistake. You may wonder how it would be possible for you to get a bigger house. There is a way. If you have succeeded in a small way there is a way to do it big. The success of today does not insure success for tomorrow unless you keep step with tomorrow.

The Mutual Film Corporation is interested in seeing every exhibitor who pins his faith to the new, better, stronger Mutual program—the new $8,000,000 program—make the most of his opportunities for success.

You are familiar with the experience of business men in other lines. You have seen the man with the little cigar stand or the little restaurant, long contented with what he called a "steady business," finally put out of business by some enterprising chap who dashed in with a shop that was really designed to serve the needs of the community. The point is that the stranger, being a stranger, came in and saw things with an eye unclouded by familiarity with conditions. He saw the possibilities all fresh and new, not like the man who had walked down the street every morning for years and opened up his little shop to handle every day's business in just the same old way. The same thing is happening in the motion picture business every day.

Just as President Freuler remarked in his "message" last week this motion picture business is a rapid fire business. You have got to grab off the business while opportunity offers. Every day is a new deal, with new possibilities fresh every morning. Arthur Brisbane, the great New York editor, once said that the newspaper man was like a hen, "because he has to lay a perfectly new egg every day." That is to a considerable degree true of the motion picture exhibitor. You have to stay fresh and young in the game. It means keeping alive.

Now no amount of push and effort, and advertising, and publicity, and fine pictures, are going to help your business if you haven't the business capacity to handle it. In the exhibition business it means having a show worth seeing and enough seats to handle the people when they want to see it. Patrons are quick to learn and pay attention to the capacity of a house. How often do they say as they get to coffee at the family dinner table? "There's a swell picture at the Empress tonight." And then somebody breaks in with, "Yes, but we'll have to stand up outside until the 10 o'clock show." That means that the "Empress" will lose its business to some other house and probably it also means that somebody with an eye to the main chance will build and give the Empress a hot line of competition right across the street.

Now as I said in the beginning there is no reason why an exhibitor confronted with these conditions can not have a bigger, better theater and take his rightful share of the business that he has built. It is of his creation and it is up to him to build the machinery to take care of it and take in the profits at the box office that are waiting for him.

We will take up the case of Bill Jones—which isn't his name at all—who operates a motion picture house with a great deal of success in a certain mid-western city. Bill Jones had a lease on a house with 450 seats. He was doing pretty good business and as the word went "didn't have to worry none." But Bill got uneasy. He heard rumors that this fellow and that was talking about putting a big house in the district to make a big splash and go out after all the business. This worried Bill considerably, because he knew conditions well enough to realize that a little competition could do him a lot of harm. He felt his program was all right and he knew he could push his advertising and publicity stunts and get more business, but in his little house he could not handle much more.

One day a bright light broke in on him. Why not build that big new house myself? Of course he hesitated some over that. He had been doing fairly well, but he hadn't accumulated enough money to finance a big house at all. How was he to do it? He felt sure he could handle it if he only had it.

The neighborhood bank occupied his attention for a while. The bank had money. Money was what he needed. He knew that other business men borrowed money on their business. One day he got bold enough to approach the head of the bank—one of the regular patrons of Bill's theater, by the way.

"I've been doing pretty well, so far," he explained. "But I see a chance to do better with a better house. And if I don't do it pretty soon somebody is going to beat me to it. I was wondering if there was any way you could help me get a better house, one that I could handle the business in? I don't exactly like to go in debt, but I'm pretty sure I can make it pay out."

The banker, with considerable money that was "willing to work" on his hands, saw opportunity. He reflected that in the last few years he had always noticed a pretty fair run of business at Bill Jones's theater, and recalled that he had often wondered just how strong this motion picture business was. Also he knew from his close personal knowledge of the bank's affairs that Bill Jones had a modest but healthy account.

He encouraged the motion picture man to bring his books. The showing that was made there resulted in the bank's management of a deal that gave Bill Jones his new house "The Empire" three months later. "The Empire" is a regular theater and it seats 1,200 people. Bill Jones is doing business there with a wide smile and a wonderful consumption of ticket rolls.

The formula is very simple. There is nothing hard to understand about getting credit. The bank financed the deal and took Bill Jones's paper because he had demonstrated his ability to run a picture house and make a profit. He had done it with a small house. His business demanded expansion. The bank came in for its normal function of financing business expansion. The bank stood no chance to lose. In the first place it knew Bill Jones for a careful, successful exhibitor. His books and his history proved the worth of the business. It was a certainty he would pay out. But failing that, he had convinced the banker that the business was there. This being true, since the bank held mortgages on the new house as security, it was another certainty that if Bill Jones failed to deliver somebody would be found who could deliver with that property—since it was established that there was an actual demand for that theater and its service.

That gave Bill Jones his opportunity.

Now he has a big, paying house, a long term lease on the site and is rapidly acquiring ownership of the building.

There are a dozen ways such situations as his may be worked out. Often an exhibitor, looking around for room to grow in, can find a real estate owner with idle property eager to improve it with a chance of increased earnings. As for instance in a case I know of where an exhibitor with just enough money to pay a year's rent got a house built for him and put up the rent in advance by way of encouraging the owner. In another case an exhibitor leased the bare ground for a long term, borrowed money on his lease and put up a theater. Another exhibitor had enough money to buy the ground he needed. By loans on his ground and the new building he was able to borrow enough to put it up. In yet another case an exhibitor was given a deed to the land by the owner. The exhibitor mortgaged the land for the cost of the theater building. Then he deeded the land back to the owner, subject of course, to the mortgage. Then the owner of the land gave a bond for the deed subject to payment of the price of the land and the cost.

Really it all goes back to the question of whether or not the exhibitor has demonstrated his ability to conduct a show properly and to make it pay a profit. If he has done that he can get more credit I believe than a man doing the same volume of business in any other line. The country is full of money looking for a place to work. This is one of the results of the war. The motion picture business is the only big important thing that has not suffered through war and trade conditions. Other lines of trade and industry have been halted, or at least delayed in the natural process of expansion and these lines have not absorbed the available capital. The demand upon bankers for loans have therefore been much lighter than normal. There is more money to be had and interest rates are low. Money is cheaper. Also there is a very general recognition of the past successes of the motion picture business and its future prospects. People generally have the impression, a pretty well grounded one, too, that there is money in motion pictures. The whole situation is one that makes conditions ideal for the already successful exhibitor who wants to expand his business to keep pace with the growing demands of his patronage.

Besides some of the ways that have been pointed out for expansion the exhibitor should be alert to other possibilities. For example it may be possible for you to lease the biggest "legit" theater in your district and put in pictures. Don't ever get the idea that there is anything too big for motion pictures. Even if you did start with one of the old time "store shows," remember that the business has grown up. It is man size now and one of the very biggest businesses in the country.

There can be no better evidence to you of the growth of the industry and its constantly evolving character than the Mutual Film Corporation's new $8,000,000 program. This program is a part of the proper expansion to the demands of the business. This bigger, better program has been constructed for the purpose of keeping pace with the demands and to give the exhibitor a program on which he can make a profit, to give him the most economical basis of operation for his house, a real show every show and a profit every show.

ASSOCIATED PROGRAM WILL BE DISTRIBUTED NEXT WEEK

The Associated Film Sales Corporation is now permanently established in its new and commodious quarters on the sixth floor of the World's Tower building, 110 West Fortieth street, New York City, and the initial releases of the new program will be at the various Associated Exchanges for use by exhibitors during the week of September 13.

Not only has the Associated Film Sales Corporation found it necessary to secure larger quarters, but the various manufacturing companies affiliated with it have been compelled during the past few months to enlarge their plants, increase their facilities, and materially add to their producing organizations.

General Manager Arthur Bard is extremely optimistic regarding the outlook. "The great interest shown by exhibitors throughout the country in Associated Service has been most gratifying," he said. "These men who have followed the motion picture industry through its various evolutionary stages can't help but be in sympathy with the policies of our company and have not been backward in expressing their approval of our methods. It has been demonstrated by every national organization distributing a regular program, which has withstood the test of time, that the only practical method of manufacturing and distributing a program is for the manufacturers and the exchanges to be closely allied in their efforts to efficiently supply the exhibitors with just the goods the patrons demand.

"In every instance in the past where a middleman has intruded himself between the manufacturer and exchange he has been invariably considered in a short time an expensive and unnecessary factor and has been eventually eliminated for the good of the service.

"The more closely the producing companies and distributors have been associated the greater has been the success of all concerned, and this fact has governed us in outlining the plans and policies for the distribution of Associated Service. Not only are our manufacturers and exchanges working as one for the common good, but we have in contemplation a plan which will cement our exchanges and exhibitors more closely together than has been possible in the past."

According to the Los Angeles Tribune, General Manager Geary of the International Film Company has, within the past week, closed a lease on the Santa Monica studio, formerly used by the Kalem Company in making its famous productions. This studio is conceded to be one of the best equipped on the Pacific Coast and is ideally located for the manufacture of films.

Selig Polyscope special train in Eagle River Canyon, Colo.

In the Wake of the Selig Special

BY NEIL G. CAWARD

Colorado Springs, Col., Thurs., July 22, 1915.

Squedunk, Iowa,

Dear Jack:—

When i rote you last wk. Jack i said as how i wood rite you a gain from Denver, but gosh Jack i and the Missus has seen so much since the last time i rote you that im going to rite again rite now in sted of wateing till i get to Denver to morrow.

Believ me Jack this hear last cuple of days has been worth the hole trip alone, for you never seen such scenery in your life and we looked at mts. and down offen the top of em until our eyes ake, and it dont seem posble that they is such country as they got out here.

When we woke up day before yest. we was just getting to Glen wood Springs where they got a summer resort and hot springs and a lot of such truck. Well the trane stopped moren a couple of hrs, and i and the Missus got out and walked all over the place and the motshun pitchur director he took a lot more scene for this hear 7 Suffering Sisters pitchur. Kuming rite up out of the ground Jack is hot springs, so hot you can see the steem from the water, and then they got a bathing pool what is biggern a hole block in Squedunk and a lot of folks went bathing in it even though it was only Wed. Well Jack i took one little swaller of that there watter and believe me i didnt want no more of it even if it was for 0.

After we left Glen wood Springs we rode and rode through butiful mt scenery and sumtimes the trane was down in a valley between 2 mts, and the walls of these hear mts rose up thousands of ft on each side and then pretty soon the trane was up on top of some mts. and you could look down for thousands of ft. until it maid you dizzy. 1 place we stopped and the feller from the Denver and Rio Grand railroad what we was riding on he took a pitchur of the hole party and i send you 1 of those pitchurs Jack so you can see how we looked.

A little while after we got by that place we kum to the top of the hole bunch of mts. Its the highest place Jack what we was at and the name of it is Tennessee Pass, but what they want to call it Tennessee Pass for when its in Colorado is moren i can make out. Any way thats what they call it and when the trane stopped i and the Missus and the Hoaglands and the Blazers and a lot of other people got out and got their pitchurs took caus it was the highest place what we was at. And Jack in the distance and what didnt look moren a cuple miles a way was mts. with snow on em.

Well Jack having klimbed up 1 side of the mts. we now begun to go down on the other side and by and by the trane stopped at a place called Texas Krik and they hitched on a open kar, that is a passenger kar with seets on it only it didnt have no roof and everybody klimbed on that caus we was going thru the Royal George and you gotta look straight up. Well when we kum to this hear Royal George, believ me Jack it was even moren it was cracked up to be. Why the walls on 1 side a lone went up as high as 5 or 6 thousand ft. and on the other side they musta gone pretty near as high and there our trane was way down in that there hole between the mts. and Jack if a rock had ever rolled offen 1 of them mts it wood have been good nite for me and youd hafta run the show a lone caus i woodnt kum back, only no rock didnt roll off Jack.

This hear Walt Blazer he got out and rote his name

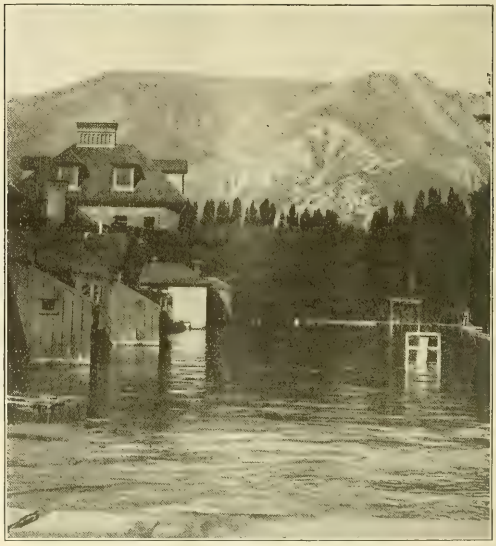
all over the side of the wall at 1 place and this crazy Clarence Frambers what acts so foolish and puts on the cab a ray shows etc. he got a cuple of beer bottels and set up a monument in another place, but sum of the crowd they took stones and played duck on the rock with the monument so it didnt stay up long. Well all the way down the Royal George the scenery was butiful and then we kum out it down to Canyon City, and they took the open kars offen the trane and we had to get back in the regular kars. And a bout 10 oclock that nite we kum to Colorado Springs and we slept there on the side track all nite long, that is Jack we didnt sleep ourselves but the trane did, you know I mean we slept in the trane what was standing on the side track.



Next a. m. early we had breakfas and took a trane what Herb Hoagland rented for the day to take us up to Kripple Kreek what is the famous old mining town and by golly Jack we seen axshul gold mines taking gold out of the ground. Well Jack this trane what we was on it went up pretty near as high as the 1 what we was on yesterday only not quite. It went up quicker though, that is not faster but straiter up. ½ way up to this Kripple Kreek place they got a lunch counter and the trane stopt there so as we could get sumthing to eat, and folks bote samples of the oar what kums out of the mines etc.

When we got back to Colorado Springs a lot of auto mobiles was wateing for us and they took us up to the garden of the Gods what is all rocks Jack and not gardens at all. They got rocks like camels a kissing each other, and church steeples and stagecoaches and lions and ships and everything, and they is all maid of rock.

Well Jack from here we went to Manitwo what is like this Glen wood Springs place and they sell you watter what kums out of the ground. We went rite thru though and up Williams Canyon what was so narrow that the auto mobiles could hardly get thru. And up at the high end of this Williams Canyon is the cave of the winds what is all isickles made out of stone and is a butiful place. i even liked it though i had to pay to get into it. for i never seen 0 like it before. They is room after room full of this stone isickles, and on the roof of sum of the rooms is what looks like grated kokonut only that is stone too. And they got a wire net over it to keep folks from picking off pieces to take home with em.

Kuming down from this cave of the winds was sum job caus the rode is awful steep but we did it all rite and got back down town in time to have supper and then we walked a round a while and now we are going to bed caus the trane pulls out for Denver before a. m.

Jack i just happened to think of it but you never told me in your last postel kard if you got them carbons for the machine yet. im getting worried caus maybe you forget it, but you cant let me no if you did or not caus now im koming back and you dont no where to send the letter to ketch me before i kum home. Get em rite away Jack if you aint all ready ordered em.

Yours Respy. Ed.

FIRST GRANDIN FEATURE ON G. F. PROGRAM SEPTEMBER 6

After more than eight weeks' preparation, the first of a series of two-reel subjects featuring Miss Ethel Grandin will be released by George Kleine on the General Film program commencing September 6. "Her Secret" is the title of the first release, a vehicle especially chosen for Miss Grandin's entry into the licensed ranks.

Equitable Secures Many New Stars

FISCHER, ROSS AND EDESON SIGNED

MARGARITA FISCHER, known throughout filmdom through the popularity she achieved as star of American Beauty films and in Mutual Master-Pictures, has been engaged by the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation and under the direction of Harry A. Pollard, who has been directing Miss Fischer throughout her entire film career, will begin work within a few days on a five-reel production which will characterize the Equitable program, the latter part of November. Miss Fischer, without the shadow of a doubt one of the most beautiful personalities on the screen when the Mutual Master-Pictures first came into being, was given the honor of being the star of the first release. Her work in "The Quest" established her as an emotional actress of no mean calibre and so well was she received that her other feature productions were immediately sent over the Mutual program. Miss Fischer began her stage career in support of Grace George, and was later chosen by T. Daniel Frawley to head his important stock company at Winnipeg, Manitoba, and so well did she succeed in numerous dramatic roles with that organization that she was selected to originate the leading role in Joseph Medill Patterson's drama, "By Products," and it was during the engagement of this piece at the Studebaker theater, Chicago, that the Selig Company engaged her and she starred in several of the biggest Selig productions. From this point Miss Fischer's progress in screen work was rapid and phenomenal and her popularity gained with every new release.

Margarita Fischer.

Harry A. Pollard, who has been directing Miss Fischer for the past three years, and is one of the most efficient directors in filmdom, will have complete charge of the company in which Miss Fischer will appear. The Fischer productions will be made at the Wizard studio, 310 West Fifty-second street, New York City, where a company is now being assembled to support the famous little ingenue star.

Another important acquisition to the Equitable roster of stars is Charles J. Ross, who will make his first appearance in an important screen production under the Equitable banner to be released late in October. The vehicle selected for Mr. Ross' appearance is an adaptation in screen form of the famous dramatic production, "The Senator," which was more than popular some years ago, both in New York and on tour.

Robert Edeson, first seen in motion pictures in the Lasky production of "The Call of the North" and "Where the Trail Divides," is another Equitable star, having signed contracts with that concern this week calling for a number of productions. Mr. Edeson, who is under contract to appear in an important Broadway engagement beginning about September 21, will devote four days a week to work at the Equitable studios.

General Manager Feist of the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation is endeavoring to procure a number of Stewart Edward White's books for adaptation to screen form, as Mr. Edeson prefers big, out-of-doors themes, is a warm friend of Mr. White and portrays better than any other type of men the characters described by the author in his virile stories of the north.

PATHE'S "HEINIE AND LOUIE" COMEDIES ARE GOING WELL

With practically no advertising and no publicity, the "Starlight" comedies, "Heine and Louie," have won their way with the exhibitors and assumed an important position on the Pathe program. The idea of having two leading characters, both of them men, is certainly novel, and was the conception of Mr. Mittenthal of the Mittenthal Film Company, maker of the comedies. "Heinie and Louie" are a Weberfieldian pair who do all manner of comical things at a seeming utter disregard of life and limb.

James Audrey. Walter Kendig.

James Aubrey, who plays the part of "Heinie," was born in England and came from the London Music Hall to this country. He toured the United States playing "A Night in an English Music Hall," a popular vaudeville sketch. In this sketch he played all the principal vaudeville theaters in America. Mr. Aubrey comes of a well known English pantomime family, which explains to some degree his adaptability to screen work.

Walter Kendig, the "Louie" of the comedies, was born and brought up in Philadelphia. He put in three years in the Lubin stock company, and then came to New York, where he was engaged to play the younger brother with William Farnum in "The Gilded Fool."

Some Views of Metro's Gigantic New Studio

Room for sets enough here to satisfy any manufacturer. There are some 20,000 sq. ft. of floor space.

The studio looks even more immense when seen from the distance, but this illustration does not exaggerate its size.

Metro Secures Big New Studio

SPECTACULAR PRODUCTIONS POSSIBLE

THE Metro Pictures Corporation has secured exclusive control of the largest motion picture studio in the world through an affiliation entered into during the present week with the Federal Feature Films Corporation of New York. This adds another to the long list of big surprises which the Metro has treated the motion picture industry.

The new studio, within four hours of New York, is located at Rocky Glen, midway between Scranton and Wilkes Barre, Pa., in the heart of the Pocono mountain district. The scenic advantages are unrivalled and include everything except an ocean.

The Federal Feature Films Corporation by its contract with the Metro affords the Metro organization additional facilities for tremendous production. The main studio building is 200x125 feet, with 20,000 square feet of floor space and 25,000 square feet of glass covering its great roof and sides. The construction is of tubular steel on concrete foundations, and the main structure has room for the simultaneous operation of twenty-one stages.

The Federal Feature Films Corporation acquired the property, consisting of fourteen acres and a frontage on a lake, from Arthur Frothingham, a constructing engineer who built the studio with a direct plan that it would eventually be used for motion picture making. The park, consisting of fourteen acres, is in the center of a thousand acre tract of gorgeous mountain scenery, with climatic conditions exceptionally advantageous for good photography.

Arthur James, who left the Mutual Film Corporation to take charge of the advertising, publicity and scenario departments of the Metro Pictures Corporation, is president of the Federal Feature Films Company. Merritt Crawford, formerly of the Motion Picture News and editor of Reel Life, and now with the Metro, is its secretary, and Henry James, who as business and advertising manager of Reel Life brought that publication to financial success, is treasurer of the Federal Feature Film Corporation.

The Federal has arranged to produce star feature pictures and has placed all of its facilities at the command of Metro.

Ince Engages Two New Stars

Western Producer Permanently Signs Frank Keenan and Employs William H. Thompson and Norman Hackett, Two Well Known Stars

That Frank Keenan has been engaged, under a long term contract, to appear exclusively in the productions of Thomas H. Ince and that William H. Thompson and Norman Hackett have been signed to join the colony of stage celebrities at Inceville are the most important announcements made this week from the New York Motion Picture Corporation's west coast studios.

Keenan already has done one picture under the Ince supervision. It is entitled "The Coward," and will shortly be seen as the second Ince-Triangle feature on the forthcoming program. Therefore his presence at Inceville will be nothing new. However, the fact that he has affixed his signature to a contract calling for his services in Ince photodramas for a long period is one of vast importance, it meaning that the footlights have, perhaps, permanently lost a most illustrious figure.

Preparations are now being made for the beginning of Keenan's career as an Ince star. His first production, upon his return within the next two weeks, will be that of a spectacular war story from the pen of J. G. Hawks. It has been written expressly for him and the character he will interpret is declared to be the most acceptable he has ever undertaken.

Under the supervision of Producer Ince, Stage Manager Tom Brierly is now at work planning the erection of costly sets to be used in the Keenan vehicle. A number of these will have to be constructed on the plateaux in and about Inceville, so great are to be their dimensions. Carloads of lumber are being unloaded and the Inceville motor trucks are being kept busy hauling "props."

The acquisition of William H. Thompson is considered by Ince to be one of the most valuable yet effected. Mr. Thompson is renowned throughout the country as one of the very best character-actors in his profession. He is past seventy years of age and yet enjoys a prestige with American audiences that is enviable. It was with him that Producer Ince acquired the greatest part of his training as an actor, when little more than a boy, and this fact has served to cement the two men as the most devoted of friends. Ince regards the venerable actor with such deep esteem that he even named his first-born after him and made him the lad's Godfather. Mr. Thompson is universally recognized as the dean of the American stage. He is expected to arrive at Inceville within the next two weeks and will be cast in support of Billie Burke.

Norman Hackett, the third of the additions to Inceville within the past week, belongs to the younger generation of American leading men. As a stock star he is known from the Atlantic to the Pacific and also boasts a large following on Broadway. Upon his arrival at Inceville he will be assigned an important part in support of one of the noted legitimate stars now working there.

ANNOUNCEMENT MADE BY V. L. S. E.

Through the V. L. S. E., the Lubin and Vitagraph companies announce that beginning with the month of September they will increase their output of big features on the V. L. S. E. program to two productions each month. In announcing this new order of releases, the Lubin company states that in addition to Marie Dressler in "Tillie's Tomato Surprise," to be released September 20, it will offer the five-reel adaptation of the famous stage success, "The Great Ruby."

This stirring melodrama, that enjoyed overwhelming success as a spoken play, will be released on September 10. It is reported to be one of the strongest subjects in point of dramatic quality and one of the most elaborately staged picture plays yet seen on the screen. Featured in the principal roles are Octavia Handworth, Beatrice Morgan and George Soule Spencer, supported by an exceptionally strong cast of Lubin players.

The Vitagraph company, in addition to Robert Edeson in "Mortmain," scheduled for September 6, will present Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew in a five-part feature, "Playing Dead." This feature will be released on September 20. "Playing Dead" is a feature that has allowed Mr. and Mrs. Drew full opportunity to display the fine dramatic ability that has won such wide popularity for them in the world of silent dramatics.

ARTHUR R. MOMAND IS TO MAKE CARTOONS FOR GAUMONT

Right away a guy gets conspicuous next thing you know he's in the moving picture business. That is what happened to Mr. McGinis and his whole family in the daily cartoon extravaganza, "Keeping Up With the Joneses." So it is that this comic which graces the pages of a big string of American dailies is to appear on the Mutual Film Corporation"s new $8,000,000 program.

Arthur R. Momand.

Arrangements have been completed with "Pop," father of the series, to put it into animated cartoons for release on the Mutual program. The Joneses matter will be animated by Harry Palmer, cartoonist for the Gaumont company. Five hundred feet a week of this subject will be released on a split-reel carrying an equal footage of "Seeing America First."

"Pop," as he signs his cartoons in the Associated Newspapers, is Arthur R. Momand, a newspaper artist of high repute. Mr. Momand was born in California along in 1888 before it became the fashion to brag about the climate down at San Diego. Shortly thereafter he brought his parents to New York. A few years later he was about to matriculate at Princeton when an editor got in the way and gave him a job. This was Henry Grant Dart, then art editor of the New York World. Mr. Momand stayed with the World seven years, there gaining a name as the maker of various series, including "Mr. I. N. Dutch."

Next Mr. Momand appeared on the staff of Evening Telegram, where he created the series "Pazazza."

MOROSCO SIGNS DAL CLAWSON, CELEBRATED CAMERAMAN

After protracted negotiations, the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company has succeeded in securing the services of Dal Clawson, the celebrated cameraman. At a salary that will cause the ordinary cameraman to gasp, Clawson has been engaged by the big Occidental boulevard studio to take entire charge of all camera work in Morosco productions.

Dal Clawson's work in taking the now famous "Hypocrites," "Captain Courtesy" and other sensational features noted for particularly beautiful photography put the biggest producers in the country on his trail. He is recognized as one of the best "idea photographers" in the game, and his great success has been in thinking out new camera effects. In "Hypocrites" he set a record by running one part of the film through the camera twenty-four times, this being the famous "Mirror of Truth" scene, and his "visions" and "dissolves" have become standards by which this class of work is measured.

Dal Clawson was the cameraman whose anecdotes formed the principal part of the widely-read moving picture article in the August 14 issue of the Saturday Evening Post.

"CHRONICLES OF BLOOM CENTER" TO INAUGURATE NEW STYLE COMEDY

"The Chronicles of Bloom Center," the rural comedy series to be released in the near future by the Selig Polyscope Company, will each consist of a two-reel production. "Bloom Center," the rube town erected at the Selig Zoo, Los Angeles, Calif., especially for this series, remains one of the attractions of the wonderland. The entire village will be burned to the ground to carry out the action called for in the series.

One of the most entertaining of the "chronicles" will be the Bloom Center County Fair which has been reproduced true to life. There are the "first" and "second" premiums, the "vegetable hall," the rural "art hall," the ever-present side-shows, striking machines, etc.

And the real old-fashioned country circus has not been forgotten. There have been circuses presented in motion pictures before, but the old-time wagon show seemingly has been forgotten. The old-time circus wagon show will be presented after the fashion of the days of the "real sport."

The Selig Company has spared no expense in making "The Chronicles of Bloom Center" a true comedy series, devoid of slap-stick and vulgarity. It is certain to possess a universal appeal, for who amongst us has forgotten "the ole swimmin hole," the "church sociables," the volunteer fire department and all the rest of the prime essentials which made the days of our youth never-to-be-forgotten days.

PICTURE DAY AT SAN DIEGO

Saturday, September 11, has been designated as moving picture day at the San Diego Exposition, and a number of prominent western members of picturedom have promised to be in attendance. A king and queen will be chosen by popular vote, coupons for which will appear in all Los Angeles and San Diego papers.

The committee in charge of arrangements for the big day are: W. H. Clune, W. S. Smith, Jas. L. McGee, R. F. Taylor, Frank E. Woods, Kenneth O'Hara, M. G. Jonas, E. W. Hewston, Frederick Palmer, L. M. Head, H. O. Strechland, Benj. Ziedman, Kenneth McGaffey, Robt. M. Yost, Capt. Poland, W. A. Hill, Capt. Melville, R. G. Camby, Jack Sacker, C. W. Pope, and a number of well known scenario writers.

The Six Best Sellers on the Screen

By HARVEY GATES

A FREE lance scenario writer whose name is practically unknown to the theater-going public, recently applied for a position on the scenario staff of a well known film company. The editor had seen his work and liked it, so he was hired. On his first day as a staff man, the scenario editor called him into the office.

"Mr. Blank," he said, "have you ever read So-and-so's work called—" here he mentioned the name of a popular novel of a few years ago.

"Yes, I have," answered Mr. Blank.

"Well, take this copy and see if you can work up a four-reel feature from it."

Mr. Blank took the book, looked at it a moment and asked, "Have you read it?"

"Yes," returned the editor. "Why?"

"What do you think of it?"

"Well," was the noncommittal reply, "it's got a pretty good punch. Of course, there are too many lapses of time and the characters jump around a good deal. Personally, I think there are too many characters to begin with. And perhaps the main part of the action should be shifted to this country. It's almost impossible to get that foreign atmosphere."

"Then what's the idea of attempting to re-vamp it? Why not let me write an original feature?"

"Well, you see, the company has bought the rights to the book and wants to stage it. I think you can swing it around so it will make a story."

So Mr. Blank took the book and the next day he returned with a synopsis, not of the novel, but of a story which the novel had suggested to him, almost an entirely new theme, but one which would be released under the name of the novel's author.

Now for the rights to use the book, the film company had paid a real price. And what did it get? True, it had a title, but that was about all. For it had paid regular money for the book and it had then paid a staff man to do—what? Scenarioize it? Oh, no. It had paid him to make a story of it.

Do not think this an isolated case. Far from it. I have known—and so has every scenario writer in the game—of instances where books have proved so utterly impossible for screen production, that officials have authorized throwing away the entire story and building up another to be shown under the title of the original.

All of which brings up the question: Why?

It is a question which scenario writers have been asking for a long, long time and the only answer they get is: "The use of the author's name is worth something."

Let us grant that "it is worth something," but let's make it a little more definite. How much is it worth? How many of the "men in the street" know the average author of fiction? Ask some of your up-to-date business acquaintances what some well-known author has written. Or better still, name a book and ask him who wrote it. Ten to one, he can't answer you. And yet the author of that book will get a big bonus for the use of his name, a name which means nothing to nine out of every ten.

Being in the scenario game, the writer may be accused of being prejudiced. Let us see if he is.

While we are in the mood, let's look among our best authors and from their works choose the best short story and see what it would look like, robbed of its literary "style" and reduced to a mere matter of plot. Try it and the chances are that you will get, in the language of the street, "a piece of cheese." Don't misunderstand me. This is not an attempt to discredit the short story; I am speaking of it and its plot value from the standpoint of the screen.

Suppose we take the works of the man who is generally regarded as America's best short story writer, O. Henry. Now what is his best work? Opinions differ, of course, but popular fancy has chosen "The Third Ingredient." Fair enough. Now suppose we rob it of the style of telling which made O. Henry a genius without peer; a style which made him a teller of stories whose works will live indefinitely. Strip it of this; reduce it to mere plot, for that is what we must consider in the picture business, and what remains? Something which would read about like this:

A despondent girl, crossing the bay on a ferry-boat, decides to commit suicide. She jumps over the side of the boat but is rescued by a wealthy young man who is watching her. (They call such situations trite in the film game.) Turning her over to a taxi driver, the young man hurries home without having learned her address, which he of course, regrets. The following day, the girl finds that she has only two potatoes for lunch. As she is washing them at the community sink, another tenant of the same tenement approaches the sink with her dinner, a piece of beef. They decide to combine their provisions and make a stew. The girl enters the room and is lighting the fire while her friend continues to prepare the food at the sink. Along comes a young man eating an onion. The friend insists that they put it in the stew. The young man consents and as he enters the room where the girl is busy with the fire, he recognizes the suicide girl and they come to a clinch. It is presumed that they are married later.

We know that to be one of the best short stories ever written in the English language, but read over the meagre outline carefully and say whether or not it would make a picture. Let us suppose it would. Let us, for the sake of argument, go a step further and say that it has been made into an exceptionally interesting one-reel film. Granted that this is the case, whose is the credit? Who deserves the praise for the little touches that create the heart interest? Who, indeed, but the scenario writer?

From the mere plot, as outlined above, O. Henry, through his knowledge of the technique of the short story was able to construct what may be called his best tale. From the same meagre plot (for O. Henry's clever style could help him not at all) the scenario writer, through his knowledge of the technique, has been able to construct an unusual one-reeler. But just as the touches that make the printed story a marvel are O. Henry's, so are the touches that raise the film story from the mediocre, the scenario writer's. For the mere plot of a story is no more a film masterpiece than it is a short story masterpiece.

Popular opinion today seems to insist that the writer of fiction must of necessity be able to write for film production.

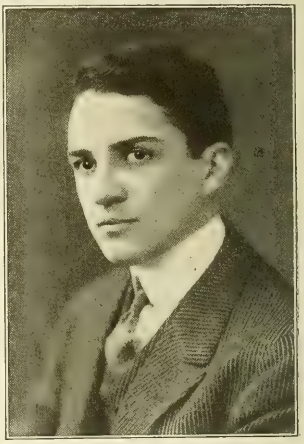
I insist that, all other things being equal, the trained scenario writer, the man who has made it a study, the man who has worked and perspired trying to master its technique, trying to understand just what effect result in a good screen story, and how to get those effects, can write a better scenario, or even the synopsis of one, than the best writer of fiction alive today who has not made a similar study.

Why should he not? Does it not stand to reason?

Here we have two men of the same age. Both, for the sake of argument, have approximately the same brain power. Both have seen about the same phases of life. One of these men, striving as most of us are doing, for a mode of expression, turns to the printed page. He does not learn to write short stories over night. He studies effects. He studies technique, the value of words and their combinations. He studies conversation. And in the course of time, let us presume that he learns to write a good short story.

Now for the other. He decides to turn his back to the printed page and tell his story on the celluloid. Are they the same? Does he have to study the same things as his friend? Not at all. He studies effects, that is true, but not the effects of words. He has no use for them. He studies action and pictures of action. He studies scenes and combinations of scenes. He studies action and he trains himself to see in his mind's eye the action which must become a logical part of a sequence of thought. He studies what can be done with the camera and what can not. He studies the technique of telling his story on celluloid, or of visualizing his story with the same energy that his friend expended in learning to tell his story with the aid of printer's ink. Let us presume also that in the course of time he succeeded.

Now we have two men who are able to tell stories. One uses printer's ink. The other uses celluloid and a screen. Nine out of every ten men will insist that the fiction writer should be able to write scenarios, but how many will even hint that the scenario writer should be able to write fiction? Do you know anyone who would? I don't.



It seems that the answer lies in the fact that few men outside a scenario department even dream that there is such a thing as technique in scenario writing and that, since the scenario writer uses no words, all he needs is the plot. No one would think of saying, however, that the artist, because he uses no words, needs no technique. That would be manifestly absurd. But absurd as it seems in the one case, it is accepted fact in the other.

Properly speaking, the scenarioist should not be called a writer. What he writes is not the story; it is a series of memoranda done with such close attention to detail that a producer can read it without the aid of an interpreter. He does not tell his story by means of words printed on paper any more than does the artist. He sees a picture in his mind's eye and plans the action which the players are to follow so that collectively they may tell the story on the celluloid. And since their methods of telling their stories are so different does it not seem absurd to suppose that the plot for the one is, of necessity, a good plot for the other? As a matter of fact, there is no more similarity between the writer of fiction and the scenarioist than there is between a newspaper reporter and a dramatist.

No, there are many modes of expression, many arts, if you prefer. There are music and the dance; there are painting and sculpture; there is verse, the drama, the short story, the novel and last of all there is the scenario. And it is quite as sensible to assume that any other two of them are interchangeable as to insist that the writer of fiction can fill the place of the scenario writer, without first having studied long to master the technique of this, the youngest of the arts.

BRYANT WASHBURN, CLEVER ESSANAY LEADING MAN

Bryant Washburn, Essanay actor, has reformed. He is no longer the bold bad man, the skulking weakling and general all around evil character he was of yore. Instead he has blossomed out into a hero, a regular St. George, whose chief delight is to find the deadly dragons that infest society and to put them to an untimely death.

Bryant Washburn.

For Mr. Washburn is no longer playing the villain parts in which he was famous. Mr. Washburn is one of the cleverest portrayers of character and one of the most deft in bringing out situations requiring subtle acting, and Essanay, recognizing his ability, has placed him in lead parts and characterization work in which he has proved eminently successful and has been gaining in popularity daily.

Though Mr. Washburn now is being cast almost entirely for leads, he never hesitates to submerge himself in character work compelling complete disguise of his own personality. In the photoplay, "The Little Deceiver," he plays the part of an old man with such skill in acting and with such perfect make-up that he could not be recognized.

This is one of the characteristics of the handsome new lead, that he is so devoted to the art in his work that he throws himself completely into the part he takes. In plays not requiring a special make-up, Mr. Washburn is one of the few actors who does not use grease paint or powder or even darken his eyebrows. Although only 25 years old he has had a wide experience both on the speaking stage and in photoplays.

Southern territory sold this past week on the K & R Film Company's feature, "Silver Threads Among the Gold," consists of Alabama, Georgia, Florida and Tennessee to Albert Benzing, and Virginia, North and South Carolina to Harry Newman. Manager Garson of the Broadway Features Company bought Michigan and opened in Detroit, August 29.

BEATRICE VAN, POPULAR ACTRESS, WITH MUTUAL

Beatrice Van, engaged by President Hutchinson, of the American Film Company, as the feminine lead of the newly organized "Beauty" company No. 2, now releasing twice a week on the Mutual's new $8,000,000 program, makes her initial bow to Mutual audiences in "When His Dough Was Cake," released Sept. 11.

Beatrice Van.

This talented young blond beauty of the screen possesses exceptional ability as a film star, and enjoys the distinction of having been selected by so shrewd a judge of screen players as President Hutchinson, from a list of a score or more of well known favorites placed before him. Miss Van is not only talented, vivacious, beautiful, but she possesses an unlimited assortment of humor, and the ability to adapt herself to any role regardless of how ludicrous it may seem.

In following releases screened by the second Beauty Company, Miss Van will continue to share honors with John Sheehan and Joseph Steppling, who appear in her support in "When His Dough Was Cake," one of the most laughable comedies ever screened. Step pling, will direct the staging of the second Beauty re- one of the most laughable comedies ever screened. Stepping, judging by his work in "When His Dough Was Cake," will make just as much of a success as he has as a screen player.

NO HUMBUG ABOUT IT

When Roy L. McCardell won a $10,000 prize in a moving picture play contest for a serial moving picture, the central theme of which was the romance and dramatic events that followed the finding of a great diamond in a meteor that fell in Virginia in colonial times, many skeptics scoffed at what they deemed a weird creation of Mr. McCardell's imagination. But diamonds and carborundum have been found in meteors; and peridots—a semi-precious stone —is often found in them. There are many legends in the Orient concerning great and priceless diamonds that have fallen to earth in meteors to enrich the collections of Asian potentates. At the Museum of Natural History, New York City, the Foyer collection of meteorites has for its most interesting specimen the famous "fallen star" known as the Canyon Diable, which fell at Canyon Diable, Arizona, and in which a large diamond was found embedded.

Other confirmations of strange phases of Mr. McCardell's romantic moving picture serial, "The Diamond from the Sky," such as the actual existence of an American citizen who is the holder of an English title, a sub-theme of the picture romance, crop up from time to time. Instead of "The Diamond from the Sky" being a wild, improbable creation of his imagination, it begins to look as though Mr. McCardell wrote his story in the good old newspaper way—"from the clippings."

DANGEROUS STUNT PULLED OFF BY A THANHOUSER STAR

Many and strange, and frequently foolhardy, are the stunts motion picture actors and actresses are called upon to perform by the heartless director. But it is doubtful if a player was ever commanded by his director to pull a more dangerous,—it does not appear so, but it was nevertheless—stunt than the one herewith depicted. It shows Thomas Curren, a member of the cast of "From the River's Depth," a single reel Thanhouser drama for release in the regular Mutual program, September 5, sliding, a la Ty Cobb going into second, down the rough side of a miniature mountain, later dropping into the water. Fully clothed, the stunt would have been hard enough, but to accomplish it while wearing little more than a smile, as Curren did, made it all the more hazardous.

CENSORS MAY PASS UPON FILMS WHILE PLAYS ARE IN MANUSCRIPT

Aided by suggestions of leading moving picture producers and exhibitors, Mrs. Earl Rogers, of the Los Angeles Moving Picture Censor Commission, took steps last week toward the drafting of a new city ordinance which will regulate the censoring of pictures and the conditions under which they are produced and exhibited.

Some time ago, Mrs. Rogers was commissioned by Mayor Sebastian to take steps to encourage the production of moving pictures in California, and at the same time remove some of the features which have been widely attacked. To bring this about, Mrs. Rogers and her lawyer husband, invited a number of leading moving picture producers to join in a discussion of the proposed ordinance. As a result, D. W. Griffith, Mack Sennett, Fred Mace, E. H. Allen, Lanier Bartlett, Wallace Clifton, Henry McRae, and Thomas H. Ince met Mr. and Mrs. Rogers.

It was explained that the present ordinance did not appear adequate and that in many respects it did not tend to encourage the moving picture industry.

The force of this was made even more potent when Mr. Griffith explained that under present arrangement pictures were censored after they had been produced, when they should be censored when in scenario form. In this connection Mr. Griffith told of the cost involved in the production of "The Clansman," and of conditions which for a time made him feel the film could not be exhibited in Los Angeles.

"It seems to me," said Mrs. Rogers yesterday, "that the pictures could be censored when in scenario form. It is not fair when a producer puts a large amount of money into a picture to find it is objectionable to the censors. This is one of the important features which I hope to work out. Mayor Sebastian has asked Mr. Rogers to prepare the first draft of the ordinance as soon as possible. Before this is done, however, I want to get the ideas of the moving picture producers.

"I do not believe the importance of the moving picture industry is realized here. It follows the citrus industry in importance. It should be intelligently encouraged and I am going to try to do this in a sensible, constructive manner. The first step, in my judgment, is to get a new ordinance.

"I am seriously interested in the work which the censor commission has to do. I feel it is more important in many ways than the city library. More people see pictures than read books. The influence of pictures, therefore, is greater now than the influence of books. I hope that any actress or actor who has any suggestion or idea about general improvement of conditions in the moving picture industry will write me. I will be happy to receive suggestions."

"SYSTEM THE SECRET OF SUCCESS," NEW A. C. F. PICTURE, IS READY

Future releases of the American Correspondent Film Co. Inc., naturally awaken much interest to the trade because of the enormous success of "The Battle of Przemysl," the first big feature released by this firm.

The German's "liquid fire" as seen in "System, the Secret of Success."

While it is a fact, that this company has correspondents officially attached to the Austro-Hungarian and German armies, these motion pictures which are being put out by the A. C. F. are entirely neutral in character as well as intensely interesting because they are real life pictures of the most dramatic incidents in history—depicting the fighting, the ways and the wonders of the great European armies.

"System the Secret of Success" is the title of the next great A. C. F. film to be released within the next week. It shows wonderful novelties never before shown in America. Felix Malitz promises in this picture not only scenes of extraordinary events, but a fund of instruction concerning the thing which amazed the world; namely, the culture, the thrift, the riches and the preparedness of the great German empire.

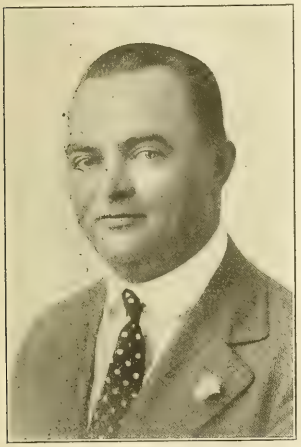
In the forthcoming picture may be seen the much discussed liquid fire gun; the Krupp works; "Bismark," the famous trained war elephant from Hagenback's circus; the Rathaus Colonnade at Luebeck, a famous speci-Hamburg and Dortmund; A. K. Dawson, the A. C. F. correspondent interviewing the United States Ambassador to Germany, James W. Gerard, at the United States men of architecture; the enormous public markets of Embassy in Berlin; the lively harbor of Luebeck; Karl Helffrich, treasurer of Germany, the man who handles billions; hospital train; agriculture activity which has converted Belgium into one great farmland, and other countless scenes of unusual description.

Closely following the release of the "System Secret of Success" the A. C. F. will put out its second big war feature entitled "Pushing Through Poland" which, according to a new shipment of films just received from Europe, promises a most graphic and thrilling reproduction of the famous Austro-Hungarian and German drive from Przemysl to Warsaw. One scene in it is the greatest thing yet produced as an argument for world peace, for it shows a forest strewn with dead as a result of a bloody fight.

A. C. F. pictures are now recognized as the most reliable, most authentic and most wonderful contributions to current history and are undisputably among the most interesting attractions ever put on a motion picture program.

MARY PICKFORD IN "ESMERALDA" "THE INCORRIGIBLE DUKANE"

The Famous Players Film Co.'s early September contributions to the Paramount Program consists of two of its most prominent stars in unusually strong and typical characterizations—Mary Pickford in a faithful photo-production of the great American stage success, "Esmeralda," by Frances Hodgson Burnett, released September 6, and John Barrymore, the king of screen comedy, in an elaborate picturization of George C. Shedd's melodramatic comedy, "The Incorrigible Dukane," released September 2.



It is a conservative prediction that "Esmeralda" will increase Miss Pickford's fame and popularity, if such a thing is remotely possible. Of all the great dramatic successes of Frances Hodgson Burnett (also the author of "The Dawn of a Tomorrow," in which Mary Pickford recently attained one of her greatest screen triumphs since "Tess of the Storm Country") "Esmeralda" is the most tender and lovable characterization she has ever created.

"The Incorrigible Dukane," a unique combination of drama, comedy, and romance, by George C. Shedd, provides John Barrymore, the popular stage and film favorite, with one of the most unusual characterizations he has yet impersonated on the screen.

The Picture Director of To-day

BY FRED MACE*

A SURPRISINGLY widespread misunderstanding of the actual duties and difficulties of a motion picture director seems to exist in the minds of many. Perhaps this is to some extent a result of the vast change in methods and technic during the past few years — a continual evolution that is always working toward bigger and better results so far as the finished picture is concerned, and greater simplicity, economy and expedition in the process of production. And by economy I do not mean parsimony—no expense is spared to make the picture of today—but means of efficiency and system are resorted to in order to save unnecessary waste.

Fred Mace.

The public appears in the dreams of the conscientious director as a film-hungry monster whose pampered appetite must be satisfied, not only with a greater abundance of filmed stories, but with newer ideas—novelties in comedy, drama and educational subjects—and no sooner has the praise and applause for a new and wonderful film died out and the leaves of laurel withered on the brow of the producer than "the public" is clamoring for a newer, greater effort—a greater quantity and a higher quality. A film that was a feature five years ago would be greeted with derisive sneers and empty seats today. The height of artistic effort on the part of the director of three or even two years ago—yes, even one year—is set back into the mediocre class today to make room for what seems for the moment a superlative grade of production, but which will soon be cast aside to make room for the superior work of the men of tomorrow. And so it shall always be. In this mad struggle to please the insatiable theatergoer many lose heart and fall back into oblivion, while their stronger and more capable brothers continue to fight the good fight. But let it be made plain that the men who keep in the vanguard of film-making progress barter their whole time and energy—the better portions of their very lives—for the wreath of fame and the store of wealth that come to them. The busy man is always happier than the idler, and, following this line of logic, the successful motion picture director is one of the happiest men alive, for he is one of the busiest.

Every director has his own methods of working; even though there be a marked similarity between some of them, there are little tricks and traits of habit and personality that are bound to creep in and from which the individual cannot escape. I recently heard an actor say: "Oh, you directors are a shrewd lot. You sit in your easy chairs in a shady spot, read a scene from your scenario and say, 'Now, try it, folks,' to the members of your company. They go through the scene and you watch them closely, and then leap out of your chair and shout 'Not a bit like it,' and proceed to show them how to do it, repeating their action with a few minor changes. Then you throw out your chests and say, 'Now, do it that way.'" That is the impression of one man who is working in pictures every day. Perhaps there are some would-be directors who follow some such procedure, but not the fellows that remain in the march of progress.

The director who succeeds must possess initiative—he must dominate the players who are working under his direction. He must be able to step into a scene and show each and every one of them what he wants done. He must feel the atmosphere of the scene in hand and make his players feel it. I have sometimes had a rural scene to make. As soon as the company is ready and I start to explain the action, I immediately fall into "rube" dialect and rustic gestures. In a short time I succeed in getting all of my company to do likewise. For the time being we are "hayseeds"—we are living in the atmosphere of the scene which we are photographing. The same method holds good when any other sort of scene is being made, be it French, German, city, farm, or anything else.

Occasionally I have found difficulty in getting a player to laugh naturally. Perhaps the part called for uproarious merriment and the best I could get from a tired or indifferent actor was a half-hearted laugh. In such cases I have stood behind the camera and "kidded"—gone through all manner of antics and impromptu comedy. It is a sure bet that I have the "wooden" actor laughing naturally and heartily in a few seconds.

At other times fright seems a difficult thing to

NEW $5,000,000 FILM COMPANY

Rumored That M. W. Taggart, Klaw & Erlanger and Patrick Casey Are Behind Gigantic New Film Corporation

From a reliable source it is learned, says a New York paper in its issue of Monday, August 30, that another gigantic motion picture combination, with a capitalization of $5,000,000, has been formed.

Marshall W. Taggart, president of the Gotham Program, Inc., is said to be president of the new organization, in which Klaw & Erlanger and Patrick Casey, stockholders of the Biograph Company, are interested.

Mr. Taggart would make no definite statement beyond the fact that the Gotham has over $1,000,000 worth of films on hand now ready for release. These, it is inferred, will be used as the opening shots in the new company's campaign. It is expected a definite announcement will be made shortly.

register. To produce this I have surreptitiously ordered an assistant to approach the recalcitrant actor from behind, taking care to remain outside the range of the camera, and drop a "glass-crash" (a box filled with broken bottles and panes of glass), or shoot a blank cartridge. The "fright" registers all right when these ruses are resorted to.

Sometimes the joke is on the director. I remember a scene which I was directing in which a smoke-pot was being used. This is a stick of prepared powder about the size of a good-sized giant firecracker which emits a thick volume of yellow smoke. I was holding one so that the smoke would drift across the scene. Becoming intensely interested in directing the action, I held onto the smoke-pot until it burned down to my hand and the severe burns that I received kept my arm in bandages for many days.

When I was taking the Willard-Johnson fight pictures in Havana an enhusiastic Cuban kept jumping up in front of one of my cameras (I had six in operation). At last, after having warned the wild fight fan repeatedly, I stepped up and handed him a stiff swing on the chin. He came right back at me and we were staging a good second attraction when the police took him away. I had to do it or spoil a lot of film and lose a good round of the fight.

The most remarkable coincidence that ever came to my notice took place in a scene in which I had instructed a young woman to do a fainting fall. I had rehearsed her several times, and she was very awkward and stiff. At last I gave up trying to improve her work and called "camera," going on with the scene. When it came time for the girl to faint and fall, she did it so naturally that I shouted "Good girl" and went toward where she lay on the floor to congratulate her. But she did not rise. Worn out with the rehearsals and the heat of the day, she had actually swooned just at the crucial moment. We quickly brought her back to consciousness and she had the satisfaction of having played the most natural scene of her career.

These are merely incidents, of course. The long nights of studying and analyzing the scenario in preparation for the work of the following day; the painstaking choice of costumes and furniture, and other details of local color that will suit the "period" in which the picture is set—a thousand and one things that wear on the mind and body of the director—are the real labors that bring the gray hair and the wrinkles before they are normally due. But the satisfaction of having accomplished something seems to pay for it. There are many directors of today who have saved enough upon which to retire and live very nicely throughout the remainder of their lives. But they don't. They keep right on working—not for more money, but for the joy of accomplishment, although they do not refuse to accept the salary or royalty check when it is presented. They need all the small change that comes their way to buy tickets to motion picture shows.

Mary Anderson, Vitagraph star, rests for a minute on the beach.

PARAMOUNT CONVENTION ON IN CHICAGO THIS WEEK

President W. W. Hodkinson of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, accompanied by the executive staff of his New York office and many eastern representatives, will leave Gotham on September 1 aboard the Twentieth Century Limited for Chicago, where a convention of Paramount representatives from all over the United States will be held at the La Salle Hotel. With Mr. Hodkinson it is expected will travel Adolph Zukor, Samuel Goldfish, A. Weinberg, B. P. Schulberg, Carl H. Pierce, William L. Sherry, Raymond Pawley, W. J. Seymour, H. E. Spaulding, Frank D. Sniffen, George Meeker, John C. Flinn and Tarleton Winchester. The party will also include Hiram Abrams of the Famous Players Company of New England, W. E. Smith of the Famous Players Exchange of Philadelphia, George Mann of the Famous Players Exchange of Washington and several others.

From Los Angeles, Seattle and San Francisco will come the Progressive Motion Picture Company's men; representatives of the Notable Feature Film Company of Salt Lake City and Denver, Colo.; The Famous Players Star Feature Film Company of Minneapolis; The Kansas City Feature Film Company of Kansas City, Mo., and the Casino Feature Film Company of Detroit, while from the South will assemble representatives of the Southern Paramount Pictures Company from Atlanta, New Orleans and Dallas. The convention, it is expected, will last two or three days and matters affecting the distribution and marketing of Paramount pictures will be discussed in detail.

MACK SENNETT FURTHER INCREASES KEYSTONE FORCES

Managing Director Mack Sennett of the Keystone Film Company, has increased the working forces of all departments since the Triangle Film Corporation affiliation was effected. The number of actors, writers, directors, mechanics, etc., is now greater than ever before. In order to build the elaborate sets that are being used in the Sennett two-reel feature comedies the master carpenter and the scenic artist have doubled their crews and throughout the Keystone studios the efficiency and scope of all departments has been brought up to the highest possible standard. The size of the studio was doubled earlier in the year and now more property has been purchased in order that the congestion that has resulted from the increase in the number of companies may be relieved. Mack Sennett remains in personal command of all departments and is the busiest man in Los Angeles.

Triangle's Opening Bill Improved

INCE RELEASE CHANGED

THOMAS H. INCE wired Messrs. Kessel and Bauman last Saturday that he had decided to present as his first Triangle release Dustin Farnum in "The Iron Strain," instead of Frank Keenan in "The Coward." While Mr. Ince feels that "The Coward" is a splendid picture, he thinks perhaps that it is too much of a man's play for his introduction to the great Triangle service. Powerful, emotional love stories are most in favor with all classes of theater-goers. Dustin Farnum's Alaskan offering affords just this kind of entertainment. With Enid Markey as the rebellious wife and Louise Glaum as the siren of the arctic cabaret, each in love with Dustin Farnum as the husky "Chuck" Hemingway, there are tremendous opportunities for the exploiting of primitive emotions. It must not be thought, however, that the caveman idea predominating the play is carried out in a brutal manner. "Chuck" Hemingway is a young Eastern collegian in disguise, the enforced wife is his social equal, and Kitty Molloy, the music hall favorite, is at least a sincere, passionate bit of humanity. It is said that Mr. Farnum has never appeared to better advantage than in this story of the Alaskan wilds, which was written for him by C. Gardner Sullivan and Thomas H. Ince and produced under the personal direction and supervision of the latter.

Griffith, Ince and Sennett

Three Big Triangle Directors

The other plays of the Triangle opening, namely Raymond Hitchcock in "My Valet" and Douglas Fairbanks in "The Lamb," will remain unchanged.

The three Triangle studios of Hollywood, Inceville and Keystone are now at the top of activity, with more distinguished players gathered there than are to be found in any other theatrical center of the world except possibly New York's Broadway and Forty-second street district.

On Tuesday, August 31, Billie Burke hit the trail from New York to Los Angeles that had been recently trodden by DeWolf Hopper ten days before and by Weber and Fields on Saturday. It is said that the temperamental little star refused to travel to California in company with any other thespians, but insisted on having her own private car, which Messrs. Kessel and Baumann obligingly gave her. That explains the delay in her departure from Saturday to Sunday. Miss Burke's tiny pink ears are not to be annoyed by the coarse Dutch accents of Messrs. Weber and Fields out on the coast, because all her filming will be done at Inceville, whilst "Joe" and "Lew" will at the same time go to work at Keystone, where Mack Sennett is preparing for them a third or fourth degree in camera play initiation.

Mary Boland, formerly John Drew's leading woman and last season star in "My Lady's Dress," has meantime arrived in Inceville, where Mr. Ince is preparing to present her in a five part crook drama. Bruce MacRae has also come on the scene there and his first appearance will be made as leading man with Bessie Barriscale.

At Griffithville the most recent accession is that of Paul Gilmore, the well known romantic actor. Mr. Griffith has selected for him an intensely dramatic scenario entitled "The Penitentes," and a great supporting cast, including Joseph Henabery and Josephine Crowell, who made big hits in "The Birth of a Nation;" also Seena Owen, Irene Hunt, F. A. Turner, A. D. Sears, Harry Ham and Edward Warren.

Great progress is being made on the dramatization of Sir Gilbert Parker's "Jordan is a Hard Road," in which Frank Campeau will appear with Dorothy Gish, Owen Moore, Sarah Truax and Ralph Lewis. Helen Ware is still another recent accession and will be filmed in an emotional work typical of her stage characters.

Almost hourly the staff of Mack Sennett's Keystone studio is increased. William Jerome and Vincent Bryan are the latest addition to the battery of scenario writers headed by Hampton Del Ruth. With immense industry Frederick Palmer puts forth a daily press sheet, rivalling the press agents respectively of the Quadruple Entente and of Germany in the fecundity and originality of his efforts. Probably Mr. Sennett, in the acting department, has gathered together a greater collection of notable comics than any other comedy producer in the world.

Louis Gottschalk, by the way, is composing the thematic music which henceforth is to accompany all the Keystone comedies under the Triangle egis. William Furst, the noted musical director, is still dividing his time between the three studios and seeing to it that all the music is completed, and practically rehearsed before the pictures are shipped east.

Anita King, who will be instantly remembered for her work opposite Victor Moore in the Lasky production of "Snobs," is off on a transcontinental automobile trip that will take her from Los Angeles to New York City. She drives without even a mechanic to accompany her and plans to stop at the principal Paramount theaters along the route, where she will appear and explain how Paramount films are made.

B. N. JUDELL, CHICAGO MUTUAL MANAGER STUDIES EXHIBITORS NEEDS

When John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, selected B. N. Judell to be the Chicago manager of the Mutual, he picked a representative of the big film distributing organization who had been trained under Mr. Freuler's watchful eye for twelve years. In the earlier days of exchanges in Milwaukee, Mr. Judell served an apprenticeship which enabled him to get an excellent rudimentary training in film merchandising. As he developed in the business, Mr. Freuler, who was then in charge of the Mutual offices west of the Alleghenies, sent Mr. Judell to Minneapolis to take charge of Minnesota, North and South Dakota. This was regarded as an extremely difficult territory because of the pioneer work involved. By dint of energetic work, backed up by real service to customers, the Mutual inside of a year became one of the dominant distributing organizations in that section of the country. Under Mr. Judell's management, the Minneapolis office claims to have supplied more than 50 per cent of all the theaters in the three states with film service. Mr. Freuler is a strong believer in civil service; and, knowing the needs of the Chicago office, decided to promote Mr. Judell to what is probably the most important exchange position in the country. In addition, Mr. Judell is a member of Mr. Freuler's efficiency staff; and, in working out a system of selling, has been of great help to the president of Mutual. Mr. Judell is determined to carry out Mr. Freuler's policy of "service first" to customers. He is personally studying the needs of all exhibitors who have Mutual service in order that their wishes, within reasonable grounds, may be gratified. The customers of Mutual will find in Mr. Judell real, responsive co-operation. He has made it a practice to study their needs, analyze local conditions carefully, and help them in every possible way to place their theaters on a good profit-making basis. He is a student of theatrical decorations both inside and out. He is never so happy as when an exhibitor asks him to make suggestions as to how to make the lobby of a theater more attractive.

Ben Judell.

The selection of Mr. Judell is a typical policy stroke of Mr. Freuler. Mr. Judell has been visited by scores of exhibitors since he took over the management of the Chicago office. In fact, when he came from Minneapolis to Chicago, the exhibitors in the Twin Cities wrote to their brothers in Chicago felicitating them on the selection of a man who takes particular delight in rendering personal service to exhibitors.

Mr. Judell when interviewed by a representative of MOTOGRAPHY in the office of the Mutual Film Corporation in the Mallers building, said:

"I have grown up with the film business. I have analyzed the needs of exhibitors, and I want the customers of the Chicago office to understand that I am in a position to render them real personal service. I want to know their needs above and beyond just the delivery of films.

"I want every customer of Mutual to make money. This office will be glad to make suggestions that will be helpful all along the line. It is my intention to spend the greater part of my time among the exhibitors themselves. This is the best way to get their viewpoint, which really reflects the attitude of the moving picture fans."

"GUARDING OLD GLORY," THE PATRIOTIC FILM, IS GOING BIG

W. H. Rudolph, western representative for F. O. Neilsen, the Chicago sales manager of the Eiko Film Company of New York, reports great success with the peace and preparedness picture "Guarding Old Glory." He declares that both he and Mr. Neilsen were surprised at the interest which was taken in the picture by exhibitors and state right buyers. On receipt of urgent wires from Mr. McNally, Mr. Neilsen hurried home to take care of the booking end of the business, while Mr. Rudolph remained in New York to conduct the selling and advertising campaign from there.

This picture has not only the endorsement of the various government chiefs, but has the solid backing of the patriotic leagues throughout the country. It is a timely picture that comes at the psychological moment when peace and preparedness are the topics of the day and in the opinion of many will do much to awaken the people to the fact that our country is unprepared for war. Mr. Rudolph has also been very successful with the "Little Sunset" pictures and the German war pictures which are controlled in this country by the Eiko Film Company of America.

An interesting bit from "Guarding Old Glory."

The Eastman Kodak Company is mailing to the trade journals and its thousands of customers in the film business, a booklet containing suggestions on fire protection, and having as its leading article a commentary upon automatic sprinkling systems, prepared by J. F. Ancona, who is engineer of design and construction of the Eastman Kodak Company.

In its preface the Eastman Company explains that it is believed the publication of the pamphlet may assist in no small way in the dissemination of information, particularly to the motion picture industry, relative to the remarkable benefit of sprinkler systems.

BALSHOFER TALKS OF QUALITY

Metro Program Will Offer Many Plays of Note to Be Made in New Studio Soon to Be Opened

The busiest man on Broadway right now is Fred J. Balshofer, head of the Quality-Metro forces, who flitted into New York from Los Angeles via Chicago a few days ago with Francis X. Bushman to witness the initial showing of Bushman's latest screen effort, "The Silent Voice." Since then Mr. Balshofer has been smashing records for getting things done, the results of which will be seen later in the Metro program.

Besides engaging Beverly Bayne, the former Essanay star, for a term of years, to be featured in stellar roles in future Quality pictures, and concluding the purchase of the motion picture rights on a number of important stage productions and well known novels for which he had been dickering before coming East, Mr. Balshofer has also been examining the merits of some half a dozen studios in New York and vicinity with a view to lease or purchase.

"We are planning to open a New York studio for several reasons," admitted Mr. Balshofer, in response to a question. "One is, that we intend shortly to increase our production, and the other that we find it impossible to obtain the requisite exteriors for many of the important pictures we are preparing to make. This does not mean that we shall cease operating our Los Angeles studio, which is one of the best equipped and most efficiently organized on the Coast, but only that we shall use it for Quality pictures requiring a California setting.

"It was 'Richard Carvel,' Winston Churchill's great novel on which we expect to begin production in late September," went on Mr. Balshofer, "which originally led Mr. Bushman and myself to determine on a studio in the East, as we found it would be quite out of the question to stage it on the Coast. So we are going to produce it in Maryland, which is peculiarly rich in the colonial settings that the requirements of this famous story call for.

"Besides 'Richard Carvel,' Quality Pictures Corporation has many other big features in process of production or now being put into scenario form. Since coming to New York I have concluded arrangements for the screen rights on two big plays and a popular novel, all three of which had a tremendous vogue in their original form. Also I am considering the signing up of two other dramatic actresses of similar stellar magnitude to Miss Bayne, with whom I may close before returning to the Coast.

"There will be big developments in Quality-Metro affairs in the very near future, as may be judged from the character of the productions already announced. Miss Bayne, who supported Mr. Bushman in so many of his earlier successes, is bound to be a big addition to Quality Pictures' stellar staff. Marguerite Snow will shortly be seen in another Quality-Metro release "A Corner in Cotton," production on which has just begun, in which she will have the leading feminine role.

"Among the plays which Quality has acquired title to for motion picture purposes within the last few days is 'Rosemary,' the Charles Frohman production in which John Drew is now starring on the road. It is a very pretty romance, which offers unusual possibilities for screen purposes. According to present plans it will be produced in New York, although just when I cannot yet say.

"These are only a few of the film feasts that Quality hopes to offer the public through the Metro program during the coming season. Many more are in prospect, but these I shall have to reserve for announcement a little later."

HART, INCE STAR, INJURED BY BLOW FROM PROPERTY VASE

William S. Hart, America's greatest exponent of western character delineation, met with what was nearly a serious mishap this week, while working as star in one of the current Ince-Triangular features. He was struck on the head with a heavy vase and suffered an ugly scalp wound, but is now able to be about and is continuing his splendid work in the photodrama.

The accident occurred during the filming of what will perhaps be pronounced as the fiercest and most vividly realistic hand-to-hand battle in the history of motion pictures. It was a fist fight between Hart and House Peters. The men were being directed personally by Producer Ince. For more than an hour they had enacted the fight, until both were not far from a state of exhaustion.

Finally, as a climax to the day's work, Ince announced that all but the last fight scene had been made. The scene remaining to be photographed prescribed that Peters rush at Hart and smash a huge vase over his head. With everything in readiness for the scene, Ince gave the word to go. Hart and Peters clinched. Then they broke and fought shoulder to shoulder all over the immense set. Hart at length drove Peters to the corner of the room, where rested the vase. It was made of resin, and Hart appreciated that he could stop the assault with his head without "faking," and not be injured.

But, inadvertently, the man who made the vase had used too great a quantity of resin. Instead of weighing ten pounds, as it should, it tipped the beam at more than twenty. So when Peters lifted the vessel high above his head and crashed it down with terrific force on Hart's skull, the noted actor didn't have to "act" to register a dazed condition. He was truly dazed. He staggered against the wall of the set and found great difficulty in keeping on his feet. When Ince learned—as he saw a thin stream of blood trickling down Hart's forehead—that his famous star had been injured he sank in a chair and it was some minutes before he could rise to his feet.

VICTOR MOORE FORSAKES "LEGIT" TO BECOME A LASKY STAR

Victor Moore, one of the leading comedians of the legitimate and vaudeville stage for the past ten years and who was the star of several seasons in George M. Cohan's comedy, "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway," has decided to forsake the legitimate and vaudeville for a period of years at an enormous salary to appear exclusively in Paramount Pictures produced by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company.

Victor Moore.

At the same time Mr. Moore's engagement is announced plans for a series of "Chimmie Fadden" photo-comedies are declared completed by the Lasky Company. Mr. Moore's first appearance on the screen was in the Paramount Picture, "Snobs," produced by Lasky, followed by a picturization of E. W. Townsend's "Chimmie Fadden." By his work in this latter production Mr. Moore stamped himself at once as a comedian of exceptional talents. His next Paramount release will be "Chimmie Fadden Out West," second of the series of "Chimmie" comedies produced under the personal direction of Cecil B. De Mille.

KNICKERBOCKER PRODUCER STARTS FIGHT HE CAN'T STOP

Director Stanner R. V. Taylor of the Knickerbocker Star Feature is to be congratulated on the success he has attained in injecting realism into the mob scenes of "The Purple Night." A terrific free-for-all fight is called for in this feature. All was ready, a mob of two hundred assembled, Taylor shouting his commands: "Make it real now! Pitch into it! Fight as if you meant it! Up with your fighting blood! Are you ready? One—two—three! Action! Shoot!"

The fight was on. The camera was busy. Taylor was all smiles. It was a triumph of realism. But when Taylor decided he had had enough of the scene and yelled, "Cut!" no one heard him but the cameraman. It was fully three minutes before the director could make his voice heard above the howling, fighting mob. Then once again peace was restored.

A doctor had to be called to treat a broken arm, several cut lips and other less serious abrasions. Between the director's hoarse voice and the bruises sustained by the mob, further rehearsal that day was impossible, so all went home to nurse the effects of "realism."

Judging from the brilliant showing made by Vitagraph entries at the Motion Picture Carnival at Brighton Beach, Saturday, August 21, there be splendid athletic talent lying around loose at that company's studio.

SPURIOUS CHAPLIN FILMS BEING SEIZED BY ESSANAY

United States District Judge Page Morris recently ordered the seizure of unauthorized and fraudulent Essanay-Chaplin films at Duluth, Minn., and issued an injunction against the use of films said to violate the Essanay copyright. Several films also were seized in Chicago.

Owing to the popularity of the Charles Chaplin films there have been several cases in which fake productions have been issued. In other cases films have been rented from the General Film Company, which distributes the Chaplin films for Essanay, and the film copied, and these copies sold or rented out as the original Chaplin productions.

The Essanay company charges that the copying of these films is in violation of its copyright and that it will prosecute every case brought to its notice. This action was decided upon, both to protect its own rights and to insure the public of seeing a genuine Chaplin film when advertised as an Essanay-Chaplin comedy.

EDWIN MIDDLETON NEW GAUMONT DIRECTOR

Edwin Middleton, known the country over as plain "Eddie," whose theatrical engagements range from Hamlet to a village rube, has been engaged by the Gaumont Company as comedy director of the All Star Company to produce one reel comedies for release in the regular Mutual program.

Edwin Middleton.

Mr. Middleton's career on the speaking stage spreads over a period of twenty-five years, a number of which were spent in Philadelphia, where he won great success in various productions at the Grand Avenue, Forepaws and the Chestnut Street Theaters. In 1906, Mr. Middleton heard the call of the screen and became affiliated with the Lubin Company, where he directed and played in comedies. Following a period as a successful producer, he returned to the stage for several years, after which he again joined the Lubin forces. His latest screen work was with the Biograph, the World and the John Rolfe companies.

Mr. Middleton is now busily at work at the Flushing studios of the Gaumont Company, on the first of these all-star comedies to be released in the near future in the regular Mutual program.

"One Day," which was written as a sequel to the sensational novel "Three Weeks," and which surpassed that famous story in many respects will be given an immediate screen production by the B. S. Moss Motion Picture Corporation.

The Return of the Duper

WE used to hear a lot about duping. Some old-timers have even gone so far as to say that everybody was doing it in the early days. Of late years it has grown so scarce that some of our readers may have to ask what a duper is. The crime is easily explained, and the indictment not difficult to draw.

A man buys one print of a good film from a recognized maker—or else only rents the print from an exchange. He buys a quantity of raw stock—the same that prints are made on. He runs the finished print and an equal length of stock through a printing machine—which he may have made from an old projector—and the developed result is a negative of the original print. From this negative he can print as many copies as he pleases, at a cost not much greater than the raw stock. He is then a DUPER.

It is very evident that a man with a small printing press could buy a copy of some popular novel—or get one from a library—make copies of it in his shop, and sell them as the real thing. They might, indeed, be just as good as the original. He could even make them better in appearance. But he would have no right to make them at all; his industry would be plain stealing. Copying the government's money in this way is called counterfeiting. Copying motion picture films belonging to somebody else is called duping.

Every good film produced means a lot more than the layman realizes. There are so many good ones nowadays that one is apt to forget that in every case someone has had to study out a plot, and someone else has had to rack his brain for action and settings and cast and all the other details that must be concentrated upon, one at a time, before the camera even makes its first turn. Not a reel leaves the shipping room but represents the labor and brains of a good many intelligent, hard-working people.

Now, a crackerjack feature is just as easily duped as a rotten one. The duper doesn't put any time or study into his proposition. He doesn't even need brains. All he needs in the world is one of those peculiar mental formations that lets a man grow fat on his neighbor's food.

Duping is again coming into popularity. Maverick prints of well known subjects are becoming common enough so that several dupers have been convicted in the last few weeks. They will become still more common as the easy-money brigade grows bolder, unless the prosecutions are pushed with vigor.

Of course, an exhibitor who takes any pride or satisfaction in his business will refuse to use a duped film. We would like to see him go further and help in the identification and prosecution of the dupers. For no duped film is very likely to find a showing unless some exhibitor, somewhere, knows all about it.

To allow duping as a practice to get back into the film game is like bringing frontier days back to a western city. The city wouldn't stand it for a minute, for it has grown away from the wilderness and become substantial, established and dignified. And the same thing is true of the motion picture business. It cannot afford to permit conditions today that it may have tacitly accommodated a few years ago.

One of the hardest dupers to trace is the fellow who buys his print abroad and copies it here. Practically all the good American subjects are sold in considerable quantity in England and on the Continent—even in these war times. The importing duper can secure one of these export prints and copy it at home with impunity. Against him, as against the common domestic form of duper, the industry's greatest protection is the honest and conscientious exhibitor, who has put all his money and all his intelligence into his business, and insists on regarding it as an honorable business. To him the duper is outside the pale.

ANOTHER STEP FORWARD

ONCE upon a time the newspapers of the United States looked down with scorn upon the motion picture. They refused to give it any serious consideration whatsoever as an amusement factor. Then, one day, it was suddenly discovered that the pictures were really worth while, that the silent drama was attracting thousands where the legitimate houses appealed to hundreds. Straightway the papers sat up and took notice. Within a few weeks motion picture departments were established in papers in various parts of the country and reviews of the leading films of the day were supplied the readers of those papers.

Within the last few days still another forward step has been taken by a New York newspaper and one that will ultimately have to be adopted by papers the country over. On Monday of last week the New York Evening Mail placed its motion picture department in charge of its regular dramatic editor and issued broadcast an announcement to the effect that, "The rapid growth of the feature film as an amusement and the serious efforts of film producers to improve the standards of their screen dramas have added a dignity and importance to the artistic side of the motion picture industry which, the Evening Mail believes, deserves both recognition and support."

Henceforth, according to this announcement, the Mail will regard the feature picture on a par with the best offerings of the legitimate stage, and Shakespeare and the celluloid drama will be ranged side by side. The effect of this policy is sure to be felt at the box offices of theaters in every portion of the land. The wider publicity given the earnest efforts of film manufacturers cannot but result in bringing to the picture houses people who have never entered them before, for it is admitted that there are uncounted thousands who still regard the motion picture as a cheap and tawdry form of amusement and beneath their consideration.

Tardy as has been the recognition by the press, MOTOGRAPHY feels that the industry as a whole will rise to the opportunity that offers itself for wider recognition and that manufacturers, directors, players and in fact all connected in any manner with the making of feature films will unite to give the best that is in them, to the end that the great industry which has grown to gigantic size unaided by newspaper support will now rise to new heights and appeal to the whole nation rather than to a restricted class.

Harry Raver, general manager of the Itala Film Company of America, has chosen "The Miracles of Maciste" as the title of the new six-reel feature in which "Maciste" figures. The title was submitted by Robert Grau.

Just a Moment Please

It's so seldom that we get a chance to kid Bill Wright, the w. k. press agent of the Selig Polyscope Company, that we just can't resist the desire to call his attention to a line in his this week's copy reading:—"The original quartet consists of Otis Harlan, Tim Murphy and William F. Mack."

Now we're wondering which one of the three Bill is counting as two.

Otis Harlan is big enough to pass for a couple, but we didn't suppose Bill would let Otis suspect it, lest he render a bill for two men's work when pay day rolls around.

NOTHING TO DO TILL TOMORROW.

From Greenwood Lake, N. Y., Pete Schmid postcards us that he hasn't touched a typewriter for a week and that he considers that "the life." Just for rubbing it in like that, Pete, we hope they make you work overtime for two full weeks after you get back to your desk. When your vacation is over you might take a special exam in your studies at the Caward Art Scollege and shoot in a decent frontispiece or authorize a cover of Myrtle Stedman. Eh, what?

Speaking of Art Scollege pupils and press agents, etc., reminds us that at last old Lloyd Robinson grew tired of the newspaper grind and fell for one of those soft P. A. jobs again. Some folks were born lucky. Perhaps, though, it was Lloyd's artful manner of spreading the Durham which got him the job.

Just wait till he tries to slip his first story past us and then we'll have our reeevenge for all the insults he has heaped upon us. Coises!

And, by golly, now he hasn't any way of coming back at us.

Guess we've got him where we want him now.

The P. A. of the "Diamond from the Sky" serial is now trying to alibi Roy McCardell for having the diamond fall from the heavens in chapter one. Gosh, there ain't no alibi needed, after one squint at those glittering jewels distributed in the watch-fobs given away when the picture made its debut. Ours is glistening yet.

Undoubtedly the prize P. A. story of the week is the one which an Eastern contemp. publishes this week about Betty Hamilton of the Fox Film Corporation rescuing two men from drowning. Ordinarily the P. A.'s are delighted to "get over" a story about their star saving one life, but not so the Fox publicity promoter. He made it two and got away with it.

Who'll make it three?

The regular bunch of fellers that Pal Haase is accustomed to write are cautioned to beware of his next letters, for P. H. is on a fishing trip and may let his enthusiasm get away with him when, upon returning, he endeavors to describe the "big one" that got away.

So keep your fingers crossed.

Brief Stories of the Week's Film Releases

American's "Infatuation"

Reviewed by John C. Garrett

THE American Mutual Master-Picture, a four-reel version of the story "Infatuation," written by Lloyd Osborne, to be released on September 2, features Marguerite Fischer, "the girl with the soulful eyes." She portrays the role of Phyllis Ladd, the beautiful young daughter of a wealthy man. Miss Fischer does some excellent emotional work and although the story is rather unconventional this star is capable of injecting her own personality into it to the extent that the unconventionalities are not noticeable.

Harry Pollard plays opposite Miss Fischer as Cyril Adair, a typical matinee idol. He is also responsible for the excellent direction of the production, which will be most successful.

Phyllis Ladd, whose mother died when she was real young, is the idol of her father. The girl craves affection and has an unlimited power for loving. Her aunt, Mrs. Fensham, a woman who lives in Washington, is ambitious for her niece's social aspirations. She takes the girl to Washington with her, but Phyllis soon tires of being sought after and returns home.

At home Phyllis is constantly on the lookout for the "golden young man." She meets many young men, but loves none of them. One afternoon she attends a matinee performance in which Cyril Adair, a matinee idol, is playing. When Adair first comes on the stage Phyllis is immediately attracted to him and her eyes are constantly riveted upon him. Phyllis attends another matinee performance and her interest in the hero of the stage grows into a wild infatuation. She writes Adair asking him to come to her home for tea. The leading woman in Adair's company is jealous of Phyllis and writes Mr. Ladd, telling him of the girl's clandestine meetings with the actor. Phyllis' father takes the girl to task and she knowing that her infatuation for the actor is so great that she can't give him up goes away with him. Adair, touched by the complete surrender of the girl, will not take advantage of her and so they are married.

In the life which they lead the girl's hopes and ambitions for her husband's future consume all of her other ideas. Her father has disowned her and thinking that if Adair is kept out of a position he will give up Phyllis, Mr. Ladd makes arrangements with theatrical managers to keep him out of a position.

Finally, when Ladd realizes that the young people are discouraged, he sends his lawyer to Adair with a check. The lawyer offers the money to the actor if he will relinquish all claims on Phyllis. Cyril is angered at this and throws the check at the lawyer's feet. Later John Ladd relents and he places the power of his dollars behind Adair.

Phyllis makes her debut in Washington society.

A new play is prepared and Adair is given the leading role. A brilliant future opens before the young actor as he and John Ladd clasp hands in a bond of friendship and father and daughter are joyfully re-united.

"Helene of the North"

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon

PRAISE seems empty and superlatives meaningless when applied to "Helene of the North," a recent Famous Players release. It is excellent to the point where the oft-used classification, "masterpiece," would seem to reduce it to the common run of tolerably good features. And this would be an injustice, for it has an individuality, a sparkle of film aristocracy, which makes it unlike ordinary multiple-reel subjects much as a diamond's pure deep luster distinguishes it from a group of imitation stones.

It is difficult to say exactly why "Helene of the North" is so different from other pictures of commendable quality, but that it is and that the distinction trends towards superiority is beyond doubt. Charm in a production is a phantom-like ingredient. When lacking, its absence becomes felt but is often not explainable. When present, it is noticed; yet, just where it lies and why is a mystery if one attempts to place the credit for it.

This picture's sterling quality is revealed in the general air of completeness which surrounds it, and in the impression of having seen a play which told its story well and without forced situations or sensationalism, which it leaves with the spectator. "Helene of the North" is as near perfect as any photoplay ever need be. Improvement would take away its free swing, and convert its unrestrained action and natural coincidences to an artistic mechanism.

Every exhibitor with access to the Paramount Program owes it to himself to obtain this picture. It should be even a bigger drawing card the second or third night shown than the first. Clever camera work and careful developing and tinting place the photography above criticism. The lighting effects are simple but pleasing. They consist mostly in the radiance of a log fire in a small log cabin. The locations and settings, for the most part located in the rough Canadian Northwest, provide an excellent setting for the story which is unique in many respects and consistent and interesting throughout.

For the Helene type of girl, Marguerite Clark has no peer. Rarely does she aspire to tearful scenes or yet, to boisterous comedy. Still, her portrayal partakes of both—a happy medium which possesses all of the virtues of deep drama and exalted fun without the disadvantage of being compelled to resort to either extreme. Besides Miss Clark in the title role are: Frank Losee, a splendid character man, as John Dearing, Helene's father; Conway Tearle as Ralph Connel (Lord Traverse); Elliott Dexter as Pierre; David

A scene from "Helene of the North."

Wall as Father Duvall; Brigham Royce as Wild Buffalo, and a number of others whose performances are fully satisfying.

The opening scene is in the drawing room of a residence in England. A telegram is received, notifying the guests gathered in honor of Lord Traverse, that he has been unavoidably delayed, but will lose no time in reaching his host. "The Jungle Lovers"

ANOTHER of the famous Selig Jungle Zoo pictures will be released on Thursday, September 16, entitled "Jungle Lovers." The story is from the pen of James Oliver Curwood, and is produced by Director Lloyd B. Carlton. It features Bessie Eyton in the role of a native girl, raised in the jungle, and Edward J. Piel as Jan, a young man also raised in Central Africa, and in love with Naida.

Exhibitors who have enjoyed animal pictures in which beasts of the jungle play prominent parts will find this three reeler an exceptional booking, for wild animals of every variety appear in it, and the players work with lions, tigers, elephants, monkeys and other trained beasts to be found in the famous Selig Zoo, while a pretty love story will hold the attention of any who may not care for the thrilling encounters with wild beasts that make the photoplay so unusual.

As the story runs, Peter Rand and his family, living in the jungle, are visited by Herman Blaas, and his little son, Jan. Naida Rand and John Blaas wander away from the cabin, and so are absent from home when Zulus attack it, kill the Rand Family and Jan's father, and burn the hut to the ground.

Later, little Jan and Naida are found by Van Cleeve, an eccentric old scientist, who has gone into the jungle for the purpose of perfecting an explosive with which he has been making experiments.

Fifteen years later Naida and Jan, now a beautiful girl and a sturdy youth in love with each other, encountered Sterling, an ivory trader, who has pitched his camp in the neighborhood of their home, and shortly afterwards, attracted by the beauty of Naida, he calls upon Van Cleeve, her guardian, and makes known his wish to marry the girl. When Van Cleeve refuses his consent, Starling vows that he will take her by force, and then return to his camp.

Meanwhile Wamba, an African chieftain, has led his tribe many miles from their native village in search of game. After a fruitless pursuit of some lions and elephants, they chance upon one of the abused native runners from Starling's camp, and learn that Starling has made slaves of the natives. Wamba is anxious to wreak vengeance upon him, and sets out with his tribe to deal out justice to the white man.

Starling, in the meantime, has found Naida alone, and attempts to kidnap her. Jan appears opportunely, and commands Naida to run for her life, while he remains behind to delay pursuit, being captured by Starling and his aids.

Naida upon running back to Van Cleeve's cave-like home, finds that a shot from Starling's rifle has touched off some of the explosive upon which her guardian was working, and Van Cleeve is unconscious upon the floor of the cave. The explosion has also ignited some natural gas that pours out from a crevice in the rocks, and when Naida is seen by Wamba, the native, to emerge from the flaming doorway of the cave she is thought to be a witch, and the natives fall at her feet in mute worship.

Naida seizes the opportunity of using the natives to rescue Jan and leads them in an attack upon Starling's camp, where they soon overpower Starling's associates and then hurl Starling, himself, over the edge of a precipice.

Jan, who had been tied to a tree at a little distance, is attacked by a leopard, but the natives succeed in driving the animal away with their long spears, and Jan is rescued. Shortly afterwards, when Van Cleeve is restored to consciousness, he expresses his thanks to the natives for their timely rescue of Jan. As the picture closes, Naida and Jan celebrate their wedding, with Van Cleeve and the natives as witnesses.

MANY years elapse between the close of the first chapter in the Pathe Balboa serial, "Neal of the Navy," and the beginning of the second, which is entitled "The Yellow Packet." The featured players, Lillian Lorraine as Annette Illington, the heiress to Lost Island, and William Courtleigh, Jr., as Neal Hardin, are seen in this chapter. Two new characters are introduced, Inez the girl accomplice of the South Americans, Hernandez and Ponto, and a physical giant who is known as the Brute-man.

That the latter is in some way related with another character in the story is suggested by the question mark which follows his name in the cast which is projected upon the screen. The hand-to-hand encounter between the South Americans, and Neal, and their capture, furnish the excitement which one naturally anticipates in serial pictures. A jump from a draw-bridge to the river, a considerable distance below, is responsible for no little thrill.

They send Inez, who has aided them in their smuggling traffic, to the home of Mrs. Hardin. By pretending to be injured she is invited into the house and cared for.

She sends word to Hernandez that she is now living in the same house with the girl. He, Ponto and a mentally deficient brute whom they care for only because his strength makes him valuable to them, decide to come North and live near the prize they covet—the maps giving the location of Lost Island.

In their attempt to smuggle some contraband from their Florida stronghold, the South Americans arouse the suspicion of the local police. They are shadowed by detectives who learn that a shipment of contraband is to be landed. The Federal authorities are notified, and the U. S. S. Seattle is sent to apprehend the smugglers. The South Americans elude the detachment from the ship. The sailors give chase.

Inez is compelled to steal the yellow packet.

The fugitives run past the Hardin house, and Neal captures them.

American's "In Trust"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward

IN its release of September 6, entitled "In Trust," the American Film Mfg. Company will offer exhibitors one of the class of thrilling melodramas which originally built up the reputation of this company as a producer of western plays, for "In Trust" is one of those rare specimens of a "blooey-blooey" western thriller that is pleasing and satisfactory rather than blood-and-thundery. It abounds in western scenery, dare-devil riding, some gun play and scores of cowboys, together with a beautiful and charming heroine, who gets into considerable trouble of various sorts, but who gets happily out again ere the picture ends.

Charles Bartlett has the lead in the role of Harry Dawson, an outlaw, and makes of him a manly type of man despite the fact that he is outside the pale of justice and fears to enter the nearest settlement lest he be arrested. The public will, no doubt, adjudge him a hero for his treatment of Jane Mills, the helpless girl, capably played by Vivian Rich, for Dawson shows a streak of real manhood when put to a certain test. Reaves Eason, the director, has chosen excellent backgrounds for his exterior and skillfully managed his players in the story given him to produce.

her father and, returning, encounters a band of horse thieves led by Joe Bland. The rustlers engage in a battle with Jane's father and he manages to escape, leaving his daughter in their clutches.

They carry her to a lonely mountain cabin and leave her in charge of one of their women, planning to draw cards for her and divide the money they have realized from the sale of some stolen horses. At this point Harry Dawson, an outlaw, wanted by the sheriff of every adjoining county, appears and demands a right to draw cards for the girl along with the other rustlers. He draws the winning card, which entitles him to the girl, but when he endeavors to leave the cabin with her the others violently object and after a pitched battle, which ends only when Dawson has knocked out and disabled the other men, Dawson rides away with Jane helpless before him on the horse.

But already a sudden change has swept over him, his brutal instinct being submerged and traits of his former manhood assert themselves. As they go into camp for the night, he assures the girl she is safe from him and retires to sleep in a rocky glen, leaving the girl to obtain such rest as she may in his blankets. Distrusting him at first, the girl follows him and prepares to shoot him as he lies asleep, but some impulse stays her hand and she departs to finally fall asleep worn out by the day's excitement.

Next morning Dawson and the girl unexpectedly come upon the sheriff's posse, who are seeking the cattle rustlers and it is only by skillful riding that they escape. Days later the lack of food and water compels them to approach a settlement, and when Dawson prepares to say farewell to the girl she insists that he remain in that spot until she can visit the settlement and return with food and water for him.

he has been discovered by the sheriff and his posse, who are preparing to arrest him just as Jane rides up.

After hearing her story the sheriff is taken off guard for a moment and the girl covers him with his own revolver, while Dawson, thus given a chance by Jane, once more escapes. Jane regretfully watches him depart and believes that despite his previous transgressions he is after all a manly man.

"MIND OVER MOTOR," is the two-reel production to be released by the Essanay Film Mfg. Company on September 11. This is the second of the "Tish" pictures which are scenarioized from the stories by the well known authoress, Mary Roberts Rinehart. The story is well adaptable for screen use and the picture is full of good clean comedy situations.

Letitia Carberry, a new woman, better known as "Tish," is portrayed in a laudable manner by Camille D'Arcy. She is supported by Louise Crolius and Marion Skinner as Lizzie and Aggie, her two best friends. June Keith plays the part of Bettina, a vivacious girl in love with Jasper played by Edmund Cobb and Eugene Acker is "Tish's" nephew, Charlie Sands.

"Tish" entertains the auto promoter.

"Tish" Carberry receives a letter from a friend asking her to come and chaperone her daughter, Bettina, who is a vivacious girl and who has a neighbor, Jasper, a romantic youth. With Lizzie and Aggie, "Tish" starts out. Her automobile holds but one person besides the driver and Aggie and Lizzie take turns in sitting on the running board, and after a most exciting auto ride, in the course of which they kill some few chickens and exceed the speed limit, the party are arrested.

"Tish" carefully crawls out of paying a fine and has barely started on her way when she has a blowout. She manfully begins to change tires when a Mr. Ellis, a crooked auto race promoter, happens along and after putting on a new tire for her, he accompanies "Tish" to Bettina's home, to which Aggie and Lizzie have gone on some time before.

The friendship between "Tish" and Mr. Ellis grows rapidly and they are together most of the time. Aggie and Lizzie sneer at their friend, no doubt the "green-eyed monster" has entered their sanctuary. Bettina and Jasper are happiest when Mr. Ellis is around, as it usually leaves them together. However, one day Tish and Mr. Ellis start out on a jaunt and Bettina is dragged along with Jasper closely following with Aggie and Lizzie. Bettina manages to elude her captors and meets Jasper and the two women. Aggie and Lizzie leave the young people alone and go to spy upon "Tish."

The two women overhear her making arrangements to back one of Ellis' auto races. They immediately rush back to Bettina and Jasper and then telegraph to "Tish's" nephew, Charlie Sands, telling him to come immediately and prevent his aunt from losing all of her money.

They are off! The grandstand is excitedly charging the men who is in the lead and Ellis, who had it fixed to win the race, all of a sudden is forced to drop out. Jasper forges ahead, but the car slows up and he exhaustedly drops down into the seat. "Tish" hurdles the grandstand and leaps into Jasper's place and as her last opponent is disabled she is the winner. JOSE COLLINS, who achieved success and popularity on the comic opera stage, uses to good advantage the somewhat limited opportunities for dramatic action which her part as the "Tearer" in the five-part Wm. Brady Production, "The Impostors," released by World Film Corporation, affords her. This is Miss Collins' film debut, and she does well all that she is called upon to do, which is not much. Her part is important but it is not large. The plot is built around twin brothers. The one perpetrates many wrongs and after his death the other brother decides to impersonate him and make amends for his misdeeds.

The story is adapted from the play of the same name by Douglas Murray. Albert Capellani produced the picture. The work of both the producer and the cast is above adverse criticism, and the plot which is not novel but has some pleasing situations is much stronger for the efforts of director and the players. Alec Francis is seen in the dual role as Sir Anthony and Blink, his twin. His performance is excellent in both parts, and stands out as one of the picture's strong points. The double exposure scenes are well handled. In one scene where the twins face each other and carry on a heated argument the actions of each are perfectly timed.

Sir Anthony tries vainly to purchase his brother's share of the family estate. The brother, a soldier of fortune who has always been called Blink, decides to live in America, as he is a lover of democracy. Sir Anthony refuses the demands, which are reasonable, of his employes, to improve the working conditions at the mine. He suffers a break-down and his physician orders him to take a sea voyage. Sir Anthony sails to America on his own yacht. He unintentionally anchors off the coast where Blink is living.

Blink sends an invitation to his brother to visit him at the hut. Sir Anthony accepts the invitation. The "Tearer," a forlorn, social outcast, whom Blink has befriended, is in the cabin when Sir Anthony enters. His resemblance to her benefactor frightens the girl. In an argument with Blink Sir Anthony suddenly drops dead. The brother decides to impersonate him and return to England. As Sir Anthony he intends to improve conditions at the mines. The "Tearer" secures a nurse's costume and with Blink, dressed in Sir Anthony's clothes, sails for England.

In England he finds that his brother has left his son, Aubrey, without financial aid, because he had crossed his father in a minor matter. This injustice Blink rights. The tenants of Sir Anthony are surprised to have their houses put in good repair and their rents lowered. Conditions at the mine reach a climax. The workers make final demands to their employer. They are surprised to have them granted willingly. Aubrey learns that his "father," whom he has learned to love is an impostor. STARRING Hobart Bosworth and produced by Otis Turner, "A Little Brother of the Rich," the Broadway Universal feature release for September 6, is a convincing and wholly interesting drama. The story is an adaptation from the novel and play of the same name by Joseph Medill Patterson, and concerns itself with the "idle rich" and theatrical life. It is replete with dramatic situations, is thoroughly human in its appeal to the heart and is logically developed. The scenario was prepared by Hobart Bosworth. While the action in the first two reels has little bearing on the story itself, it is spirited and interest compelling.

The production has been splendidly handled. An automobile colliding with a railroad train is exceptionally well executed, and is a real thrilling piece of work. The action is appropriately set. The scenes in the homes of the rich and those taking place in the theater have atmosphere and are colorful. Only one scene is disappointing as regards its setting and that is the college dance, which is supposed to be the biggest social event of the year in one of the most important colleges.

Mr. Bosworth plays excellently his rather difficult part—

Leamington craves a drink.

Leamington, the actor, whose love for Sylvia inspires him to overcome his weakness for drink. Jane Novak as Sylvia and Hobart Henley as Paul Potter are well suited to their parts and interpret them effectively. Maude George as Muriel, Albert MacQuarrie as her husband; W. Clark, Jr., as Ellis and Carl Von Schiller as Carl Wilmerding make up the capable supporting cast.

Muriel Evers, a society leader and a confirmed flirt, encourages Paul Potter and he becomes infatuated with her. His fiancee, Sylvia Castle, takes exception to his neglect of her at the dance and breaks the engagement. After graduating from college, Potter secures a position in New York. Muriel's husband divorces her because of her affair with Potter. The latter climbs high in the social scale when he marries Muriel.

Sylvia's father dies, leaving her without resources. She obtains a place in a small stock company. There she meets Henry Leamington, whose weakness is drink. He falls in love with the girl, and for her sake determines to quit drinking. While she appreciates Leamington's kindness she does not love him and refuses his proposal of marriage. Some time later, Sylvia and Leamington secure a Broadway engagement. Potter learns she is in town and visits her. Muriel has since died, having been killed in a motor accident.

On the night of the opening performance he calls at the theater and is admitted to Sylvia's room. Leamington, insanely jealous, sends his valet for some whiskey. Potter, feeling that his marriage to an actress would hurt him socially, proposes that they disregard the marriage laws. Sylvia vehemently repulses him and orders him to leave. She is told that Leamington is drinking and hurries to his room. When he learns that Sylvia has sent Potter away, he braces himself. Their first performance establishes Sylvia as a star. Realizing the sincerity of his love, Sylvia consents to marry Leamington.

"The Majesty of the Law"

GEORGE FAWCETT is cast in a congenial part, in the five part Bosworth, Inc., feature produced for the Paramount Program, entitled "The Majesty of the Law." This is Mr. Fawcett's first screen appearance. The author, Julia Crawford Ivers, must have had him in mind when writing the story, for it furnishes him opportunities to display his widely recognized ability to portray an emotion which calls for an appearance of austerity and at the same time give a suggestion of the pain he suffers inwardly.

A cigar-box carelessly wrapped in newspaper, which is treated with utter indifference by its many custodians because of its insignificant aspect, is worthy of mention, since it is responsible for much suspense. The reason for this is that the box contains a large sum of money which if delivered in time would save the wrongly accused bank clerk from arrest as an embezzler. Just why the man who stole the money should choose this method of sending an article of such vital importance seems strange, but the dramatic value of the episode is considerable.

The story is laid in a Virginia county seat and combines romance with strong drama. The production and acting are of a superior quality, and the photography is of the usual high standard of excellence found in Bosworth pictures. The reception given by one of the leading families of the town is beautifully staged, the scenes have depth and the furnishings are sumptuous and artistic. The court room is another scene noteworthy for its splendid setting.

An exceptionally fine cast supports George Fawcett as Judge Randolph Kent. Myrtle Stedman plays Virginia Calhoun with charm. William Desmond makes good use of the opportunities afforded him by his part as Jackson Kent, and Charles Ruggles is pleasantly breezy as Lawrence Evans. Mrs. Kent is played by Jane Wolfe.

Jackson Kent makes no effort to explain how a costly necklace, which was stolen at the Monroe reception, came to be in his coat pocket. His father, Judge Randolph Kent, renounces him, telling Jackson that he wishes never to see him again. The son suffers the accusation of theft to spare his fiancee the humiliation of having it known that her brother is the guilty one.

For his son, in whom he has taken immeasurable pride and has loved dearly, to so degrade himself as to commit a theft is a severe blow to the judge. Jackson secures a position in a bank at Evansville through the kindness of the bank president's son, Lawrence Evans. Some months later Lloyd Calhoun confesses to his sister that he stole the necklace and had placed it in Kent's pocket. This she confides to the Judge, who promptly retains a detective to locate his son.

Evans loses heavily at cards. His creditor threatens to expose him to his father unless he pays immediately. In desperation he steals the money from the bank. Jackson shoulders the blame and is held for trial. Through an odd coincidence Judge Kent is to try the case. Though his heart is almost breaking the judge is to outward appearances stern, and in duty is forced to sentence his own son to ten years in jail. Evans arrives at the court just as Jackson is to be led to prison and his confession exonerates the son.

Esther, accompanied by Quabba, the hunchback, is refused admittance to the house when she first calls but is so persistent in her determination to see Powell that she finally obtains entrance to the hallway and there finds an opportunity, when no one is watching, to slip upstairs and gain entrance to Powell's bedroom.

During a moment's consciousness he sees and recognizes Esther, but he is immediately rendered unconscious again by Vivian Marston, who is disguised as his nurse, and Esther is ordered out of the house, though she goes reluctantly and suspects that all is far from being well with Powell.

When the latter again awakes and calls for Esther he is told that he is suffering from brain fever and has only imagined he saw her in the room.

Vitagraph's "Mortmain"

GRIPPING action and unique developments characterize the five-part Vitagraph V. L. S. E. release for September entitled "Mortmain," which features Robert Edeson in the title role. The story is by Arthur Train and was adapted to the screen by Marguerite Bertsch. The theme is highly imaginative and unusual. It deals with a character who is haunted by a fear which really has its conception in his own mind.

After following the central figure through a series of startling incidents which lead up to a thrilling climax the interest is at a high pitch. Then the greatest surprise of all comes, for these exciting adventures, it transpires, take place in a dream. This supplies the desired happy ending. Whether the story would be stronger if it were to end tragically, which is expected up to the last scene, is a question which probably will be much discussed.

Theodore Marston has skillfully treated the subject, and to him must be given unlimited praise for his availing efforts. Especially effective is the visualization of the incoherent thoughts and gradual sinking into unconsciousness of the man who is being anaesthetized. The faces of the characters closely related to Mortmain's life, move swiftly and unsteadily upon the screen.

A scene from Vitagraph's "Mortmain."

Robert Edeson gives an excellent interpretation of Mortmain. His portrayal of the suspense and terror in which the character lives, is remarkably fine. Pleasing indeed is Donald Hall's performance as Russell, he has a commanding presence and his acting is finished. Edward Elkas makes Flaggs an appropriately weird figure. Herbert Frank as Dr. Crisp, Muriel Ostriche as Bella, and James Morrison as Forsythe enact the other important parts in an entirely satisfactory manner.

Dr. Flint demonstrates to Mortmain, a musician and gentleman of leisure, that he can successfully graft the lower limb of one animal onto the dismembered limb of another. This greatly impresses Mortmain. He is in debt to Gordon Russell, his rival for the hand of Bella Forsythe. Russell presses him for the overdue notes, and Mortmain in a moment of temper declares he would like to kill his creditor.

Russell is mysteriously murdered. As Flagg, a clerk in the law office, overheard Mortmain's threat, the latter fears him. Bella's brother is accused of the murder. When Mortmain is told this by the girl, he falls in a swoon and severely injures his hand. To dress the wound Dr. Flint finds it necessary to administer an anaesthetic.

done the novel full justice. "The Galloper" is every bit as entertaining in this picture as it is in book form. Some may speak of this comedy as "horse-play," but regardless of its classification it is delightful.

Clifton Crawford, whose fame is international, is featured as Cope Schuyler. He has an ease and naturalness which is more than pleasant, and his numerous bits of comedy business materially add to the mirthful possibilities of the story. Crawford is at his best in the scene where he and the Galloper are to be shot by the Greek soldiers, and he makes this the most memorable portion of the picture.

The production was directed by Donald Mackenzie, and there certainly can be no fault found with his work. While the director had fine material in story and cast to begin with, he has used both to good advantage. Melville Stewart is Kirke Warren, alias "The Galloper," famous war correspondent and object of the affection of a woman whose sole attraction is her money. Jessie Ralph takes splendid care of this part. Rhye Alexander is seen as Grace Whitney, the girl who Cope follows to the battle front. Sam Ryan as the Colonel of the Legion and David Burton as the unknown complete the cast.

But on finding that his divorced wife, who is pressing him for alimony, and Sybil, a wealthy widow who has designs upon him, are both in Athens, he gives up his job. This is Cope's opportunity, and he impersonates the Galloper. The latter's eventful past is brought up against Cope.

He pays alimony, is challenged to a duel, and put in a light which makes him less favorable in the estimation of the nurse, before he even leaves for the front, where more trouble awaits him. But he finally wins Grace Whitney's hand, so to him the reward is more than sufficient.

"THE Irish in America" is the three-reel production to be released by Lubin on September 8. Most of the scenes which are artistically projected, were taken in the rugged mountain country in Ireland. The every day existence of the Irish country folks, their homes and their religion are very carefully depicted in this picture.

Sid Olcott, the well known Lubin actor, takes the part of Dan Murphy, a typical son of old Ireland, who is in love with Peggy O'Sullivan, which part is portrayed by Valentine Grant. These two popular stars do excellent work and are well supported by a strong cast. The story is one which is unusually convincing and has many satisfying qualities.

Dan arrives in America and after conquering his bewilderment of the noise and bustle of New York City he goes to present a letter to a promising son of Kerry, his home town. This man gives Dan the position of night watchman in his bank. One night robbers enter the bank and are escaping with a large sum when they are overpowered by Dan. The next morning his employer calls him in and gives him a reward of $1,000.

With this small fortune Dan starts out for a mining camp in the West. Arriving here he makes himself popular with the inhabitants of the mining town by knocking out the town bully, who starts to fight with him. Dan and two friends, after some time, strike it rich and he writes for Peggy to come to America and encloses the necessary money for the trip in the letter. The mail sack in which Dan's letter is lying falls out of the mail wagon and is picked up by an Indian, who opens all the mail, tears up the letters and extracts the money which he finds in them.

Back in old Ireland Peggy's aunt dies and after selling the few things she possesses the girl begins to journey to America to find Dan. Just before the boat lands in New York, the stewardess, knowing that the girl cannot land unless someone meets her, hides her in a laundry bag.

is natural as the Boy, and in his scene at the cafe when he succumbs to Beauty, through the influence of Passion, his work is very effective. Henry Bergman, Effingham Pinto and Del Delois, are fine types for the figures they represent —Avarice, Lust and Rum, respectively. Theodore Babcock, Walter Hitchcock and Howard Truesdell act their parts convincingly.

A wealthy parishioner desires to purchase a painting of the madonna to present to the new chapel. An art connoisseur takes him to inspect a painting which Standish has just completed. The artist's wife was his model and he has reproduced her face, almost exactly. The connoisseur recognizes the woman as a former paramour, and jestingly speaks of her as his former mistress.

The parishioner purchases the picture. After their departure, Standish refuses to believe his wife when she tells him that she was betrayed by the man, and orders her out on the street. Unable to obtain employment the wife is forced to give up her baby. She leaves the child on the doorstep of a monastery. She then answers the call of the "easiest way," and becomes the reigning queen at a gay cafe.

Seventeen years later the boy is a novice in the monastery. He desires to join the order, but wishes first to see the world. Father Anthony, his superior, agrees with his view and gives him clothes and money. The boy wanders into a cafe called "the house of lost souls," which is conducted by his mother. There he encounters Lust, Rum, Avarice and Passion. They tempt him in vain. The other patrons dance about him calling him the "prince of fools."

The mother enters and puts a stop to this. From a rosary he carries she learns that he is her son. Without disclosing her identity she advises him to return to the monastery. Years later the boy is the pastor of the chapel in which his father's painting is hung. During a terrible storm an old, illy clad, woman enters the church—the mother. Though she longs to call the priest who comforts her her son she remains silent and dies in his arms.

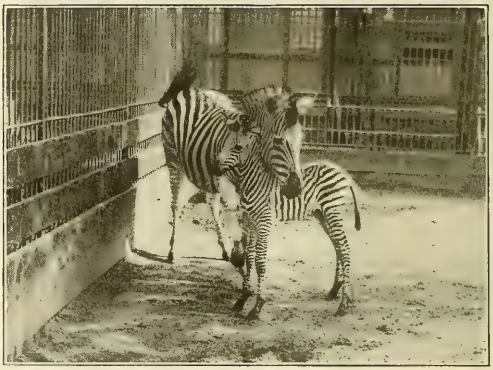
ODD ADVERTISING STUNTS GET BUSINESS FOR V. L. S. E. SHOWS

The Liberty theater, of Seattle, Wash., has put across another one of its unique advertising stunts in connection with the showing of Frank Daniels in the Big Four feature, "Crooky."

The advertising stunts of the Liberty theater have attracted the attention of all of the exhibitors in the Northwestern territory. It is a big user of newspaper space, as well as billboards, and all of its advertising is distinctively original.

Prior to the showing of "Crooky," dodgers were printed in the style of "reward" notices. These dodgers apparently offered "$2,000 Reward for the Apprehension of Convict 999," the part played by Mr. Daniels in the feature. Twenty-five thousand of these dodgers were posted all around Seattle, and they were supplemented by "streamer" ads on different pages of the newspaper that led the reader to the regular advertisement of the theater. The feature played for a full week to capacity business at every performance.

The Novelty theater, in Brooklyn, N. Y., following the advice of the V. L. S. E., has become an extensive user of outdoor display advertising. Supplementing its billboard advertising, the management recently adopted the policy of placing window cards of the Big Four productions on the front and rear dash boards of Brooklyn trolley cars. This is the first time, we believe, that this style of advertising has been used in Greater New York in connection with motion picture exhibitions by regular picture theaters. Although this method of advertising requires a large outlay of money, it has already proved a good investment.



BUSHMAN HEADS BIG CONTEST

Francis X. Bushman, the popular Metro leading man, is leading the contest being held for king of the Exposition by several hundred votes. The contest closes on September 11.

Los Angeles

The Essanay Studios in Los Angeles and at Niles are kept continually active these days. With Charlie Chaplin planning and producing comedies of his own origination in Los Angeles and Broncho Billy Anderson reeling off new western stunts at Niles each week, it is not to be wondered at that there is a demand for Essanay pictures. Charlie Chaplin comedies were being shown at ten Los Angeles houses in one day this week, and his popularity continues to remain firm.

Raymond Hitchcock, who has been appearing in Keystone comedies in this city for several weeks, is sadly missed on the rialtos and pleasure resorts because of his continuous willingness to entertain people. He was never known to refuse to lend his aid and time to foster and encourage charitable and publicity causes and was always popular with his associates. His appearance now in Lubin pictures draws large houses at any theater where they are shown.

"The Diamond from the Sky" series continue to draw large crowds at western play houses and the fans are ever watchful for the new series. This is one of the greatest features ever produced by the American organization and the Santa Barbara players travel all over California seeking the out of the ordinary and unusual scenes for forceful picturizations.

The arrival of Edna Goodrich at the Lasky studios is daily expected, and her advent into the motion picture field will be watched with interest. This is simply another of the Lasky innovations. The heads of this big organization are continually introducing new celebrities into their photoplays. Simultaneously with the announcement of Edna Goodrich's coming Nat C. Goodwin booked passage for New York on a fast limited train, after appearing in a Universal film.

The famous Billie Burke is expected at the Inceville studios of the new Triangle Film organization next week, and it is announced that this great star is to be directed by Charles Giblyn, who has recently severed his connection with the Universal to join the combination company, headed by Aitken, Kissell, Baumann, Griffith, Ince and Sennett.

H. M. Horkheimer, president of the Balboa Feature Flms, expects to leave for New York and eastern cities next week to add other links to the releasing system of the Balboa and secure new stars and players for his well organized company.

Andrew Arbuckle is another of the famous Arbuckle family who is making good with the Balboa organization. He is now starring opposite Ruth Roland in comedy productions.

The announcement made in a recent issue of MOTOGRAPHY that James J. Jeffries, the ex-champion heavyweight fighter of the world, was to appear in a picture in support of Francis X. Bushman, heading the Quality players, is very interesting to the many friends of the once noted fighter all over the world. It is novelty and fame the public demand and Jeffries should make a splendid support for the famous Bushman.

The National Film Corporation, headed by William Parsons as president and leading comedian, and Bruce Mitchell, managing director, has temporarily closed its operations after making several good pictures. Members of the various companies were notified to report back for duty about September first, but many of the players and employes have already found other positions.

The Albuquerque Film Manufacturing Company, Features Ideal, American-European Films, Crown City Company, and two others as yet unmentioned, it is stated officially, have formed a combination and will soon begin producing under one big operating and releasing head. All pictures, it is stated, must be made in California. An officer of the company stated that arrangements had practically been completed for the release of two pictures each week and that orders had been closed for these pictures for a period of six months with a cash bonus on deposit to bind the deal.

G. M. Anderson, "Broncho Billy," was a pleasant visitor to Los Angeles this week and was the recipient of much attention while the guest of a leading hotel frequented by members of the motion picture profession.

Eddie Foy, the noted comedian, has purchased a home at Hollywood, a suburb of Los Angeles, where he expects to establish winter headquarters while appearing with the Foylets in motion pictures.

Macklyn Arbuckle, another noted star, who has also been appearing in Morosco pictures during the summer season, is looking around Los Angeles in quest of a suitable country place where he can enjoy life while accepting attractive offerings.

The announcement this week settles the question about the new producing organization of W. H. Clune. He has taken over the site of the Famous Players studio, and now heads a highly capitalized film organization with the intention of producing only feature pictures. Lloyd Brown is general manager of the company, Donald Crisp has been secured as director and Enrique J. Vallejo will preside over the camera and photographic effects. A company of strong players is being engaged and active production work will be started next week, the first picture to be "Ramona," taken from the famous California novel. The idea proposed is to produce a picture along the lines of "The Clansman," with all its attending spectacular effects.

Henrietta Crossman, the Broadway star, has arrived at the Universal studio and is being featured in "The Chaperone," a play written especially for this talented actress for Universal programs.

General Flm Corporation—Preferred has been freely offered under 50 with no bids better than 42.

Mutual Film Corporation—Preferred stock has been picked up in good quarters about 50. It is generally expected there will be no change in the dividend rate.

New York Motion Picture Corporation —The market stiffened up the last week with small lots wanted at a little under 70.

World Film Corporation—The volume of trading in this security on the New York Curb has considerably lessened during the past several weeks.

Triangle Film Corporation—Inaugurated a vigorous advertising campaign to popularize its stock. The text of the advertising would remind one of the deft hand of Tom Lawson. Sales of stock have been reported above $6.00 per share. Prudence, however, would dictate to the ordinary investor that the securities of a new company are not usually worth a premium before the company is sixty days old. A radical departure from the methods that have won money in the film game are now being tried out by this company. If it is proven the management has had more foresight in gauging the future trend of this industry in the matter of higher prices and making their appeal somewhat more to "class" rather than to "mass," the present potential worth, as indicated by the Curb market, may be fulfilled.

The Empress and Lyric theaters at Oklahoma City, Okla., have placed orders for immediate installation of the new and marvelous music instruments known as the Fotoplayer. Each of the two instruments cost $7,500, and will be the first of their kind in the entire southwest. When the new instruments are installed, the Empress and Lyric theaters will no longer have need of an orchestra, as the Fotoplayer will play any kind of orchestra music, being equipped with bells, bass and snare drums and traps of every nature and description that every action of motion pictures can be followed with proper music.

The soldiers of the United States army, located at Fort Sill, Okla., were recently given free moving picture exhibitions on their parade grounds by the Eagle Film Company. The film "The Passing of the Oklahoma Outlaw," being given by special arrangement of Chaplain Sutherland of the army post.

It appears that the army chaplain had seen the pictures at Lawton and had been much impressed with the lessons taught by the pictures which clearly demonstrates that the penalty of sin is death. The chaplain immediately made arrangements with the Eagle Film Co. to show the pictures to his congregation, the soldiers stationed at Fort Sill, and the rather unusual performance was given in consequence. Manager Wehl of the Eagle Film Co. was much pleased with the United States Army indorsement of the pictures.

Missouri

That women managers of moving picture theaters are a success is evidenced by the fact that in St. Louis, Mo., five managers of motion machine theaters are women and several women are partners with their husbands in the moving picture business. Miss Tillie Schwartz is the successful manager of the Famous, located at 615 Franklin street. Miss Isabel Spear has been manager for the past seven years of the Eureka theater, located at 20th street and Obear avenue. The Monroe theater, located at 2816 Chippewe street, is owned and operated by Mrs. L. B. Stoddard. Mrs. Bernada Klingler has been the popular manager of the McKinley Theater, at Jefferson avenue and Accomac, for several years. The Plymouth Teater at Hamilton and Plymouth avenues is ably managed by Mrs. Mollie Matthews.

Many other women are partners with their husbands in managing moving picture shows. Mrs. John W. Cornellus is probably one of the best known of these partners, as she gives her whole time to helping her husband manage the three Lyric theaters, one down town and two in the West End. Mrs. D. T. Williams of the firm of D. T. Williams and Wife, who manage the Ashland theater. Mrs. Charles Warner who runs the Queen Airdome, while her husband devotes his time to the North Grand Theater. Mrs. Roettgers, who assists her husband in the management of the Fairy. These and many other women may be only silent partners to the general public, but their refining and artistic influence has been potent in the development of the city's motion picture industry.

Texas

Miss Mildred Mabry, one of the fourteen state fair beauty contest winners, died suddenly at her home in Dallas, Texas, August 25. She had just been talking to an aunt over the telephone when she suddenly swooned. Heart disease is believed to have caused her sudden death. Miss Mabry's picture will be discontinued and will not be shown again.

Plans were completed last week for the opening of an office at Dallas, Texas, by the Triangle Film Corporation with L. B. Remy as local manager. Triangle films will be distributed in Dallas territory on and after September 15, the first picture, featuring Billie Burke; the second Eddie Foy, and the seven little Foys; and the third, Julian Eltinge in "The Fascinating Widow." Mr. Remy has just returned from New York, where the plans for the new moving picture combination were formulated.

NEW YORK NOTES

Rumors have been heard to the effect that the offices of the Metro Pictures Corporation are soon to be found in the United States Tire Building, located at 59th street and Broadway, directly opposite Central Park. It is said that environment is about half of a publicity department. With the scrumptuous atmosphere furnished by the palatial U. S. Tire building, Arthur James and his force ought to turn out some classics. Still, they will have some difficulty in outreaching their present output, which not only contains news of vital interest to the trade, but press dope which is most readable and, in the writing, assumes the earmarks of vital importance, as well.

One of the busiest men in the trade right now is W. H. Rudolph, who is taking care of F. O. Nielson's "Guarding Old Glory," in the East. Mr. Rudolph fully realizes that now is the time to strike, when is awakening to the need of "guarding old glory," and unless appearances count for naught, he is going to put it over.

John W. Semler, formerly manager of the motion picture department of the New York Morning Telegraph, and Harry Havens, his genial right-hand man and champion ad solicitor, joined the staff of the New York Evening Mail on Tuesday last, taking hold of a syndicate proposition. They are to make their headquarters in the Longacre building, Times Square. Their resignations follow close upon that of Lloyd Robinson, formerly editor of the motion picture department, who became a member of B. P. Schulberg's publicity staff at the Famous Players on Saturday, September 4.

Frank C. Bangs, who recently opened up the McKinley Square Theater, in the Bronx, New York City, has found Universal Broadway Features to be strong drawing cards. On opening night "Jewel" packed the house, and on the following Sunday night "Mrs. Plum's Pudding," featuring Marie Tempest, played to an enormous crowd.

The Vitagraph baseball team played the International Paper Company nine last Saturday at the Vitagraph grounds, and won by a shamefully large score. None of the Vitagraph photoplayers was on the team, but a number of them could have been found among the rooters on the sidelines.

On Monday, September 6, the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation's initial release, "Trilby," featuring Clara Kimball Young and Wilton Lackaye, will open at the Forty-fourth Street theater, New York, for an indefinite run. It is in five acts. Special music has been arranged by S. L. Rothapfel, the peer of exhibitors and formerly managing director of the famous Strand theater, in New York.

Mary Miles Minter and her supporting cast are late residents in the Delaware Water Gap territory, where the Columbia-Metro five-reel feature, "Stork's Nest," is being filmed. William F. Nigh is directing the production, assisted by Martin Faust, who also plays one of the characters in the story.

Dr. J. Victor Wilson, press representative and medical force for the Strand theater, New York, is enjoying his first vacation since the Strand opened, in April, 1914. As he did not invite a staff of press men to the station (or boat landing) to see him off, as is the wont of regular globe-trotters, his plans will be made public later in the past tense.

Edgar Brooks is now Greater New York representative for the North American Film Corporation. Previously Mr. Brooks was associated with Gaumont, Allen Features, Cosmofotofilm and Blinkhorn companies.

CHICAGO GOSSIP

Wm. J. Sweeney and G. M. Watkins were appointed on the committee to obtain permanent quarters for the "Reel Fellows" club.

Wm. N. Selig returned last week from New York.

From latest reports the Paramount officers, branch managers and publicity men will hold a meeting at the LaSalle Hotel on Thursday, September 2.

Wm. Sievers, of the Grand Central Theater, St. Louis, acted as chairman of a meeting of prominent theater owners, at a three-day session held Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, of last week, at the Sherman House.

Raymond D. Weakly, the inventor of the adjustable chair which can be used for children as well as adults, states that exhibitors have been very enthusiastic in inspecting the models of this chair, which are on exhibition at the Mutual offices, and that several of the exhibitors have placed orders with him already for the new type of chair.

"Smiling" Billy Mason has completed his contract, making the Ring Lardner pictures for the World Film Corporation, and leaves next week for the Pacific Coast, to look over several tentative propositions that have been made him.

Francis X. Bushman stopped off between trains on the 25th, being on his way back to the coast. Mr. Bushman stated that the home office of the Metro complimented him very highly on his first picture, which was leading all other Metro productions from a booking standpoint. Mr. Bushman was very frank to say that he did not believe the "Second in Command" was as good as the "Silent Voice," his second picture, and he was quite pleased with the way Metro regarded his first production.

The Universal Film Mfg. Company is announcing the removal of its exchange to the Universal building, 16 South Washington street, Spokane, Wash.

Aaron M. Gollos, of the Photoplay Releasing Co., states that his company secured some excellent pictures of the Elgin Road Races, on Friday and Saturday of last week.

J. Stuart Blackton is expected in Chicago September 7, at which time the big motorboat races will be held in the lagoon off Grant Park, Chicago.

The Chicago Tribune war pictures, taken from the Russian trenches, closed at the Studebaker on Saturday, and war pictures taken from the German and Italian fronts will play all this week. The Studebaker is "holding them out" at every performance. The Russian pictures are now open for bookings at the Central Film Company.

The Kimbark Theater, 47th and Kimbark, is having difficulties with labor unions as one night last week all the glass in the doors was broken by some unknown vandals.

NOTES FROM ALL OVER

The manager of the Majestic theater in Chattanooga, Tenn., discovered, while witnessing a preliminary showing of the Selig Red Seal Play in seven reels, "The Rosary," that the production was perfectly timed to the metre of the beautiful song of the same name.

After a two days' business visit in San Francisco, William Parsons, president of the National Film Corporation, has gone to Chicago and New York on business in connection with the first release of National productions.

Preparations have been made to use the 864 midshipmen who are at present en route to the San Francisco Exposition, in a three-reel feature to be staged at Universal City.

An audience composed of the best known moving picture directors, players and officials in America gathered in the little Iris theater in Hollywood, California, recently to see Nat Goodwin in a private running of Otis Turner's production of Octave Mirabeau's French tragedy, "Business Is Business." Among those present were D. W. Griffith, Mack Sennett, Charles Chaplin, Frank Keenan, Geraldine Farrar, Eddie Foy, Roscoe Arbuckle, Fred Mace, Thomas Ince, Otheman Stevens, Blanche Ring, Kitty Gordon, Hobart Bosworth, Fred Balshoffer, Raymond Hitchcock, Cecil B. DeMille, Thomas Jefferson, Tully Marshall, Paul Schenck, Frank Woods, C. Winninger, Charles Giblyn and Mr. Goodwin himself.

Such a universal uproar of irresistible mirth has greeted Essanay's latest V. L. S. E. feature, "A Bunch of Keys," from the pen of the famous playwright, Charles Hoyt, that a flood of letters and telegrams of congratulation has been pouring into the Essanay studios every day since the five-act film was released.

Returning to New York on his first trip back East in more than a year, Cecil B. DeMille, director general of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, who is recognized in the photoplay industry as one of the most artistic and important directors in America, stated his belief that the photoplay, which he described as picturization of a dramatic theme, was developing into one of the great branches of world literature.

The Lubin Military Band, of which James Cassady is leader and concert master, with Billie Reeves playing the cornet, Kempton Greene the bass drum, Clarence Jay Elmer the trombone, Ferdinand O'Beck the tuba, and Walter Law snare drummer, has issued a challenge, catch as catch can, strangle hold allowed, to any organization on earth for the unmusical championship of this or any other world. Sousa's band preferred.

In the past week another influx of visitors at Universal City has kept the official "guides" in Big U town on the jump. First came Burton Holmes, traveler, lecturer and writer, with Mrs. Holmes and a party of Chicago people. Mr. Holmes was accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Depue and Calvin Smith, all of Chicago.

Richard Carle, who has been secured to star in the forthcoming Pathe Gold Rooster play, "Mary's Lamb," produced by Donald Mackenzie, is easily one of the foremost figures on the American stage today.

Although Universal City now has the largest outdoor stage in the world, President Carl Laemmle has decided to erect another one, a duplicate and "sister" stage of the present monster. The foundations for the second mammoth stage is already virtually completed.

"The Politicians," Aaron Hoffman's celebrated farce, is now in course of filming at the Kleine studios with a Broadway cast featuring Bickel & Watson. Such well known players as Snitz Edwards, Miss Ruby Hoffman, Miss Alma Hanlon, Florence Morrison and John Nicholson will support the famous comedians.

Spottiswoode Aitken, the talented Griffith character artist, is the proud father of a bouncing baby boy, who tips the scales at the nine-pound mark.

It seemed to Mary Anderson, the little Vitagraph player, who recently made her first big journey to the West, as if the whole of California had turned out to welcome her when she stepped off the train at Los Angeles on her way to Santa Monica to join the Western Vitagraph Players, as leading ingenue under the direction of Rollin S. Sturgeon.

"Out of Darkness," in which Charlotte Walker appears as the star, under the direction of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, is Hector Turnbull's first original photoplay. He recently resigned as dramatic critic of the New York Tribune to join the Lasky literary and photodrama department.

Helen Relyea, who formerly was prominent on the legitimate stage, was recently elected a member of the Vitagraph Stock Company.

George Fawcett, the well-known American actor, has been added to the gallery of Universal stars now glimmering in a dazzling array on the Universal program.

Steadily increasing business with the expectation of still further increases as a result of the Kleine-Edison merger, caused the removal of George Kleine's Boston office from 597 Washington street to a handsome new three-story building at 14 Piedmont street.

While Gus Edwards was playing the Orpheum theater in Los Angeles he and his "Song Review" stars, together with Nan Halperin and a number of others on the bill, visited the Keystone studios at the invitation of Mabel Normand and spent an interesting morning watching the making of scenes for the Sennett feature. They were guests of Miss Normand at dinner the same night, as were Eddie Foy, Mrs. Foy and the famous seven Foylets.

Paul Scardon has been promoted from the ranks of the Vitagraph stars to a producing director and given the manuscript of "The Island of Surprise," a picturization of Cyrus Townsend Brady's novel of the same name, as his first picture. Mr. Scardon will direct the work of such well-known players as William Courtney, who will make his initial Vitagraph appearance in this picture, Eleanor Woodruff, Zena Keefe, Charles Kent, Ander Randolf and Julia Swayne Gordon, who will be seen in the principal characters.

For the past few weeks Mr. Burr McIntosh and his cast, including Edith Wells, have been hard at work, in a secluded part of New York state, on a picturization of Bartley Campbell's old time drama, "My Partner," which is scheduled for release on the World Film program. Burr McIntosh himself plays the part of Joe Saunders in the film, which was directed by Eugene Sanger.

Fred Mace has sent out letters in order to get a straw vote from the people engaged in the motion picture producing industry in Southern California in regard to organizing a new association of professionals. The Photoplayers Club, which was on a substantial standing after having been organized by Mace, failed while he was in Cuba. When Mace returned to Los Angeles many picture people urged him to try and revive interest in a club, hence his attempt to obtain the opinions of the people of the profession before taking definite action.

World Film is to convert the Owen Davis drama "The Family Cupboard" which was produced by Wm. A. Brady, into a motion picture under the direction of Frank H. Crane. Irene Fenwick's part in the drama is to be played in the film by Frances Nelson, the actress who made a pleasing success in World Film's "Stolen Voice."

The natives of Las Vegas have adopted Tom Mix. Not only that but they are pressing honors upon the modest cowboy-director-star of the Selig Polyscope Company. One present was a deputy sheriff's star and now Tom can speed his red deamon all over New Mexico with immunity.

Lillian Gish entertained recently at the Fine Arts Films studio Mabel Normand, the popular Keystone Triangle comedienne; Blanche Sweet and a party of friends. They remained to witness Miss Gish, Rozsika Dolly and Wilfred Lucas play a scene in their present starring vehicle, "The Lily and the Rose."

There were 75 girls from the Winter Garden chorus and 25 men who went over to the Kinemacolor studio at Whitestone, L. I., last week to take part in one of the most pretentious scenes which has been made for a motion picture. Edwin August is producing "Evidence" for the F. Ray Comstock company to be released through the World Film. The stageland beauties went over to take part in a beautiful allegory which the director interpolated into the play, which was produced at the Lyric Theater, New York, last season.

Louis Sherwin, dramatic critic of the New York Evening Globe, was a recent guest of Mr. D. W. Griffith at his Los Angeles studio.

Glenn Martin, the famous aviator, has been engaged at a princely salary to make a number of aerial flights in "The Scarlet Band," a forthcoming Fine Arts Films picture featuring John Emerson. Director John B. O'Brien, a former pal of Mr. Martin's, succeeded in securing the fearless aviator's consent and he has promised his best efforts.

"Out of Darkness," in which Charlotte Walker appears as the star, under the direction of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, is Hector Turnbull's first original photoplay. He recently resigned as dramatic critic of the New York Tribune to join the Lasky literary and photodrama department. The photoplay is a severe arraignment of inhuman working conditions of women and children, although the theme is one of exceptional dramatic interest.

Not only does the Selig Polyscope Company lay claims to the possession of one of the youngest leading ladies in the world in the person of Miss Grace Darmond, not yet eighteen years old, but the Selig Company comes to bat with the claim that Wheeler Oakman is one of the youngest leading men in point of years in motion pictures.

Charles J. Winninger, famous from coast to coast as one of the foremost comedians of the American stage, is now an L-Ko Universal comedy star. Mr. Winninger will be remembered for the great success in "The Yankee Girl," in which Blanche Ring, now Mrs. Winninger, starred.

Jerome Lewis, well known in eastern film circles, has been added to the George Kleine forces. He will travel out of the New York office, filling the vacancy made by the resignation of Edward Guzman.

For pronunciation reasons, Signe Auen, the Fine Arts Films actress, has decided that in the future she will spell her name "Seena Owen." She is of Danish descent and it seems that few persons could pronounce her name in the proper manner.

Director George D. Baker is producing for the Vitagraph Company "A Queen for an Hour," in which Edith Storey, in the dual personality of a country maid and a rich city belle is seen talking to herself.

Joseph De Grasse and his company of Rex players are still in the Bear Valley country seven thousand feet above the sea where they have gone to stage a number of exteriors in a three-reel feature entitled "The King's Keeper," with Cleo Madison, Arthur Shirley and Lon Chaney in the leading roles.

A telegram that carried with it a wave of bitter disappointment was received by Producer Thomas H. Ince this week from New York. It was signed Billie Burke and contained the information that that charming star will be delayed in her departure from the Metropolis and consequently will not be able to reach Inceville, where she is to be starred in Ince-Triangle features, until the second week in September.

The new Vitagraph plant at Prospect and Talmadge streets, Los Angeles, is rapidly nearing completion. When finished, it will be the largest "close-in" studio in California, covering more ground and having more buildings.

During the trip of the Popular Plays and Players company to the Adirondacks for scenes in the forthcoming Metro release, "The Song of the Wage Slave," in which Edmund Breese is featured, the devotees of Izaak Walton, and they include practically all the male members of the company, formed a fishing club.

Jerome Sobel, connected with the selling forces of the New York Branch of the V. L. S. E., gave a positive demonstration at the Field Day of the New York Motion Picture Exhibitors League, that he can do other things besides book Big Four features.

In keeping with his intention to create new departments at his plant until Inceville will be able proudly to boast of specialists, Producer Thomas H. Ince, this week, announced that he has inaugurated an art department for the purpose of turning out oil paintings, sketches and drawings to be used in his productions.

Eve Unsell, who is writing the scenario for "Richard Carvel" in collaboration with Fred J. Balshofer, head of the Quality Pictures Corporation, which will be released in the Metro program early this fall, used to be a newspaper woman before she branched out as a writer of scripts and plays.

Rose Tapley, of the Vitagraph Players, is to have a theater named for her. A motion picture fan in a town of considerable size in southern Illinois, was so impressed with Miss Tapley's work as Mrs. Jarr in Roy L. McCardell's Famous Jarr Family Series, he wrote asking the Vitagraph star, if she would object to his naming a new moving picture theater he was building, the Rose Tapley.

W. A. Barrett, a prominent member of the National Board of Censorship, Shelley Hamilton, the brilliant young dramatic critic of Everybody's Magazine, and Louis Sherwin, the dramatic critic of the New York Evening Globe, were among the distinguished visitors to Inceville recently.

Illinois.

Strand Photo Play company, Chicago; capital $10,000; incorporators, William W. Wheelock, Frederick J. Newey, Vernon O. Seaver.

Iowa.

The picture show at Elliott has been sold. Roy Means was manager.

Harold N. Hoyt has taken possession of the Opera house at Fayette, formerly owned by David Prior.

Michigan.

Improvements in the Bijou theater in Saginaw are nearly completed. Changes in seating accommodations, which is one of the improvements, will greatly improve the theater.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker, MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Y.

The Wild Cat—(TWO REELS)—LUBIN—SEPTEMBER 1.—An all-star cast featured. When Sargent met Mary, he was attracted to her principally by the little false curls, etc. A wealthy uncle visits them and leaves a note promising that he will leave his fortune to them if they will christen their first girl child Vanity. The girl is christened Vanity, but the uncle has left his money to his only son. The shock is too much for Sargent and he becomes mentally unhinged on the single subject of women's dress. Vanity, grown, is compelled to overdress to attract every possible undesirable attention. John, a country fellow, likes to attempt to hug her because she struggles like a wild cat. In rebellion Vanity goes to a favorite nook on the stream and strips off all her finery, revelling in the freedom afforded. Here she meets Dick, who learning her story persuades her to resume all of her frills for the sake of her crazed father. Into her life comes Carr, a young city fellow. She goes to Dick and tells him to marry her. He takes too long to gather his wits and again Carr meets her and proves the tempter. Fleeing him she runs into John and then, as a choice of evils, she turns to Carr and goes with him. Dick discovers that he wants her, follows her and rescues her from the man of the city.

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial No. 70—HEARST-SELIG—SEPTEMBER 2.—Horse race at track of Panama Pacific Exposition attract crowds; daring life saving feat is performed by Gertrude Palmer, the girl aquaplanist; monster sham battle in which U. S. army and navy take part is staged at Panama Pacific Exposition; crew of Culver Military Academy defeats oarsmen from naval militia and navy training station at Culver, Ind.; remains of Col. John V. White, formerly in charge of New York Coast defense, is taken to Fort Hamilton where services take place; fresh troops from the interior march to front to relieve Kaiser's soldiers who have withstood long fighting in the ditches; Japanese training ship Taisei Maru, drops anchor at San Francisco while midshipmen review Panama Pacific Exposition; Apalachian Club House, situated at highest point of Mount Washington, is dedicated, Bretton Woods, New Hampshire.

An Artful Artist—LUBIN—SEPTEMBER 4.—Billie Reeves featuring. Bill, the janitor, is togged out in Angelo's painting togs when Jane, the wife of a rich man, comes to have her portrait painted. She offers him a lot of money if he will paint her portrait and leaves him a one-thousand dollar bill and he tells her to return the next day. The detective, hired by Jane's husband, learns that Angelo is out of town and hubby starts for the studio. There is a lively ten minutes, and in the end Bill, who is hiding on the roof, falls through the skylight. He loses his gains and some skin from his nose and shins, but he is rich in black and blue marks.

Among Those Killed—BIOGRAPH—SEPTEMBER 6.—Isabel Rea featured with an all star cast. Clay Judson, a recluse who lives remote from civilization, receives his monthly mail and some poison meat for his wolf traps. Among the letters is one reading, "I'll kill you for putting me in prison. I will be at your place on the seventh." The letter is from John Morton, a man he has cause to fear. He had schemed to have Morton imprisoned so he could win the girl both men were in love with, but the girl refused to marry him. On the morning of the seventh Judson's revolver is accidentally discharged and he is wounded. In desperation he eats of the poisoned meat. His dying eyes rest on a newspaper in which the meat was wrapped and he sees a part which reads "Among those killed was John Morton, an ex-convict."

Caught—(THREE REELS)—ESSANAY—SEPTEMBER 6.—Bryant Washburn and Edna Mayo featured. A politician and star reporter learns that Richard Ware, the fiance of the governor's daughter, has forged his name to a check and they force him to get a document they want. Edna Winslow, the governor's daughter, is really in love with Bryant Gordon, her father's secretary. At the Winslow estate, Ware copies the combination of the safe and mails it to the newspaper. Gordon, discovering what Ware has done, goes with Edna and, with the aid of the chauffeur, bind and gag the mail clerk and get the letter. He is later arrested for robbing the mails. Marie, the Winslow's maid, who has been wronged by Ware, knows his secret and she shows how the combination was written with invisible ink. The intriguers are arrested, while Gordon is set free and he and Edna then announce their betrothal.

Teasing a Tornado—LUBIN—SEPTEMBER 6.—Vinnie Burns and Jack Lawton featured. On a visit to her uncle's ranch, Laura spies Tornado Jack, an awkward cowboy, afraid of nothing but a woman. Laura, always fond of mischief, starts a mild flirtation with Jack, sending him into the seventh heaven of delight, and making him her willing slave. Laura invites Jack to a lawn party across the desert and, with the aid of her friends, play mank pranks on him. At last in shame and anger he slips away. Out in the desert he encounters his tormentors coming home in the family carryall, and putting a handkerchief over his face, holds them up. Later they are held up by real bandits, and Jack comes to their rescue and puts the bandits to flight. The next day those who have scorned and teased Jack come to praise his bravery, but he ignores his former tormentors.

The Mystic Ball—(TWO REELS)—SELIG—SEPTEMBER 6.—Featuring a strong cast. Tom Putnam is engaged to marry Bessie Watson, and the young people are presented with money to buy furniture by Mrs. Watson and Tom borrows $1,000 to assist in building a new home. Kane, a disreputable conductor of a bucket shop, endeavors to tempt Tom to invest in stocks. Huri, an East Indian, calls upon young Putnam and while there leaves his most prized possession and then strange things happen. Tom invests his money in the bucket shop investments and then invests money entrusted to him. He later writes to Bessie, telling her that he is going to commit suicide and then the gun which Tom holds in the hand suddenly dissolves into a crystal ball into which Tom had been peering and seen what might have been had he yielded to temptation.

Jarr and the Society Circus—VITAGRAPH—SEPTEMBER 6.—Harry Davenport and Rose Tapley featured. Because they are snubbed by the petty aristocrats at Swank Springs, a summer resort, they send for Gertrude, the servant, and pass her off as a Swedish baroness. Gertie is received with open arms by the local society and particularly the Swedish baron. Gertie confesses her identity to the baron, who admits he is the real baron's valet, at the society circus, given by the members of the local "400" and she, becoming playful and disliking the trapeze performer's work, jumps into the ring and shows the shocked audience some real acrobatics. Mrs. Jarr shrieks, scaring Gertie so she lets go of the trapeze and lands right in the kettle drum and right then and there the circus breaks up.

A Difference of Opinion—(Two Reels) —Biograph — September 7. — Featuring Mary Malatesta and Joseph McDermott. Stinger Johnson's wife gives birth to a boy and the citizens of Willow Creek celebrate the remarkable occurrence. When Stinger Johnson is called out of town and the baby becomes sick, some of the citizens start out to get the doctor from Fourflush and the others thinking that their doctor is better fetch him. Both doctors arrived in due course and, backed by their champions, diagnosed the baby's case. The camp was split in two factions, each of which believed its doctor infallible. When the excitement was at fever heat Stinger himself returns and declares "I know 'em both. One's a horse doctor and the other's a dentist. Take 'em away." It turns out that Bill was not sick at all.

His Crucible—(Three Reels) — Essanay—September 7.—Edward Marsden weds Helen Beldon, a girl of twenty, after having promised his son, Alfred, never to take a second wife. The son meets an adventuress and goes away with her and is therefore disinherited by his father. Mrs. Marsden takes up settlement work and when Alfred is arrested with May for smuggling a string of pearls into the United States she obtains his release. He then becomes a settlement worker. May threatens Alfred, but Mrs. Marsden saves him and proves to her husband that his son has reformed and the family is reunited. Nell Craig featured.

Finn and Haddie—Lubin—September 7. —Herman Finn and Fergus Haddie, after being thrown out of a theater by the manager after their first performance, apply for the positions as first and second cook at the home of wealthy Tom Van Austin. They are directed by Mrs. Van Austin to prepare a dinner, which is to be adjunct to a ball to be given that night to celebrate her wedding anniversary. She proposes to wear an expensive set of pearls, but Mr. Van Austin calls her attention to a paragraph in the daily paper, which relates many thefts of jewels at social functions and suggests that she place them in the safe. Finn who has been sent to the store for a box of eggs, comes in as Mr. Van Austin is about to place the pearls in the safe, to make a complaint against Haddie, who makes him do all the work. The boxes get mixed, Finn takes the box which contains the pearls and Mr. Van Austin places the box of eggs in the safe. Later that evenin two crooks attempt to steal the pearls from the safe and are captured. Upon opening the box Mrs. Van Austin discovers the box to be filled with eggs, but Mr. Van Austin recalling the interview with the cook, heads with a wild rush for the kitchen and the right box is found in the refrigerator.

Never Again—Selig—September 7.—Tom Mix featured. Tom, after promising his sweetheart, Vicky, to stop drinking, falls in with some old boon companions, and in a saloon brawl accidently shoots his pal. It is found that his pal was only stunned and Tom is arrested for shooting Ned, but to scare him into promising never to drink again, they make him believe he has killed his pal. Later he encounters he and Vicky at the jail and he promises to never drink again.

The Kidnaped Stockbroker — (Two Reels)—Vitagraph — September 7. — Jay Dwiggins and Dorothy Kelly featured. After threatening his partner, Oldham, for misuse of the firm's money, James MacLaren disappears and Alan Hyde, a reporter, is put on the case. Eileen, the stockbroker's daughter, is a friend of Alan's and through a clue furnished by her he locates the missing man in a haunted house. He is made a prisoner and locked in an upper room. Eileen brings help and after a thrilling pursuit in autos and motor boats the crooks are captured, and father and daughter reunited. They return to the haunted house and after much difficulty rescue Alan from the house, which has been set afire. Oldham is arrested and Alan takes Eileen in his arms.

Cartoons on the Beach—Edison—September 8.—Animated cartoons by Raoul Barre. Trixie, Mrs. Brody, eludes her husband and carries on a flirtation with Billie. When she sees her husband coming toward them she hides under a table. After the husband walks away Billie tells her that she had better not be seen with him for awhile. Before going Trixie looks at the cartoons in the "animated grouch chaser." She is greatly amused by the "Kelly Kids," "Mr. Hicks in Nightmareland," and "Bunkum's Boarding House." The last picture, "A Sand Microbe Flirtation," makes her swear never to flirt again.

The Fable of Hazel's Two Husbands and What Became of Them—Essanay—September 8.—Ruth Stonehouse, Charles J. Stine and Eugene Acker featured. Hazel, a high school graduate, after meeting an elderly bachelor finds herself in a swell shack on the drive. Husband would pike to the office at 7:30, while Hazel would get her coffee in bed about 10:30. At 6:30, when the money-getter comes in he is a faded flower, but when Hazel sniffed the night air she was as kittenish as a broncho. If the producer tried to lie down Hazel accused him of being a slobsterine. Hazel picked out a handsome wretch of a good family who never worked. After father died Hazel got all of his insurance and then sued her husband for divorce. When Hazel was asked what she was going to do next she answered, "I'm going to buy a dog." Moral: It is often necessary to try two or three before the right kind is landed.

The Irish in America—(Three Reels) —Lubin—September 8.—Sidney Olcott and Valentine Grant featured. Dan departs for America after bidding farewell to his sweetheart, Peggy O'Sullivan. Sometime later Dan strikes it rich in a Western mining camp and sends for Peggy, but the letter containing the money is lost. Peggy is very much worried, for she has not heard from Dan for weeks and decides she will come to America. Arrived here, she goes to Dan's last known address, but he has left this place and the only clue is a post card bearing the post mark of the Western mining camp. Peggy goes to this place and there locates Dan, who summons a priest and they are married. For a longer review, see another page of this issue. J. C. G.

Harmon is called back to Kansas City and Trixie also departs for the same place. Mrs. Harmon moves into Trixie's apartments and there finds her husband's handkerchief and a telegram signed simply "John." She starts for Kansas City and when she locates her husband there are some tall doings. They visit Trixie and Courtney and after some trouble, the handkerchief incident is finally explained and they all become good friends.

Oil and Water—(TWO REELS)—BIOGRAPH—SEPTEMBER 10.—Featuring Blanche Sweet and Henry B. Walthall. Biograph re-issue. The idealist attends a theater, where Mlle. Genova performs a sensational dance of the Fleeting Hours. Through the performance the idealist sits spellbound and afterward he meets the famous dancer. He impetuously proposes marriage and whether it is the hunger of her heart or merely the allurement of a new experience the girl marries him. Years pass and she has borne a child. Her husband is the adorable lover, but she is not happy. An old stage acquaintance calls on her and she goes back to the old life. One evening the child escapes from his father and wanders away and is found by his mother. She takes the little one home and after a moment her heart yearns to reclaim all she has lost, but she realizes that her husband's ways are not her's. Oil and water—each in its own element—irreconcilable.

What Happened on the Barbuda—(THREE REELS)—EDISON—SEPTEMBER 10.—Cast with Gladys Hulette, Augustus Phillips and Pat O'Malley. The story is by William C. Pratt. Directed by Langdon West. Professor Dislow and his daughter, Ruth, are passengers on board the Barbuda, a trading vessel carrying a valuable cargo to South America. Harvey, a New York gangster, and his followers are members of the crew. Harvey plans to cause mutiny and become master of the ship and its cargo. The gangsters bind and gag the officers and the professor. Ruth has secured some morphine tablets from her father. She drugs the coffee. While the mutineers are unconscious the girl releases the officers and her father. A wireless call for aid is heard by the U. S. S. Freedom. The gunmen are made prisoners. Tom Avery, the first mate, and Ruth fall in love. In the final scene they are seated on the deck, plighting their troth.

Jealousy — LUBIN — SEPTEMBER 10.—Dorothy Barrett and Robert Gray featured. Will Bradley loves Nellie, but is insanely jealous of the attention paid her by her friend, Bob Walker. College days over Will, now Dr. William Bradley, marries Nellie and even on their wedding night Will shows his petty jealousy of Bob. Years pass. One day he receives a letter from Bob telling them he is coming to visit them. Bob arrives and Will notices in alarm the way Nellie greets him. Later he finds Nellie in Bob's embrace. That night he finds Bob eloping with Nellie and he vows vengeance over the dead body of his child, who has been killed by Bob, who fired at Will. Several years later he finds Bob and Nellie in a cheap dive of the underworld and Will keeps his vow and kills Bob. He is arrested and jumps through an open window. He is pursued by the police and as he is about to jump off a bridge is captured and they beat him over the head with their clubs. Then Will wakes up to find his child beating him over the head with his slipper and telling him mamma is waiting. It has all been a dream but Will is cured of his jealousy when Bob does arrive with Mrs. "Bob."

Unlucky Louey—VITAGRAPH—SEPTEMBER 10.—Sidney Drew featured. Unlucky Louey figured that prison life was one hundred per cent better than the bread line and sleeping in the park and in an effort to get back again he steals bananas from an Italian, who reaps a rich harvest from sympathetic bystanders; kisses a woman on the street, but as she is an old maid she almost strangles him with a return embrace; steals a wallet and gets rewarded for finding it, and tries committing arson but the Jew landlord kisses him on both cheeks for enabling him to collect the fire insurance. He finally captures a noted outlaw and Louey is made a town official and he decides prison life is not for him.

At the Road's End—BIOGRAPH—SEPTEMBER 11.—Featuring Isabel Rea and Jack Mulhall. Mutual Program

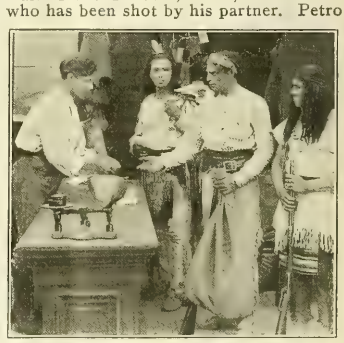
Making Matters Worse—Cub—September 2.—To evade Curlock Bones, the famous detective, Jerry consents to masquerade as the maid of the Misses Jessie and Tessie Bubblebrook, damsels unpleasantly beseiged by the police. The sisters fondly imagine that Jerry's masculine prowess may be of service to them. For a while, Jerry, attired in feminine clothes, has the time of his life flirting with the entire bluecoat force. But one day he makes up to the master of the house. Father Bubblebrook takes the supposed maid in his arms just as Mother Bubblebrook enters. The latter hits the homebreaker and her faithless spouse with a jug. Jerry's wig falls—and at the instant of revelation, Curlock Bones comes in. Jerry has no choice but to go quietly back to jail.

Man and the Law—(Two Reels)—Gaumont—September 2.—George Benton, whose character always had seemed above reproach, is brought to trial for the murder of his sister's betrayer. The hours drag by as the jury, behind locked doors, try to reach a unanimous decision. Four times the vote is taken and four times the verdict stands eleven to one. At last, Will Harvey, the twelfth juror, tells his reason for holding out for Benton's acquittal. Ten years before, Harvey, then a blacksmith in a small country community, had seen his sister, Blanche, deceived by an unscrupulous city fellow. The girl's elopement killed her father and mother. Then Harvey set our to find Tom Meade. In a wild chase across the train yards of a big city, Meade had dashed under the wheels of a locomotive and been killed. When Harvey ceases speaking, every man in the room feels himself in the place of young Benton. The verdict is returned—unanimously—"Not Guilty."

Biddy Brady's Birthday—Falstaff—September 3.—Biddy's husband is a driver employed by the street cleaning department. Being his wife's birthday, Pat promises her a surprise. After dumping his cart at the place appointed, Pat finds a curious shaped bottle which he opens. A cloud of smoke emerges from the bottle, followed by a genie. This apparition promises to grant him the next three wishes he might make, also the next three wishes of "his noble wife." Pat utilizes his first two wishes wastefully, and his wife unconsciously wastes all of hers. The genie tells Pat that he can change one of Biddy's wretched rooms into an Egyptian Harem, and the driver consents, thinking it will be a most presentable gift to his wife. But the latter rolls up her sleeves and prepares to chastise her husband, who hastily withdraws his wish. Biddy, however, was not totally convinced that she saw straight and Pat tells her that she must have been drunk. Whereupon she tearfully admits her culpability, drawing the flask out of her apron.

A Bully Affair—Beauty—September 4.—John Steppling, Fred Smith and John Sheehan featured in this one reel absurdity, based on the efforts of a vaudeville performer, who is stranded, to stage "a show." After reading an account of a bull fight, the stranded performer induces Si and Josh, two rubes, to dress up as a bull, while he dons the costume of a toreador and before a vast assemblage of villagers stages a mimic bull fight. He receives fair compensation for his act, but later, on endeavoring to repeat, the men who play the bull fail to live up to their part and they are chased out of the town by the angry villagers.

Over and Back—Komic—September 5.—Jake, the rival for the hand of Fay, gets Ed, her accepted lover, into trouble with Fay's papa. A clothesline runs from Ed's window over to Fay's window, and Ed, by means of a pulley, contrives to waft himself across to secretly visit his sweetheart. Jake is soon "on" to this and changes the line from Fay's window to papa's, and when Ed makes a second flight, he finds himself mixed up with the stern parent. Then Jake monkeys with the other end of the line. Traveling back to his boarding house, Ed lands in a spinster's room, and there is discovered by Fay, supporting the fainting lady in his arms. Fay leaves in a huff. Ed sends Jake off on the line for a little of his own punishment, and papa is also jerked into mid-air by the clever Ed. While papa and Jake dangle on the clothes line, Ed runs off with Fay to the minister.



Her Oath of Vengeance—(Two Reels)—Majestic—September 5.—Sergius, a fugitive from Russia, works in a California cannery. Ivan, the overseer, offers Sergius $500 for his daughter and is accepted. The father knows that Sophia and young Nicholas are in love, but Ivan possesses the secret of his political record. After being discharged, Ivan compels Sergius to force the owner, by threatening to blow up the cannery, to pay higher wages. Nicholas disposes of the bomb in time to save the cannery, but Ivan is killed. As Sergius is shot in the excitement, and his daughter believes him dead, she goes to the owner's house to avenge the deed. There, the sight of Mrs. Grey with her baby, looking strangely like the Holy Mother, stays the girl's hand. Nicholas comes to take Sophia to her wounded father, and Sergius blesses their love.

Out of the River's Depths—Thanhouser—September 5.—An escaped convict is at a loss what to do to evade detection when a well dressed man happens along. He kills the man, dons his clothes, weights the dead body and throws it into the river. The convict manages to impersonate the dead man, and appropriate his belongings. But, at no distant time his true identity is revealed through the evidence of the murdered man's portrait. Desperately struggling to elude his captors, the criminal is forced to jump into the river. He sinks, and when the river is dragged, his body is found held tightly in the grip of his former victim's skeleton.

The Indian Trapper's Vindication—Reliance—September 6.—Dark Cloud, an Indian trapper, is unjustly accused of robbing the trader's store, and Winston King forces him to leave the country. Dark Cloud later saves King's two children from drifting into the rapids in their canoe. Coming ashore, the children and Dark Cloud discover, Petro, a half-breed who has been shot by his partner. Petro confesses that he and his partner had robbed the store, and points out the direction Hawkeye has taken. Dark Cloud hunts down Hawkeye, and brings the thief back with the goods on. The trapper hands the money to King, and then walks haughtily away, refusing any reward.

In Trust—(TWO REELS)—AMERICAN—SEPTEMBER 6.—Charles Bartlett and Vivian Rich featured in this melodrama of the West, in which Jane, a mountain maid, is captured by some cattle rustlers and later won at cards by Harry Dawson, an outlaw, who takes her away into the mountains with him. Dawson treats the girl kindly and at last permits her to return to the nearest settlement, where she prepares to supply him with food and water for his kindness to her. When the sheriff would capture Dawson, Jane interferes, permitting the outlaw to escape. A longer review will be found on another page of this issue. N. G. C.

Plot and Counterplot—BEAUTY—SEPTEMBER 7.—Archer MacMackin is the director of this one-reel Beauty comedy, in which Webster Campbell, Neva Gerber, Dick Rosson and Nan Christy are the principals. Grant Morris, a bookworm, is so enraptured in his books that he does not pay sufficient attention to his butterfly wife. The latter determines to make him jealous, and coaxes their mutual friend, Bob Frazer, to flirt with her. The husband discovers the plot and concocts a counterplot by engaging Ethel, a pretty girl, as his secretary, her special duty being to make his wife jealous. After numerous complications, the wife and husband each discover the other's trick and Bob and Ethel are sent away, while husband and wife settled their differences.

For Love of Mary Ellen—MAJESTIC—SEPTEMBER 7.—Little Rex McKnight, the son of snobbish parents, does not like to play with the children of his mother's rich friends. At every possible chance, he runs away to enjoy life with little Mary Ellen Rafferty, whose mother keeps the newsstand and tobacco shop at the corner. Mrs. Rafferty's business is not paying and her creditors become insistent. She falls ill. Mary Ellen pours their woes into her playmate's ear. An old blind woman gives Rex an idea. He gets the grocer's boy to paint him a sign reading, "Pity a Blind Widow With Six Children." This he hangs about his neck and stations himself in a busy street. Chief Justice Jones happens along and wins from the boy the story of the Rafferty's distress. The judge gives the widow a helping hand, and all ends well.

The Forecast—AMERICAN—SEPTEMBER 8.—Lizette Thorne, Edward Coxen and George Field featured in this one-reel drama directed by Henry Otto. Forrest Keene, a wealthy bachelor, and his nephew, Rex Booth, live in a big house, cared for by Janet, the housekeeper. Rex and Janet loves each other, but Keene objects to the match and threatens to disinherit Rex in case of a marriage. A fortune teller forecasts for Janet that she will wed Rex despite the uncle's objections, and later that day the uncle falls asleep and dreams that he is murdered by Rex, his dream being unusually vivid and filled with numerous complications for all his friends. He is so terrified upon awakening that he consents to the marriage of Janet and Rex.

The Unsuspected Isles—(THREE REELS)—RIALTO—SEPTEMBER 8.—An Indian princess is decoyed by a New York tourist from a small isle in the south Atlantic to Broadway, where she dances in native costume in a cafe. From this life she is rescued by the old captain of the ship in which she made her flight from her native island. He takes the girl to a quiet sea town in New England, where her romance turns to tragedy. Castelene returns to the Far South and seeks Lisa, her native lover. She finds that during her absence, Lores, a native girl, has been trying to win Lisa away from her memory. Lores, who is stricken with leprosy, believes that this calamity has befallen her as punishment for trying to steal away the love of another woman. She now turns about and assists the princess in wreaking revenge upon her betrayer in New York.

The Family Doctor—RELIANCE—SEPTEMBER 8.—Osborne Peters is opposed to the marriage of his daughter, Alice, to Dr. John Montrose. Alice goes to live with her aunt, where her lover visits her frequently. Old Mr. Peters is taken seriously ill, and the family physician, Willis-ton McGrew, is summoned. Knowing that Peters is very wealthy, and that he has quarreled with his daughter, the unscrupulous doctor hypnotizes his patient into making over his will in favor of the nurse who has attended him. The doctor and the nurse are in league, and intend to marry and share the fortune. Then, to make results absolutely sure, McGrew administers to Peters an insidious poison. Alice returns with young Dr. Montrose. The latter revives the seemingly dead Peters. The poison phial is found, and a confession is wrung from the nurse. McGrew is placed under arrest, and Alice and Montrose receive the father's blessing.

Jerry and the Gunman—CUB—SEPTEMBER 9.—George Ovey featured. Mr. and Mrs. Goodrich and their pretty daughter, Jessie, arrive in a Western town and Jerry makes a hit with the pretty Easterner, but Dead Shot Dick interrupts their spooning match and Jerry sets out for revenge. When the Goodriches leave for their home, Dick is invited to visit them and a few days later he leaves for their home with Jerry on his trail. Dick orders Jerry out of the way, but he refuses. Later Jerry applies a club to the head of Dick, who falls into dreamland. In Dick's pocket Jerry finds a notice offering $1,000 for the former's capture. He ties a rope around the ankles of the prone gunman, drags him to the jail and gets the reward, which is later taken from him by the judge, who convicts him for carrying concealed weapons.

Brand Blotters—(TWO REELS)—ECLAIR—SEPTEMBER 9.—Melissy Lee is loved by Jack Flatray, the sheriff, but because of a well aimed trick of his rival, Boone, Melissy coolly refuses to have anything more to do with him. Boone is secretly in league with the famous brand blotters, captained by Black McQueen. The latter kidnaps Melissy and imprisons her in the mountains. Boone becomes jealous of McQueen, and is killed by his leader. McQueen gets the sheriff into his power in order to force Melissy into marriage. At the point of a gun, McQueen forces the parson to marry him and Melissy. He then starts to leave the country with the girl. Flatray has struggled himself free, and on the bank of a precipice the two men meet. Black McQueen is forced over the edge, and the two lovers watch his body fall into the seething waters below.

A Leap For Life—RODEO—SEPTEMBER 9.—Williams takes his daughter, Lillian, west, to see the country where he made his fortune. In the early days, Williams had procured a mine, then thought worthless, from Jose, a Mexican, who eagerly swapped his claim for a burro. Soon after, Williams struck it rich. Twenty years later, Jose is a keeper of a dance hall. He recognizes Williams on his return, and avenges what he considers an unfair trade, by binding Lillian to the seat of an empty stage coach, and starting the driverless horses plunging down a steep pass. Frank Broadhurst, a young man from the East, pursues the runaway stage. Lillian manages to break her bonds, and as the horses head for a broken bridge, she narroly escapes death by leaping into Broadhurst's car. Jose, afraid for his life, staggers over a cliff to his doom.

The Father—(Two Reels)—Reliance—September 11.—Bill Kenare, second-story man, is sent to jail for seven years, by Charles Spaulding, a wealthy manufacturer. Spaulding takes pity on Kenare's wife and child. He adopts Henry, two years old, and employs the mother as nurse. Kenare escapes before his time and joins a band of gypsy kidnapers. Anxious to get even with the man who sent him to prison, Kenare agrees to steal the rich manufacturer's little son, as he supposes Henry to be. In the guise of a blind vagabond, he meets the child and beguiles him with wonderful stories of a gypsy's adventures. On the day set for Henry's capture, Kenare chances upon his wife on the Spaulding grounds, and learns the boy's identity. Overcome by the realization of his own son's narrow escape, Kenare returns to serve out his term.

The final scene shows a happy reconciliation and the real beginning of their honeymoon.

Sh—h! Don't Wake the Baby!—Rex—September 7.—Mr. Youngparent has had his watch picked by Honest Bill while coming home in the 'bus. The Youngparent's baby is afflicted with insomnia and it requires an exhaustive amount of toil to put the baby to sleep. Not long after the child has succumbed to the strains of the Victrola and papa's rocking, Honest Bill enters. The baby is on the point of howling again, and in desperation, Bill walks the floor with the unruly infant and in time it goes to sleep again. Bill is discovered by the Youngparents. Mrs. Youngparent tiptoes to the phone and calls the police station. A policeman enters (on tiptoe) and arrests Bill (in whispers). Later the Youngparents find the stolen watch clutched tightly in baby's hand. The youngster had grabbed the watch from Bill's pocket during the putting-to-sleep process.

Vendetta in a Hospital—(Three Reels)—L-Ko—September 8.—Featuring Billie Ritchie as one of the three suitors who try to serenade the girl at the same time. The result is such that two of them take refuge in a shed. The shed is blown down and the refugees are hurt. The ambulance which is taking them to the hospital runs over the only uninjured suitor, Billie, and he too, is taken to the hospital, where he becomes friendly with a fat gentleman who suffers from an over indulgence of liquor. This adds considerably to the confusion which ends up in an explosion.

Silk Hose and High Pressure—(Three Reels)—September 8.—The actress-wife gives a party to her former associates, and Bill and Mr. Jowlish, two chronic flirts, try to horn in on the revelry. Her husband also thinks that he is going to have a quiet little party with Violet Vere de Vere, the soubrette, but she invites him to the same one his wife is giving. The killing starts with mere pistols, but branches out until fire hoses, silk hoses, cops, explosions, geysers and volcanoes are in the itinerary. Never since have the bachelors flirted, nor the wife given parties, and never since has the police captain talked to actresses.

The Finest Gold—Big U—September 9.—Featuring Murdock MacQuarrie as "Scrooge" MacQuoil, an old miser who turns his son out of his home because his marriage to Maude is against his wishes. Three years later the son is killed and his wife has an unequal struggle to support herself and her little child. In despertation she calls on the old man to ask his aid. At first he refuses to listen to her, but he catches a glimpse of the child's golden curls and his heart softens when he compares it with the glittering hoard he has scrimped and saved. He is also won over by the mother's devotion to her baby and clasps both mother and baby to his breast.

Both Sides of Life—(Three Reels)—Laemmle—September 9.—Paul Thorne, a young theological student is an indifferent lover of Blanche. The pair have a quarrel and separate. Blanche moves to the city, marries, and is soon lost in the whirl of society. Paul comes to the city to accept a pastorate. Ella, a waif of circumstance, breaks her thralldom in the slums, and becomes maid to Blanche. The latter boasts that she can bring any man to her feet, and, on a dare, says she will ensnare the new minister, if given time. The old temptation nearly overcomes the minister, but better self finally gets the ascendency. He is filled with revenge, and returns to the house in a rage to punish the woman who has led him so far from the straight and narrow path. In a fit of anger he is about to plunge a paper knife into Blanche, when his hand is stayed by Ella. Blanche is forgiven and the minister's heart goes out to the little maid who has saved his soul from destruction.

Crime's Triangle—(Two Reels)—Imp—September 10.—Written and produced by King Baggot, who appears as John Small, the bank cashier who quarrels with his wife because of her extravagance. Her brother, Harold, asks her for some money after John leaves for the bank. Unable to get any from her, Harold decides to ask John for the amount. At the bank Harold makes use of his opportunity to steal from John's cash drawer. That night he confesses that he has stolen the money, and that he lost it gambling. John is about to drink poison, but is halted by the stealthy entrance of the assistant cashier, who by mistake drinks the poison and dies. The theft is laid to him as the assistant has embezzled other funds. John's wife repents of her extravagant living. Subsequently the cashier returns the amount that caused all the unhappiness.

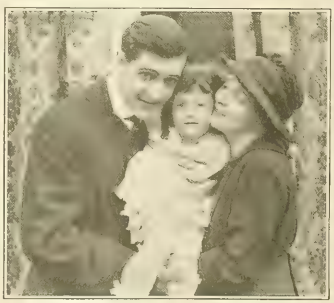
He Fell in a Cabaret—NESTOR—SEPTEMBER 10.—Featuring Lee Moran. Harold, a young divinity student, is instructed to investigate the cabarets. He takes as his pilot a college chum. Harold makes up his mind that Mazie, the singer, must be saved. The chum becomes alarmed and wires Harold's father to come to the place immediately, lest his son be led astray. Both father and mother arrive. Harold watches Mazie and father and mother watch him, while the chum watches for a chance to have Mazie to himself. One is more surprised than the other when Mazie invites them all to come and see her family of eight beautiful children.

The Country Circus—VICTOR—SEPTEMBER 10.—Claribel watches the circus parade from the window and is enraptured with the sight. Her nurse puts her to bed, telling her that "circuses are only for boys, and not for girls." Claribel has a wonderful dream. Dressed as a boy she visits the circus and has an exciting time watching the animals and talking with the trainers and performers. Just as she is about to jump on the back of the balky mule she falls out of bed and awakes to find it all a mere dream.

In the Sunset Country—(THREE REELS)—BISON—SEPTEMBER 11.—Nan Thorpe, the parson's daughter, is loved by both Kal



McCloud and Four-Ace Baker. Kal has been a road agent practically all his life but to please Nan he attends church and is reformed. He is also directly responsible for the large congregation at church every Sunday. Four-Ace proposes to Nan and she refuses him only because she feels indebted to Kal. The latter asks her to become his wife and she consents. The girl writes a letter announcing the wedding to be, and sends it by mail to Baker. When Kal learns that she is in love with Four-Ace, and is told of the letter, he holds up the stage coach and takes the mail pouch. The posse arrives and Kal is mortally shot. He dies just after tearing up the letter.

At the Beach Incognito—JOKER—SEPTEMBER 11.—Reggie Astorbilt and his beautiful wife arrive at the beach for a nice quiet time. In order to secure peace from the curious and overbearing crowd, they assume the disguise of two country rubes. Their carpet bag gets mixed with that of two genuine rubes and matters become so serious that they eventually have to be straightened out at "headquarters." Rudolph "The Rat," whose eye covets anything that resembles a roll of bills, and who is the cause of much of the distress, is finally apprehended by the arm of the law.

The Last Word—LAEMMLE—SEPTEMBER 12.—Featuring Daddy Manley. Dad has been of invaluable service to the Kripps News Service for years. The new manager is a believer in young blood and insists that he be removed. Dad's associates at the office subscribe to a fund, and, unknown to the new manager, inform the old man that he is to be retired with a pension. They install a wire from the telegraph room to Dad's little room, and each evening bid him good night. By accident the old man learns that he is really an object of charity, and dies from the shock. That evening the men are worried when they receive no response to their message to him. At his room they find him seated at the instrument with a smile on his face.

Agnes Kempler's Sacrifice—(TWO REELS)—REX—SEPTEMBER 12.—Tom Wren marries Agnes Kempler, a model in a department store. Tom is sent to the West Virginia coal mines to look after his family's interests. One day, while figuring out a new road in the mountains, the machine breaks down and Tom is forced to stay out all night with Ella, the daughter of a mountaineer. The latter forces Tom to marry his daughter. When Agnes learns of Ella's baby, she renounces her claims as a wife in favor of the wife and baby. Agnes becomes an outcast and later is arrested for vagrancy. Ella dies, and through Mrs. Wren's connection with an uplift league, Agnes and Tom are again brought together.

Feature Programs

Metro

The Soul of a Woman—(FIVE REELS)—METRO.—Featuring Emily Stevens. The wife is driven into the streets by her unreasonable husband. Unable to support her baby, she leaves it on the doorstep of a monastery. She then lives by the "easiest way." Seventeen years later the boy decides to see the world before becoming a priest. He wanders into a cafe called "the house of lost souls," which is conducted by his mother. She recognizes him, and without disclosing her identity, advises him to return to the monastery. Years later he is the pastor of a church. During a storm an old woman enters the church. The priest comforts her, for she is in a dying condition from want. Though she longs to call him her son, she remains silent and dies in the priest's arms. For a longer review see another page of this issue.

North American

The Soul Stranglers—CHAPTER TWENTY OF "THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY"—(TWO REELS)—AMERICAN.—All of the principals have splendid opportunities in this latest installment of this serial. Esther finds her way to the home of John Powell and sees the man she has come so far to seek, though later she is driven from the house, and Powell, when he recovers from the drug administered to him, is told that he has only dreamed that he saw Esther. A circus billposter finds the diamond where it was left in a previous chapter, near a beehive, and later is killed when a tree falls on him. The diamond is stolen by his companion who bears it away. thage, her home town. At a matinee she is swept off her feet by the matinee idol qualities of Cyril Adair, a handsome young stage hero. After a short time Adair finds to his surprise that Phyllis is quite ready to run away with him and marries her. Adair is discharged and secures a new and better position, but he is again discharged through the influence of Phyllis' father. Later her father, realizing Adair's good qualities, backs a new play and a brilliant career is open for the young actor. For a longer review see another page of this issue.—J. C. G.

Paramount

Helene of the North—(Five Reels)—Famous Players.—Marguerite Clark featured as Miss Deering who during the course of a large house party tells her life history of how she lived for years in the wilds of Canada and there met Ralph Connel, a young member of the Northwest mounted police. Connel's uncle told her that she is a half-breed. A marriage was supposed to have taken place between Pierre, a half-breed Canadian, and the girl. The Curé insisted upon Ralph being a witness to the marriage and also read the marriage ceremony in Latin. Connel answered the questions which should have been responded to by Pierre, so in reality Helene and Ralph were married, but Helene did not know of this and left with Pierre. After her father died she came back to her own people in England. At the termination of the girl's story Lord Traverse, the guest of honor, arrives and when the hostess asks Helene if she has ever met Lord Traverse, the young man smiles and replies: "I believe I have met my wife before." For a longer review, see another page, this issue.

The Majesty of the Law—(Five Reels)—Bosworth.—George Fawcett featured as Judge Randolph Kent, whose son, moved by a noble impulse, assumes the guilt of a theft committed by another. The judge presides over the court in which his son is tried. Though his heart is almost breaking, the judge is, to outward appearances, calm and stern. Duty forces him to sentence his son to ten years in jail. But before he is taken from the court room, the actual thief appears and makes a confession which establishes the son's innocence. For a longer review, see another page of this issue.

Pathe

The Silent Chord—(Three Reels)—Pathe.—A "Victory" film, produced by the Pathe Italian Studios. Harry Wilson, a "black sheep," is disinherited by his father. He is arrested for passing counterfeit money and sentenced to a long term of imprisonment. Fifteen years pass. His younger sister, Edith, marries James Griffin. Harris is released. He attempts to rob the Griffin home. He and Edith recognize each other. Griffin is ignorant of the fact that Edith has a brother and becomes suspicious when he hears that she often visits a poor section of the city, where she speaks with a middle-aged man. Through his jealousy Harry is shot. Then Griffin learns the truth. Harry recovers and is welcomed into the Griffin household.

The Flash—(Episode Ten "Romance of Elaine")—(Two Reels)—Pathe.—Del Mar, the foreign agent, is trapped in this episode by Jameson who, finding that Del Mar is seeking some plans which he once had in his possession, but which later Professor Arnold conveyed to Elaine, sets a camera in Elaine's home in such a position that when anyone attempts to secure the plans a flashlight powder will be discharged and the intruder's features registered by the camera. Del Mar escapes from the house, but leaves behind the evidence in the camera upon which Elaine and Jameson are about to act when the episode ends. N. G. C.

Pathe News No. 67—Pathe—August 21.—Crowds gather at Marietta, Ga., scene of lynching of Leo Frank, to see the rope by which he was hung; White Star liner Arabic, which was torpedoed and sunk by a German submarine, shown as she left New York City on her last voyage; the Indians of El Paso, Texas, celebrate feast of their patron saint, San Lorenzo; pictures showing the only baby zebra ever born in Central Park Zoo, New York; Mark Axe, an eighty-year-old Crimean sergeant, and Johnny Barlow, aged six, doing a little bit of work in the British army, Manchester, England; animated cartoon by W. C. Morris; giant twelve-inch disappearing coast defense guns which guard the Golden Gate at San Francisco are tested at Fort Winfield Scott.

The Prima Donna—(Three Reels)—Pathe.—A famous film actress marries a wealthy young spendthrift. Though she is in ill health he urges her to accept a flattering offer from a theatrical manager. Her unselfish love spurs her on. She discovers that her husband is not true to her, and leaves him. Some time later the film producers have a play in which they wish to star her. The prima donna is found in a charity hospital. She agrees to play the leading part in the picture, against the advice of the doctors. While acting a scene based on an incident in her own life she drops dead. Esther Nielson is featured. The picture is splendidly produced. T. C. K.

A Merry Chase—Pathe.—A Heinie and Louie comedy which is all that its title claims for it. Heine gets a job as janitor. At the end of the day the boss pays off and informs him that he need not bother about coming back the next day. Heinie returns to the office for his pay, which he left on the desk. He finds a burglar there and is about to call the police when the boss comes in, and accuses him of the attempted robbery. Heinie jumps out the window and fortunately lands on Louie. The boss phones to the police station—then comes the chase.

Colonel Heeza Liar, At the Bat—(Split Reel)—Pathe.—Animated cartoon from the Bray Studios. The Colonel is bored and gloomy until he suddenly remembers that there is to be a ball game. In his runabout he speeds to the park, arriving just when the local pitcher is all-in. He takes up the task of pitching the home team to victory. The ride to the park, the baffling curves he pitches, and his wonderful batting, are screams. All the other incidents, and there are many, are laughs. On the same reel with:

The Wonders of Bird Life—Pathe.—The carrier-pigeon shown from the time it emerges from the shell through its training to carry messages, makes an entertaining and instructive subject for pictures.

The Picturesque Falls of French Guiana—(Split Reel)—Pathe.—A beautifully tinted senic of the numerous water falls in this tropical French possession. On the same reel with:

Marcenay Fish Ponds—Pathe.—Feeding and caring for the fish are shown among other views of the well-known fish preserve in France.

Pressing His Suit—Pathe—Kate, the scrubwoman, is in love with Toot. She is jealous when he leaves her to visit Sally, and writes a note telling him that she has committeed suicide. He returns home and finds what he believes to be Kate's body standing head down in a barrel of water. He sees her ghost every place he goes. So glad is he on finding that she is still alive that he offers to make good his promise to marry her.

Terribly Stuck-up — Pathe — Dottie meets Lonesome Luke and believes him to be the ideal of her dreams. Dottie has many admirers. Luke considers it best to deal with his rivals at long range; a brick being one of his favorite weapons. His methods prove efficient and ere long he has Dottie all to himself.

The Sierra Nevada Mountains—(Split Reel)—Pathe—Several beautiful panoramic views of the impressive Sierras. On same reel with:

Bois de Boulogne—Scenes in Pathecolor of this world-famed park. All the points of interest and beauty are shown, including many views of the park, the Chateau de Longchamp and the Longchamp Meadow.

Pathe News No. 68—Pathe—August 24.—Fitted with a roof garden, a kitchen and shower baths, a modern Noah's Ark on wheels starts for the Pacific Coast with the Conklin family from Huntington, L. I.; floats are exhibited in a pageant of film trade held at Coney Island, N. Y.; Secretary Lansing received the Brazilian and Guatemalan ministers to Mexico at Washington, D. C.; a border patrol of United States calvary watching the Rio Grande to prevent violation of American territory by Mexican revolutionists; 47,000 fans swarm in the ball ground to Boston, Mass.; leading American dressmakers display their fall styles at New York City; a new sixty-ton caisson to be used in the construction of the $800,000 bridge across the Tennessee river is launched at Chattanooga, Tenn.

Pathe News No. 69—Pathe—August 28.—Damage estimated at over $15,000,000 and loss of a score of lives are the results of a tropical hurricane that strikes Galveston, Texas; many boats used to rescue families cut off by the floods, St. Louis, Mo.; biggest baby parade at famous Atlantic coast resort, Asbury Park, N. J.; short range 12-inch mortars which make a formidable defense for the city of New York, fired for the first time in several years; U. S. S. Tennessee before sailing for Haiti takes up supplies and ammunition at Philadelphia, Pa.; Miss Ine Hayden, declared the most popular girl of Wenatchee, Wash., is adopted by the Blackfeet Indians as a member of their tribe; Atlantic fleet arrives at Boston to be inspected by governors of United States.

A Mix-Up for Maisie—PATHE.—An amusing slap-stick comedy in which Lonesome Luke and Shorty spare themselves no pains to win the favor of Maisie, the pretty waitress of a "popular priced" beanery. But their attention, well meant as they are, only makes trouble for the fair one.

Monkey Shines—PATHE.—Heinie and Louie sell their broken down horse and with the proceeds purchase a boot polishing stand. The first customer wears white shoes, but that fact makes no difference to Louie, who uses black polish. Two young ladies enter. Heinie discovers a roll of bills in the stocking of one. He cuts the hose and removes the money. When the girl discovers her loss she calls the police. The pals are arrested. They make their escape from prison, and win out in the chase which follows.

The Galloper—(FIVE REELS)—PATHE.—Starring Clifton Crawford in a picturization of the novel by Richard Harding Davis. On board the steamer Cope Schuyler learns that the girl he has just met and fallen in love with is on her way to Greece, where she is to be a Red Cross nurse in one of the field hospitals. He changes his mind about going to Africa and follows her. In Athens he is informed that he cannot go any nearer to the field hospitals without a war correspondent's pass. He decides to impersonate "The Galloper," a famous war correspondent who has reasons for giving up his job. Cope learns these reasons soon enough. At the front he is arrested and sentenced to be shot, because the Greeks did not like the way the Galloper treated them in the last war. Cope overcome a number of obstacles previous to this and he gets away with his life and the girl too. For a longer review see another page of this issue.—T. C. R.

Neal of the Navy—CHAPTER TWO, ENTITLED "THE YELLOW PACKET"—(TWO REELS)—PATHE-BALBOA—Hernandez and Ponto learn the whereabouts of Annette. Inez, their accomplice, pretends to be injured and is cared for in the home of Mrs. Hardin, who has adopted the girl. Inez learns that the packet containing the location of Lost Island is still in Annette's possession. The South Americans attempt to smuggle some contraband into the country. Neal Hardin captures them. One of the officers from the U. S. S. Seattle advises Neal to enter Annapolis. Ponto and Hernandez are put in prison. The Brute-Man, their mentally deficient accomplice, breaks the prison bars and the South Americans escape. For a longer review see another page of this issue.

In Dahomey—(SPLIT REEL)—PATHE.—An educational scenic, showing the manners and customs of this kingdom in Africa. A Dahomey orchestra gives a concert in view of the camera. One look at the various instruments makes one feel that a Dahomey orchestra should be seen and not heard. The throne is supported by the skulls of four enemies of the reigning King's ancestors. On the same reel with:

Picturesque Java—PATHE.—A scenic showing views of rare natural beauty.

Universal Special

A Cry in the Dark—(TWELFTH INSTALLMENT OF "THE BROKEN COIN")—UNIVERSAL—SEPTEMBER 6.—The King of Grahoffen is angry because he cannot start an immediate war with Gretzhoffen and its ruler, and blames Count Sashio for the loss of the coin. At police headquarters Roleaux is given the third degree in regard to the murder committed in Kitty's room. The chief finaliy issues orders to allow Roleaux to escape and to have him followed. In the hotel, Roleaux sees an apache leave Kitty's room and follows him. Roleaux keeps close watch, unaware of the two gendarmes twenty feet behind him. Kitty learns from headquarters that Roleaux is being tracked into the lower parts of the city, and so, also, does Frederick, who hears her receive the message. Kitty leaves the hotel for the apache's den, remembering their part in the murder. Frederick follows her, and another apache who has been watching, shadows them both. Blanc, the chief of the apaches, returns to the dive just as one of his men sees Roleaux and makes a grab for him. Roleaux, unaware of the two, awaits a chance to enter the room. Blanc draws his gun and fires at Roleaux.

A Little Brother of the Rich—(FIVE REELS)—BROADWAY UNIVERSAL—SEPTEMBER 6.—Featuring Hobart Bosworth. Henry Leamington, whose weakness for drink has always interfered with his career on the stage, is in love with Sylvia Castle, whom he has helped to secure a Broadway engagement. He has determined to quit drinking to please her. While she has a strong friendship for her benefactor, Sylvia does not love him and refuses to become his wife. An old friend, to whom she had formerly been engaged, is still the object of her love. This makes Leamington jealous. On the night of the opening performance his jealousy becomes uncontrollable and he starts to drink. Though he has already consumed a quantity of whiskey, he braces himself when he learns that Sylvia has decided to marry him. Leamington plays his part perfectly and as a result of the first performance, Sylvia is established as a stage star. For a longer review, see another page, this issue.

"The Impostor"—(Five Reels)—Brady—Featuring Jose Collins. Sir Anthony tries to purchase his brother's share of the family estate. His brother, who is now known as Blink, decides to live in America. Sir Anthony sails to America on his own yacht and anchors off the coast where Blink is living. The "Tearer," a forlorn social outcast, is astonished when she sees Sir Anthony. He later drops dead and the brother impersonates him and returns to England. The "Tearer" secures a nurse's costume and sails with him. When Blink arrives he sees the conditions of all there are bettered, and later the "Tearer," now known as Miss Gibson, and Blink are married. For a longer review see another page of this issue.

Poor Schmaltz—(Five Reels)—World—August 23.—Sam Bernard featured. Schmaltz finds that he can pass without difficulty for the Count Himmeldorf by merely shaving off his beard. He does this and goes to call on the rich Mr. Mocheimer to present his application for his daughter's hand. The girl learns of the plan of her father to present her to the supposed count and she and her lover have the cook meet the count in the guise of an heiress. In the midst of Schmaltz' tender love making Miss Mocheimer's lover runs out and tells a policeman that his sweetheart is being made love to by a sentimental count. By this time the "Queen of the Reds" passionately in love with Schmaltz, goes and tells the real count that Schmaltz is masquerading in the former's identity. The real and bogus counts meet and arrange a duel. Eventually the matter is straightened out and Schmaltz is reconciled to his sweetheart.

Paramount Convention Rouses Enthusiasm

GREAT "GET-TOGETHER" SESSIONS

PARAMOUNT Pictures were paramount to everything else in Chicago on Thursday, Friday and Saturday of last week, for a little army of Paramount executives, manufacturers, directors, publicity chiefs, exchange men and salesmen invaded the Windy City, established headquarters at the Hotel LaSalle and proceeded to "get together" in a fashion they have never done before.

From East and West and North and South the Paramount clan assembled and the man who paid Geraldine Farrar's salary hobnobbed with the salesman who never heard of Geraldine Farrar until she was signed by Jesse Lasky, while the advertising head of the Paramount organization, who buys space at $10,000 a buy, told the exchangemen from the rural precincts, who thinks he's spending a lot when he takes a two-inch ad in the Evening Bugle, all about it.

Each and every one of them was enthusiastic over Paramount films, however, and the first Paramount convention ever held adjourned at a late hour Saturday night, after everybody had been pumped full of new vim and enthusiasm for the organization from which he draws his salary, and its products. It was a real convention from every standpoint and it even had its daily newspaper, a breezy little sheet which announced on its editorial page that it was edited by "Everybody," though Tarleton Winchester was the man who burned the midnight oil getting it ready for the presses.

The first session was called to order at 11 o'clock on Thursday morning by President W. W. Hodkinson who welcomed the gathering and spoke as follows:

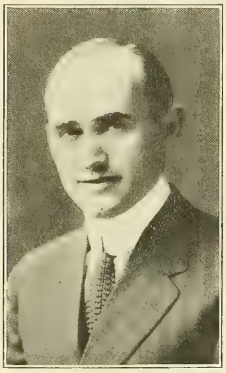
"According to the program for the first day, I am down for an address of welcome at 9:30, but we were so late in getting started that my address will be very brief. I will state what this meeting is called for, and will then have each of you introduce yourselves to the rest. Then I will introduce the gentlemen on my right who are our producers, and they will take up the rest of the morning covering our proposition from their viewpoint. We will have the producers address you first so that we won't interfere with their plans, as they cannot stay throughout the entire meeting.

"Now the purpose of the meeting, of course, is to get closer together, and to get better acquainted with each other and with the Paramount proposition. I think that we will accomplish a great deal by coming in contact with each other during the three days that we will be here, so I will not take up your time or the time allotted to the producers any further than to ask that beginning on my right the first gentleman will stand up and give his name and the exchange that he is connected with. In this way you will all learn each other's identity quicker than in any other way that I can think of. It will serve as a general introduction."

When this novel method of introduction had been completed Mr. Hodkinson continued:

"I have a message from Mr. Zukor, who was to be the first to address the meeting, but inasmuch as he is not here, I will call on Mr. Samuel Goldfish of the Lasky Company, to give you a talk. I have a message from Mr. Zukor stating that owing to the absence of Messrs. Frohman, Porter and others, he finds it impossible, on account of business matters, to join us. He says he was detained at the last moment. He regrets that he cannot be present at the convention in person, but he is in spirit. He says that we have his heartiest support, and that he is more than gratified to be associated with the gentlemen here present today."

The following telegram from Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players Film Company, was then read:



"Paramount Convention, La Salle Hotel, Chicago, Ill.: I am very sorry indeed that unforeseen conditions prevent me from attending the Paramount convention, but I wish to take this means of communicating to you and all others present my congratulations upon the splendid results you have obtained during the first Paramount year, my great admiration for the effective manner in which you have overcome the numerous obstacles that beset you in the distributing branch of the industry, and my sincere hope that your future activities in this direction secure even greater and more complete success. I wish to take advantage of this opportunity to publicly commend the untiring and ceaseless personal endeavors of W. W. Hodkinson and Raymond Pawley toward the constant advancement of the Paramount program, their devoted labors, combined with the efforts of Messrs. Hiram Abrams, William L. Sherry and James A. Steele, and aided by the unusually efficient and loyal membership of the Paramount organization have given the industry an example of achievement in national film distribution unsurpassed in all the annals of the screen and have created a distribution system that may not only never be excelled but that may never be equaled. It is the earnest desire and the determined purpose of the Famous Players Film Company to bend every effort and exert every power within our possession to cooperate most fully and in every direction with the Paramount Pictures corporation and to produce only subjects of such unquestioned merit as to further facilitate their distribution. With the plays which we now have in course of preparation and production, and the long list of favorite stars under exclusive contract with us we are certain to continue a standard consistent with the highest ideals of the Paramount program. We have recently purchased a large tract of ground in Upper Manhattan upon which we will erect the most complete groups of studio and laboratory buildings ever devoted to the production of motion pictures. In order that we may produce Paramount pictures under the most favorable conditions and with the greatest advantages that can be secured at all times and in every manner, you can depend upon the whole-hearted and earnest support and co-operation of myself and associates, Messrs. Daniel Frohman and Edwin S. Parker.

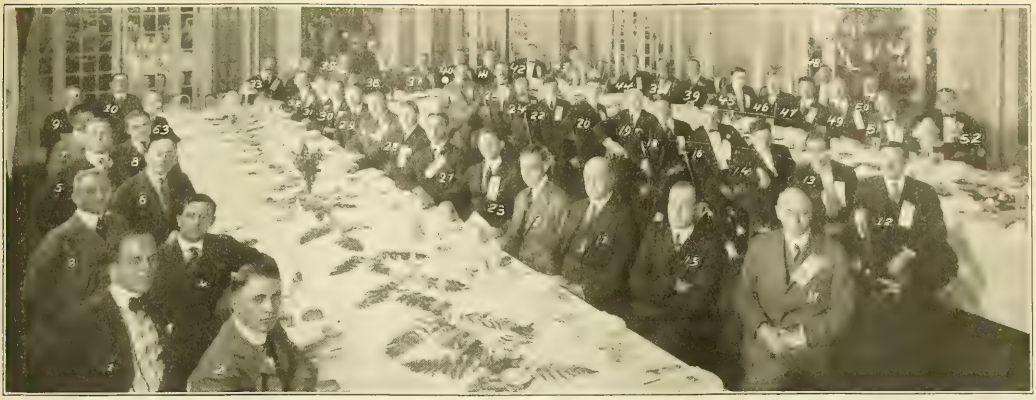
Adolph Zukor."

Samuel G. Goldfish, executive head of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, was then introduced by Mr. Hodkinson and made the following interesting address:

"I want to thank you for giving me this opportunity of being present here today to congratulate you in person on the great work you have done for the first year of Paramount's existence. Not only am I proud, but I feel that every one of you gentlemen should be as proud as I am, and, believe me, if you are, you will be 'some proud' of your organization, not only in New York City, but all over the United States. It is quite different today from what it was a year ago. I will be perfectly frank with you. I must admit that I, myself, had no more faith in you than some of the exhibitors had throughout the United States. I thought your ideas were not quite what they ought to be, and I did not believe the thing was going to work out in the way it actually has proven.

Sam'l G. Goldfish.

"To give you an example just how exhibitors throughout the United States talked to us, as producers, some time ago I met Marcus Loew and honestly, he was the worst knocker you had in any part of the country. He thought Paramount was wrong, its officers were wrong and its pictures were wrong, and its policies were the worst that ever come into the picture business. He used to say to me: 'It is perfectly ridiculous to think that you can revolutionize this business in a day. Your policies are too drastic. Who is going to pay four weeks in advance?' He would not play the pictures.



"The other day Mr. Zukor, Mr. Lasky, Mr. DeMille and myself had lunch with him at the Knickerbocker Hotel, just after he had signed the contract for forty-two solid days' booking. He is one of the biggest exhibitors in the country. I said to him, 'What do you think of the program?' and he said, 'I will tell you frankly I don't have to look at it. If the Paramount will accept my booking, I will take what they give me, and I want to tell you, if your pictures were 25 per cent worse than anyone else in the country, we would book through the Paramount,' and I looked at him, and I said, 'Don't let friendship interfere in this thing,' and he said, 'No, it is not friendship, but it is their method of doing business. It is their reliability. We can take their word for whatever they say.'

"Now, I want to say, gentlemen, that ninety-nine per cent of the exhibitors that I have been talking to recently—and Mr. Lasky has just returned from California, and Mr. DeMille reports from the Coast—ninety-nine per cent of the exhibitors throughout the United States feel that way about Paramount. They feel that they can take your word for what you say, and I want to say to you that when you have a foundation like that, fifty per cent of your battle is won, and the other fifty per cent you have got to give in pictures. If you can make good to that extent, you can do twenty-five per cent worse today than the other fellow does and still retain every exhibitor you have, because they have confidence in you. Do you know that today an exhibitor seems to feel about you as they do about going into a department store and picking up an article, and they say, 'That is worth 25 cents,' and they know there is no use arguing about it.

"Now, you know, to get that element injected in the picture business, is doing something. Therefore, I think you have not only done great things, but you have done wonderful things, and I feel that no matter how good a producer tries to make his pictures, he cannot make them too good when he realizes that he has a distributing organization like yours, and I want to say to you that you look good to me, and I love to see the spirit which has been manifested by everyone present here today. Every one of you gentlemen looks like a fighter, and I want to tell you that you have got to be some fighter to measure up to what you have in New York at the executive end.

"Mr. Hodkinson, Mr. Pawley and I have had some tough fights. I did not always agree with their methods. I did not always believe in the things they did. There were times when I thought he was a little bit—well, I didn't think he was all there. But I want to say to you gentlemen that I consider him the greatest man in the motion picture industry today.

"Now, we have been receiving statements from the Paramount organization every single week for fifty-two weeks. Price, Waterhouse have been going over your books all over the United States. We have not found one mistake or one complaint. We have not found any case where any distributor or any exchange of the Paramount organization ever tried to take advantage of a single penny. Now, that is an organization for you.

"Don't you really think that when the producers see these things there is an incentive to go ahead and do things?

"Now, I want to give you an idea of what we think of the Paramount organization. For eight months we tried to secure the services of Miss Geraldine Farrar. Everybody in the United States has tried to secure her services and it was only through the influence of David Belasco, who has been associated with us, that we were able to accomplish this. Before she decided to go into the pictures she went through the picture houses in the City of New York and she went through them with a fine tooth comb, to see what were the best pictures in America, and the reason she came with us was because she thought we would show her to the greatest advantage.

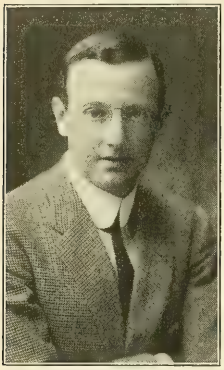
"After the pictures were finished, a gentleman, who is a very big man in the motion picture world, who was in California at the time and who happened to be invited by Mr. Lasky and Mr. DeMille to see the first picture of Geraldine Farrar, not 'Carmen,' but 'Maria Rose,' came back to New York City to see me, and offered us $125,000 advance on the same percentage we were receiving from the Paramount to let him have the Geraldine Farrar picture. He didn't get it.

"Remember, what we are giving you today is not anything like what we are going to show you in the next three months or the next six months to come. It is nothing at all compared with what we are going to give you, because we are just getting our bearings.

"There is a certain scenario department in which a little girl that gets $50 a week, or $25, writes the scenarios for eight people. We have four directors working. We have people like William C. DeMille, Marion Fairbanks, Cecil B. DeMille, Hector Turnbull and Margaret Turnbull. That is what we think of the scenario.

"Do you know the other day I invited Mr. Hodkinson to see a picture, Lou Telligen in 'The Explorer.' He sat through the picture and didn't say anything. I didn't think that he liked it, but when it was over he said: 'Why that is like reading a book.' That's what we all want Paramount Pictures to be, just like reading a book.

"Don't think, because you are given Lasky pictures, and they say they are good, that it is just a piece of luck that they are good, because we have a man like Wilfred Buckland, with Belasco for years, to whom we pay $25,000 a year, and give him an interest in the pictures, who does nothing but see that the scenery is correct, that the girl is dressed properly and every detail in the taking of the pictures is correct.



"If any of our pictures is not right, you will never see it. We have got negatives today for which you can name your own price and we will give them to you. You will never see them.

"Another thing I want to say, gentlemen, while you are here, and that is that I sincerely hope that you will, amongst yourselves, tomorrow or the next day, discuss our faults. We know we have a great many shortcomings, and I think that you are the men that can tell us them, because you come in close contact with the exhibitors, and they tell you what is right and what is wrong and I am sure when the exhibitor talks to you, most of the things are wrong, and we want to hear about it, and we welcome your suggestions. I thank you."

When Mr. Goldfish had concluded his speech Jesse L. Lasky was introduced to the convention and made the following address:

"What Mr. Goldfish has anticipated me in saying carries out my ideas. I am glad to have heard from Mr. Goldfish. He is one of the very good reasons for our success. A lot of you gentlemen stood up and announced your names for the purpose of identification, and your homes. My name has been announced, but my home I cannot locate. I think it is the California Limited, No. 3, Santa Fe. I am particularly sorry that Mr. Zukor is not here today, but I will take it upon myself to say a few words in his behalf. I have been in New York for about a month, and have been in daily consultation with him, so I think I know his ideas as well as he knows them himself, so if you will take them second hand, I will give them to you.

Jesse L. Lasky.

"Mr. Zukor was particularly pleased to hear that this meeting was to take place, and he was one of the first to suggest that we manufacturers address you gentlemen. He thought that the idea of meeting and getting together and knowing each other and of getting criticisms and suggestions was an excellent one. The point, in particular, that impressed me was the opportunity of getting suggestions and advice from you gentlemen.

"Now, we think that we are the greatest producers in the world, because thinking that makes us work all the harder. One thing we lack, however, is individual, honest criticism.

"We don't want praise. We will get plenty of praise, but what we want are suggestions or criticisms, and if every one of you will make some suggestion, make notes of your suggestions now and then and let us have them, it will be invaluable. You gentlemen have come from California, Portland, and the far corners of various states, and from Canada, and if you will only make one suggestion, and the suggestion comes to us and we can carry it out, just see what you gentlemen will be doing. We want your help. My own view is that they want modern drama with as much action and vim and punch as can be put into it, and we are producing our plays accordingly.

"Now every one of you gentlemen, as Mr. Goldfish has said, seems to be a fighter, and after having met you, when we go back to the studio, to the grind, I think we will go back with new vigor. We have met you and know you, and you know us, and now we will try and show you what we can do. Whatever we have done in the past is well enough, but we want to do much better, and we have got to make good. We feel that men of your type demand something better, and we are going to try and give it to you.

"When I was at the coast I became very closely associated with Mr. Morosco and also with Mr. Garbutt of the Pallas Company, and they are also becoming very keen to improve their organization, and they also want criticisms and suggestions.

"A thing that occurs to me is the name 'Paramount.' At one of the meetings I asked Mr. Hodkinson why in the world he chose the name 'Paramount.' I said, 'Why didn't you get a good name. Paramount doesn't mean anything,' and he said, 'I think it is a fine name.' None of us liked it. None of us cared for that name. He said, 'Say it over and over, and get used to it,' and it naturally came to me, and the first thing I said was, 'Whoever chose Paramount, was a genius,' and believe me, he was.

"It is a wonderful trademark. It means the best in quality, and it means the highest, and we producers call the business of motion pictures an art, and it is an art. It is one of the foremost arts we have today. It ranks with literature and the art of painting and music, and incidentally it becomes the rival of music, and we take ourselves very seriously. We think we are making a sort of a low mark in the annals of theatrical history, and we are striving to give you the best that is in us, and some of us, and possibly all of us, lose sight of the dollars and cents.

"As an example of Paramount spirit, a girl of about twenty-four is driving a car, single handed across the continent, and it is not the best season of the year to do it. She is doing it in the name of Paramount. Now, a girl that can drive a car across the continent single handed is going some, and she will carry a message from the mayor of San Francisco to the mayor of New York, and if this girl can do that single handed, what are you gentlemen going to do with the program that is before you?

"After all, it is the spirit back of our organization that is making us successful. I feel that the Paramount is the biggest thing in the world. To me, it is bigger than the Standard Oil or the Steel trust. It is paramount. The picture industry is the fourth largest industry in America. I might say that it is on account of the type of our productions, but I will say that it is on account of you gentlemen, too.

"This is the telegram that I received from Anita King, the 'Paramount girl':

" 'I want to thank you for giving me the honor of being 'the Paramount Girl,' and I want to assure you that I am going to do my best to show my gratitude by telling everyone I meet on my long transcontinental trip how wonderful they are. I wish your convention all the success in the world. I left San Francisco this morning.'

"Now, I know that you gentlemen are not going to be beaten by a girl, and I know she will set you a good example. I would like to talk much longer, but the hour is late, and the subject has been so thoroughly covered by Mr. Goldfish, so I will close and thank you for your attention."

After the applause had subsided, following Mr. Lasky's address, President Hodkinson introduced the art director of the films, Cecil B. DeMille, who spoke as follows:

"When Mr. Hodkinson asked me to address you gentlemen, Mr. Goldfish looked very much worried. He said, 'Cecil, you had better just get up and bow, and I will say it all.' And he has. That's the point. He always does.

"We want to know what people think of our pictures. When somebody says 'It is rotten,' we know, but when somebody says, 'Yes, I saw it; it's a beautiful day, isn't it?' we are not sure. We don't know what the trouble is. If you could just let us know the things that you don't like about a picture and the things that you do, I will add that to Mr. Lasky's suggestion, because that is just as important to us, for if we work along the lines of the things that you do like, we can go along building and building on that line.

"We have a research department which is kept up at a considerable expense, that does nothing but go into the tiny little bits of details. It would be impossible for any one of you gentlemen or any other person in the world, practically, unless he is a scientist and a deep student of certain subjects, and practically all subjects, to get the final viewpoint and the final opinions that we get from all the departments and all the sources from which we draw our information.

"We don't criticise the tiny little bits of things that have in the past been the method of those criticising a picture. 'Twenty-five thousand dollars put into a picture!' 'Wonderfully acted.' 'Beautifully staged.' 'That guy had a ring on and he shouldn't have had it on.' That is criticism that we have met with, and it is unjust. Give us criticism on the drama. That is what we are trying to give you, good drama. It is a different viewpoint, by the way, the viewpoint of drama, from the old idea of the moving picture. People are through seeing, and being thrilled by seeing somebody do something on the screen. They don't care about it any more. What they are interested in is the drama or the comedy. 'The play's the thing,' and that is the point that we are trying to supply. That is why Mr. Goldfish said we have got a department of dramatists and playwrights.

"Two years ago, when we started to produce the 'Squaw Man,' and it was written into a few scenes, everybody said, 'Why, that guy is a nut. He is loony. He has got a hundred and twenty scenes for six reels. Why, he is crazy. They can't do it.' Why? Simply because it never had been done.

"In 'The Girl of the Golden West,' which I think is proving a fairly popular picture, there is one scene that is 720 feet long—the card game. It is new. It is different. Those are some of the things.

"I am no salesman. Mind you, I could not sell a rag doll to a little slum child if she had just been given a five dollar bill! I couldn't sell anything. I'm probably the worst salesman ever allowed to live because I don't know anything about it, but there are one or two points that mean a lot to us and we have tried to give them to you and I think you gentlemen will find value in using them as a means of sale.

"For instance, the artist Rembrandt died a very poor man because nobody plugged for him. He had a new idea. Everybody said, 'You have got to see the eyebrows; you have got to see the hair and the eyebrows; that is the only kind of a painting that is worth anything,' and Rembrandt, so far as the art of our photography is concerned, has been our god. We have tried to get the same effects of beauty that Rembrandt got, and to a certain extent, I think, you will agree with me, we are accomplishing it. It is different. It has got to be different, and you have got to call attention to it. You see a man with half a face, a flash of light coming from one side and everybody says, 'Oh!' They don't know why. It just strikes a chord. They feel it. They respond to it, so I think if you gentlemen will pick out and use those things, the things that make our pictures different from other pictures, and I am speaking of the Paramount when I say 'Our pictures,' the things that make them different from other pictures, the artistic side of them, there will be some results along an artistic line. I think you will appeal to a higher class of people. There are people now that the Paramount program has brought into the picture theater that turned up their noses at pictures two years ago. That we know. They wouldn't have anything to do with pictures, but because we are now giving them real art in drama and art in photography, art in lighting, in fact, new lighting entirely, they patronize the pictures, and I think you gentlemen will agree with me that it is worth plugging for.

"Now, if I am right, I would like to know it, because we spend thousands of dollars, and we spill our brains all over the place day and night. We are up working on these effects to get real beauty. That is to get a series of great paintings on the screen, and we can go Mr. Rembrandt one better because Mr. Rembrandt could not get drama, beyond one flash of it. We can combine the two, which the legitimate stage cannot do. They cannot get the painting side of it, because the light won't work right the second time. We can do that on the screen, and we want to know from you if it is worth while. I want to know whether or not you people like it, because if you don't, then we are working on the wrong track. We want to know whether they can appreciate and whether they do appreciate and whether you gentlemen can make them appreciate real beauty. We want to know it.

"If I were to say anything about business at all, I wouldn't know what I was talking about and any way Mr. Goldfish told me not to.

"We want you to give us your opinion straight, and then we can co-operate with you."

Howard E. Spaulding, advertising counsel of the Paramount organization, next took the exchangemen into his confidence and explained some of the big advertising campaigns Paramount has carried on and has under way the present time. In part, he spoke as follows:

"There is about $650,000,000 worth of advertising placed a year, and 90 per cent of it is placed through clearing houses, called advertising agencies. An advertising agency is a specialist in its line just as you gentlemen are specialists in the selling of films. An advertising agency analyzes the business of its clients and prescribes what it believes in its best judgment will remedy any defects in the sales structure. It finds the weak territory and works out some kind of a campaign in newspapers, magazines, bill-boards, street car or painted signs as the best means of building up the business in that territory.

"You all know that advertising of one kind or another is beneficial, but some of you doubt the wisdom of certain kinds of publicity and wish we were doing other kinds. Everything we are doing is being done after more than a year of preparatory work. I made a four months' trip around the United States and talked with several hundred exhibitors before this advertising campaign was planned. I have worked out your territories on a big wall map so I can see at a glance where the strength and the weakness lie. The desk I use in New York has 20 drawers in it, both sides of each drawer being given to a separate state. In those drawers are many colored tacks and each tack has its meaning. In laying out the advertising campaign this desk had a great deal to do with the mediums that were selected. I am just citing these examples to show you how carefully this Publicity Campaign has been laid out so as to exert every possible influence in the strengthening of conditions in each territory. In other words, this campaign has been laid out for your benefit, taking each individual exchange territory as a unit.

"You will notice that we are showing in the Mary Pickford ad out today all over a list of some of the other stars appearing in Paramount Pictures, and this will be done in three out of every four advertisements for a while, as we want the general public to get acquainted with the different stars we have under contract. You will also notice in the upper part of this advertisement that every picture is listed in which Mary Pickford has appeared since the Paramount program was formed. I don't want to interfere with Mr. Meeker, manager of the rebooking department, but I want to say, that the purpose of running the advertisement in this way, is to let the man in the smaller town, who is showing the older pictures such as 'Behind the Scenes' in his theater today, get the full benefit from this advertisement, and also to get the theater to rebook these Pickford productions at the time this advertisement is appearing in his community."

Tarleton Winchester, publicity director of Paramount, followed Mr. Spaulding on the platform and laid particular emphasis upon what the exchangemen in the field could do toward aiding the home office in making its publicity more effective. In part, he said:

"The Paramount publicity idea has always been a little bit different from everybody else's in that there is not such an inclination towards 'circus methods.' We pay more attention to the kind of publicity we get than to the amount.

"The advertising and sales departments are so closely interwoven that it is impossible for either Mr. Sniffen or Mr. Spaulding or me to get up and talk without treading on the other fellow's toes and saying something possibly that he was going to say, or hint at.

"Yet it is a good thing there is that dovetailing, because publicity without influence on sales is not worth anything. Publicity must have influence on sales always just as advertising must have. What we want to get is the greatest amount of co-operation between those departments that we can. We want co-operation not only between the various departments of Paramount, but between the branch offices themselves, and the branch office and the home office. We all have the same aim, and that is to spread Paramount pictures everywhere; not necessarily Famous Players or Jesse L. Lasky or Oliver Morosco pictures, but Paramount pictures produced by one or the other of these companies. We are spending a lot of money to spread that slogan, as demonstrated by the slides that Mr. Spaulding has shown you. You have seen the words, 'Paramount Pictures.' They are what we are all working day and night to drive home.

"There are a great many ways of getting publicity. Into the job of getting publicity comes missionary work, and missionary work is very important. You want to write letters to newspapers, magazines, clubs, colleges, schools, outlining your proposition, and you have got to know your proposition to do it. You have got to know it from every angle.

"Know your mediums. Be familiar with every photo-play department in your territory. Give every man what he wants. Put human interest in your stuff.

"Now we come to team work. What can each office do best? The home office can best prepare copy according to policies and principles laid down in the foundation of the company; create prestige for these policies and for the opinions of its representatives. Create interest in motion pictures, and particularly Paramount Pictures in papers everywhere. Place articles of benefit to the whole in big publications. Distribute publicity of a rather general nature.

"For instance, in Paramount Progress, which we have just started, we cannot pay much attention to releases, because if we do it is no good to the man in Bingville and no good to the man in Brick Church, but it might be good to a man in some other town.

"But the exchange publicity man can place that copy where he has a personal acquaintance, taking a special care of the needs of exhibitors. We in the home office cannot get into close enough touch with our exhibitors. They write us for help, and we give it to them to the best of our ability. But we cannot go out there and work with Joe Smith and put his house over. The exchange publicity man can, and every exchange ought to have a publicity man if it possibly can.

"The exchange man can take advantage of the friendliness and regard for his company, and of the prestige it now has in the business and is rapidly acquiring outside. He can see that papers and exhibitors receive publicity on the pictures at the proper time. Both can get together. Each can help the other. They each should know what the other is doing."

H. I. Day, associate editor of Paramount Progress, followed Mr. Winchester and outlined the policies and aims of the magazines with which he is associated. Jack Eaton was the next speaker and discussed in an interesting manner the travel pictures which Paramount has been issuing.

When Carl H. Pierce, special representative of the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company, addressed the Paramount convention he said:

"You can well appreciate my pleasure, gentlemen, at looking into the faces of those of you with whom we have had such pleasant correspondence in the year just past, and realize what it means to me and to all of us, to see this gathering and getting together for the purpose of unity and unifying the interests and the progress of Paramount.

"In speaking to you of our manufacturers, I feel it would be just to them, since they are not present today, to express their regrets, even as Mr. Zukor has done, to give you a word or two as to those who do not need my praise of their character, because the earnestness and sincerity of those men in the past will stand as a guarantee of what they intend to do in years to come.

"Last Sunday Dustin Farnum left our office for the coast with such books in his pocket as 'The Gentleman from Indiana,' 'Mons. Beaucaire,' and several others of that character, and our endeavor being also to give you the very best stars that we can get plus the very best books, and execute it in the very highest manner of which we are capable, and as showing the care with which Mr. Farnum is going into his pictures, he said to me, 'Mr. Pierce, I think we have one of the best photographers in the United States,' and I will say to you gentlemen that he was the man that made 'Captain Courtesy,' and he has been re-engaged by our company, and Mr. Farnum said, 'I will not do those pictures until I am satisfied that we have the best procurable director, and from the acting standpoint and from my support these pictures will be the very finest that I know how to turn out.'

"Mr. Morosco wrote me recently, and he said, 'Mr. Pierce, I have made a measure of success with the stage, and all of my resources and all of my endeavors will be to turn out such photo plays for the Paramount program as will be a credit to the other manufacturers who have set us such an excellent example.'

"Looking back over the year, I want to corroborate what Mr. Goldfish has said and give you my own impressions of many of the principles which Mr. Hodkinson has so ably laid down.

"Having had experience in such organizations as the National Cash Register Company, the Burroughs Adding Machine Company, and others, it seemed to me at times, and I had no experience in the picture business, of course, that there were many opportunities for meetings of this character, and it is one of the greatest pleasures that I have had in many a day to receive the information that this meeting was to be held. I have been out on the firing line with many of you men. I have realized some of the difficulties that you have had to encounter. I have realized the tremendous moral courage that you gentlemen have displayed in your different districts to put this Paramount program where we see it today, and I realize that all of you, in your own way, are manifesting the same remarkable courage and efficiency and standing for your principles that Mr. Honkinson has done in the years gone by, which has given us this magnificent plan that we are now unfolding.

"Mr. Hodkinson referred last night, in a very remarkable talk to us, which did me a great deal of good, to the fact that the Paramount was a fabric, it was a texture; and that made a very deep impression upon me. The other people who were trying to copy the Paramount were as if they had water colors on the wall which would erase by simply touching them, whereas this wonderful fabric that has been woven through his experience and ideas, and through the work of you gentlemen, has made such a structure as will never be destroyed.

"Now, a word or two in tribute to my friends of the H. E. Lesan Agency and their associates who have recently come upon the scene. I don't know how many of you gentlemen are familiar with their plans. But I realize that in Mr. Hodkinson's putting them on and giving them their different duties in his office a very wonderful emphasis has been given to these plans of ours. I realize the care and attention given to the details of this meeting; the excellent advertising sales campaign about which they will probably tell you, and their marvelous advance, and I want to say to you, gentlemen, in spite of my connection with other organizations, that I feel they have worked out a plan beyond which there is nothing better in this country. I want to thank you all for the courteous letters you have written and for the co-operation you have shown. I have felt very diffident at times in calling upon you for lists, for example, of your future bookings, in order that we might get into the hands of your exhititors our press matter, but without an exception throughout the country we have had this earnest and hearty co-operation, and I have recognized throughout the year, and all of us perhaps have, or many of us, the destruction of those elements of jealousy and petty feeling which are gradually being eliminated, and I recognize in the feeling between the manufacturers and Paramount the constantly growing sense of harmony and co-operation.

"I went to see the Carmen film the other day, and I never in my life saw such splendid photography and such action, and when you see Geraldine Farrar in that fight at the cigarette factory it will never leave your mind between now and the day you die. If it does, I will miss my guess. It is perfectly wonderful, gentlemen.

"A thought came to me about showing Peer Gynt to you, gentlemen, after it met with the approval of the manager. Peer Gynt is not an ordinary subject of film. You are probably familiar with Ibsen, who wrote the story of Peer Gynt. Back of Ibsen's thought was the thought of an international character, a man who was beyond the petty limitations of national confines, a man who had a thought of national independence in his consciousness, and that was the guiding motif, as I understand it, in Ibsen's writing of this wonderful piece, Peer Gynt. Just about the time that the studio notified me that Peer Gynt was to be brought out, a gentleman by the name of George W. Benyon came to my office and said, 'Mr. Pierce, what would you think of writing special music to your photoplays?' and I said, 'A special orchestration and special music?' And he said, 'Yes, and put it out on such a commercial basis that each man, whether he plays a piano or an organ, or whether he has a thirty-two piece orchestra or eight pieces in his house, would have an opportunity to obtain this music on reasonable terms.' And I said, 'That sounds like a good idea.' In writing Mr. Garbutt about it he said, 'Try it out,' and it seems that when Mr. Benyon was helping to run a small house in Springfield, Massachusetts, he said to his wife, 'Dearie, I would give my life if I could write an orchestration of Peer Gynt, if it was the last thing I did on earth. It would be the crowning glory of my life. But,' he said, 'I am afraid there is no way of interesting the manufacturers.' Without knowing that thought of his and not realizing what he had in his mind when he mentioned orchestration to me, I said, 'Wouldn't it be quite a psychological coincidence to have Peer Gynt set to music in view of Ibsen's wonderful interpretation of this story?' and then he told me of his own ideas; the result being, gentlemen, that, having worked the idea out to a certain extent, G. Schirmer, Incorporated, of New York, have taken Mr. Benyon under their wing and are now about to put out the orchestration on such terms that I believe all your exhibitors will be able to obtain it.

"To show you the spirit of co-operation which exists among the manufacturers, Mr. Lasky and Mr. Goldfish and Mr. Zukor have very kindly taken to this idea, and I understand that, all things being equal, they will have all of their photoplays orchestrated.

"Now to just give you an idea as to the economy and efficiency in that plan. The introductory orchestration of Peer Gynt in G. Schirmer, Incorporated, on their shelves, is $7 to the ordinary orchestra. We propose to hand it to your exhibitors for a thirty-two piece orchestra, the entire orchestration written to fit the films so that not even a bonehead could miss one of the cues or have the music for the particular scene it was intended to represent, for $3 a piece. There is a saving of over fifty per cent to the exhibitor who agrees to avail himself of this service.

"Now to come back to the point. I had thought of showing Peer Gynt out here, and we had the music ready, but we couldn't put it on. And when I saw your Carmen film I said to myself this is the most marvelous accomplishment of any manufacturer which I have ever seen.

"I think, for the purpose of having this accomplishment attain its highest value in the minds of the exchange men and their associates, that we had best preserve that volume and keep it on the shelf, because I feel that nothing should detract from the mental impression which you gentlemen receive in your own good time from the viewing of this film. I believe that when you see that you will say that nothing has ever been done that will bring to the motion picture industry the standing that this has.

"Now, a word about your kindly co-operation in the future. We would like to hear what you have to say that is good about the picture, and we would like to hear from you and have you encourage your exhibitors to write to us and tell us how we can improve our pictures.

"I thank you very much."

The first day's session of the convention closed with a de luxe presentation of the Lasky masterpiece, "Carmen," featuring Geraldine Farrar, at Orchestra Hall on Michigan avenue. The Orchestra Hall management lent every aid toward making the showing a success and the convention delegates were undoubtedly profoundly impressed by the picture.

Friday morning was devoted to a session of the branch managers which was followed at 12:30 by a luncheon attended by all the convention delegates. At 1:30 Frank D. Sniffen, general sales manager of the Paramount Film Corporation, delivered a most interesting address on "Our Sales Problems and How to Meet Them," which was followed by an informal discussion of matters pertaining to that subject. George R. Meeker, manager of the Paramount's re-booking department, was the next speaker and devoted his time to a discussion of "How Best to Get Re-Bookings," which was listened to with interest by all present. Friday evening, at 7:30, an informal banquet was served the conventionites and many interesting toasts were responded to.

The Saturday morning session was devoted to general discussions on policy, price maintenance, sales and advertising plans, etc., all the problems being brought up in their order by President Hodkinson. After the noontime luncheon the convention again assembled at 1:30 for further discussion and a farewell word from Mr. Hodkinson. During his closing address the Paramount's president asserted that nothing could stop the success of the Paramount program, and after outlining fully his plans and policies for the coming year he made the first announcement of the comedies and topical films which will soon make their appearance on the screen. His remarks were greeted with the quiet enthusiasm that bespeaks unbounded confidence and admiration.

Mr. Hodkinson's address concluded the convention's sessions and the various delegates prepared to depart for their widely separated homes.

BRADLEY BARKER NEW GAUMONT JUVENILE LEAD

Bradley Barker, who has achieved success in important roles in big productions with various companies, has been secured by the Gaumont Company as juvenile lead. Barker makes his first appearance as a Mutual player in "The House With Nobody In It," second of the three-reel Rialto star features produced by Gaumont for release in the regular program.

Mr. Barker is by no means new to motion picture work, having at various times appeared in Lubin, Alco, Reliance, Fox, Universal, Peerless and Famous Players productions. He has appeared in support of such stars as Mary Fuller, Olga Petrova and several others equally prominent. His last engagement previous to joining the Gaumont studios was with the Fox features company.

The "Who Pays" photoplay series of Balboa proved to be so popular that it has been suggested that more Cinema stories be made and the new series called "Who Is Guilty?"

FAMOUS BROADWAY STAR SECURED FOR RIALTO FEATURES

Miss Ivy Troutman, a famous Broadway star, will make her debut in motion pictures on the Mutual Program in the second Rialto Star Feature release of the Gaumont Company, entitled "The House With Nobody In It." This will be released September 22.

Ivy Troutman.

Miss Troutman made her first appearance on the professional stage ten years ago. The first four years were spent principally with companies touring through the West. The last six years she has never played outside of New York City, which shows that she has been connected only with successful plays which have had long New York runs. This is the sort of star which will figure on the Mutual's regular program, through all of the Gaumont Company's Rialto Star features.

Among the successful plays in which Miss Troutman has appeared may be mentioned "The College Widow" and William H. Crane's production, "Father and the Boys." In 1911, she appeared in "Baby Mine" and in 1912 with Mme. Simone in "The Return from Jerusalem." In 1913, Miss Troutman had the lead in "A Pair of Sixes" and last year she played opposite Lou Tellegen in "Taking Chances," at the Thirty-ninth Street Theater.

EDWIN THANHOUSER ENGAGES TWO NEW DIRECTORS OF NOTE

Just when Edwin Thanhouser will feel satisfied that his organization has reached satisfactory proportions is a question to which the trade at large is giving thought. This week sees the addition of two more companies under directors of established class in both the film and other fields of art.

In engaging Eugene Nowland, Mr. Thanhouser selects an artist of an unusual versatility. He is an actor, stage director and famous musician, having been concert master for Ysaye and violinist with Joachim. It was only when he broke his hand that he abandoned music for the stage and in a short while was shining brilliantly as Regisseur at Sarah Bernhardt's theater in Paris; he also took companies to Brussels, Berlin and London. He then returned to the United States, where he was engaged for several years in stock company activities on the Pacific Coast, after which he joined the Edison company in the east, as director. He directed Mrs. Fiske in "Vanity Fair" and his work has included such plays as "McQuade of the Traffic Squad," "The Boston Tea Party" and "According to the Light."

William Parke is a new name to filmdom, but the stage knows him well for many noteworthy accomplishments. He is the man who staged "Peer Gynt" in which Richard Mansfield appeared at the New Amsterdam theater in New York. This production won him the applause of the theatrical world, but long before that he triumphed in Philadelphia with the old Holland stock company, where he became stage director after one year's work as an actor. His experience there was extensive and qualified him for greater work later. This came soon, when E. H. Sothern engaged him as his stage director, a position which he held with distinguished honor for six years. Mr. Parke also has the distinction of having directed the Castle Square company in Boston for four years and Arnold Daly for one year. His latest work, before joining the Thanhouser Company, was with Al. Woods for whom he rehearsed seven "Potash & Perlmutter" companies, but Mr. Parke takes most pride in his labor with his own stock company in Pittsfield, Mass., a few years ago. It was here that he became the first American exponent of the European stock system; that is, he gathered about him a company of players of merit and then proceeded to put on productions, distributing the parts according to play standards instead of players. There was no leading man or leading woman, each one played what he was called upon to do according to his type and the experiment attracted the attention of the theatrical press to such an extent that some of the most wealthy patrons of the art formed a society to extend the work.

ZIEGFELD FILM CORPORATION LAUNCHED IN EAST THIS WEEK

Established to set forth the charms of the Ziegfeldian type of beauty, the Ziegfeld Films Corporation, with offices in the New York Theater building, has been organized, with a capitalization of $100,000. W. K. Ziegfeld, of the well known family of producers of that name, who promoted the enterprise, is president of the new corncern.

Officers of the new organization comprise, besides Mr. Ziegfeld, W. E. Koch, of New York and Berlin, perhaps the most extensive manufacturer and importer of surgical instruments in America, who is vice-president; and Irwin B. Cochran, the Brooklyn attorney, who is secretary and treasurer. Mr. Koch, who has profited exceedingly because of the increased demand for hospital appliances and surgical apparatus due to the rigors of war, has at present under construction a new factory in Brooklyn which will represent an outlay of $150,000. The business acumen and resource he will bring to the new film enterprise will be in itself a token of certain success, while the legal prowess of Mr. Cochran, who has been the dynamic center of some of the most famous local legal processes of the last decade, will safeguard the organization from errors or impositions which a new enterprise, if less ably governed than the present one promises to be, is prone to experience.

Construction of a studio building, which is to incorporate several innovations in studio designing and equipment, is to be begun without delay on a spacious Brooklyn site. A garden rich in foliage and flowers, already luxuriating on the site, which had been a private park up to the present, will be maintained in part as an open-air adjunct to the studio, offering an unusual advantage to the new producer. While the building is in process of construction, work on the first of the Ziegfeld films will be begun in a leased studio, so that the first release of the new brand of pictures will be on the market early in the autumn.

The personnel of the business, artistic and technical staffs, the latter of which is to include a costumer who will prepare gowns from original designs for the Ziegfeld beauties of the screen, and the complexion of the acting organization are to be made known as soon as final contracts have been closed. Already the nuclei of the various departments have been engaged.

"Beauties of national renown will be featured in all my productions," announced Mr. Ziegfeld, in discussing his impending activities in picture production. "To this classification naturally belong the great stars of the legitimate stage, whose affiliation with Ziegfeld films would be doubly welcome because of their histrionic fitness, but the standard of pulchritude never will be lowered in favor of the dramatic quality.

"I have already under contract a sizable and enticing lot of talent, all of screenable features and some of them established favorites of our legitimate stage. Negotiations with many more are in progress.

"Aside from leading people, the ensemble, or, if you will, the 'mob,' for that is its most frequent guise, will be comprised, as to its feminine element, of faces that, recurring in all the productions as they will, will transplant that venerable institution, the 'baldheaded row,' to the picture theater.

"A point I wish to dwell on is this: My productions will be costumed as is a big Broadway show. I will have under contract, when I begin my picture producing activities, a designer and a costumer of national reputation, who will control and supervise a cutting and assembling and fitting department, garbing both principals and the minors of my picture plays in absolutely original creations. This will apply also to millinery. Women patrons of the theaters where my films are shown will naturally benefit doubly in attending, for they will glean many a fashion hint far in advance to the appearance of the gowns as designed for me in the Fifth avenue shops."

All productions of the Ziegfeld Films Corporation will be made under the personal supervision of Mr. Ziegfeld, who has been extensively engaged in producing for the legitimate stage in past years. He is especially well known in Chicago, where he has produced grand opera on several occasions and has been responsible for premiere presentations of musical plays. His father, Florenz Ziegfeld, Sr., is a pioneer in the musical realm of America and founded the Chicago Musical College.

CAPT. BONAVITA TO STAGE REAL THRILLER IN CENTAUR FILMS

The daring feats accomplished by photoplayers to make sensational and thrilling motion picture scenes have aroused considerable discussion and much has appeared in print describing these exploits. Many of the scenes are truly remarkable and readily answer the purpose for which they were made, but in few of them does the player take greater chances than Capt. Jack Bonavita is compelled to undergo in appearing with the Bostock animals in David Horsley's new Centaur features.

When Mr. Horsley engaged Capt. Bonavita, months ago, to prepare the Bostock animals for motion picture work, he instructed the trainer to use every known artifice to bring out the greatest possibilities in the animals so that the pictures would present in that respect performances that had never before been attained.

That Captain Bonavita implicitly followed out these instructions, without regard to personal danger, is shown in "The Rajah's Sacrifice," a two reel subject featuring the Bostock animals, and the first of the Centaur features to be released on the Mutual program.

In this picture the scenario called for the actor playing the Rajah to enter a den of lions where he was to be attacked and killed. The scene is one of the most intense ever staged. Captain Bonavita enters the lions' den. The animals first crouch into their corners, eyes agleam, teeth exposed, and roaring ominously at the intruder. As he advances to the center of the den the lions stealthily surround him. Suddenly one springs forward and with a lurch heavily strikes the Rajah, felling him to the floor. It makes a wonderful scene but it requires iron nerve to permit such an untrustworthy animal as a lion to be party to it in the manner described.

Despite his daring chances Capt. Bonavita is unafraid. His intrepidity is amazing. A number of times he has suffered serious injuries at the hands of lions but as soon as he recovers he is back in the arena again—self-confident as ever before.

SELIG, THE MAN BEHIND BOGGS, RESPONSIBLE FOR CALIF. STUDIOS

According to The Script, a Pacific Coast publication and the official organ of the Photoplay Authors' League, a movement is afoot to honor Francis Boggs. Honors paid the memory of any conscientious worker in the motion picture realm are laudable, but exception will be taken by many to an editorial statement that Frank Boggs was pioneer in the western field and that he set up the first camera and built the first studio on the western coast. The editorial further says: "Not only the state of California but practically all manufacturers have benefited by the film colonization in California; for they were led into elysian fields by the discoverer, Boggs."

It is a fact well known to the pioneers of the motion picture industry that William N. Selig was directly responsible for the first motion pictures to be made in California. Frank Boggs, years ago, requested employment from Mr. Selig. He asked to be sent to New Orleans. He went there and his sojourn was not entirely satisfactory. Mr. Selig said to him: "Boggs, go to California. The conditions there are ideal for the filming of pictures." And so at Mr. Selig's suggestion and at Mr. Selig's expense, Boggs went to California and established the first motion picture studio. Boggs was also equipped with a motion picture camera manufactured and supplied to him by Mr. Selig.

There is no effort being made to avoid giving Mr. Boggs his just deserts but according to the real facts, the Golden State is really indebted to William N. Selig, the man who had visited California, discovered the possibilities for motion picture making there and who made it possible by his own money and inventive genius to establish the art of cinematography in California.

In the Wake of the Selig Special

BY NEIL G. CAWARD

Shecawgo, Ill., Sun. July 25. 1915.
Squedunk, Iowa.

Dear Jack:

WELL Jack i and the Missus is most home now, having got into Shecawgo early this a. m. after our 18 days trip with the Selig speshul, and we aint a bit tired tho we have traveled moren 6 thousand miles and seen bout all the scenery in the U. S. We was looked after so good all the way and took such good care of is why we aint tired tho we aint had time to get tired any way.

i wrote you last wk. just before we got to Denver and the next a. m. when we woke up we was there. A funny thing happened there cause the trane crew was so anxious to get their brekfas they didnt wate for every body to get offen the trane in the depo, but run the trane back down the tracks for bout 6 miles. Conseqwently a lot of us had to get offen the trane moren 6 miles from the depo and i and the Missus was among em, but we didnt care cause that way we got a chance to see more of Denver.

We got some st. kars and went down to the depo and there was the rest of the crowd—that is that part of em that got off the trane when it stopped in the depo. After every body got together again this Herb Hoagland he rented some auto mobiles and we started out to see the town and its quite a town two, only not so good as some of the other places we bin. After the auto mobile trip was over we got on a st. kar and went out for a ride to one of the parks and there they got flowers and grass and a band concert and a lot of such stuff, and then we had some thing to eat and by that time it was time to go back to the depo, cause we left at 3 oclock over the Union pacific for Kansas City.

It seemed funny not to see no more mts as we went a long, but they wasnt any more, being as we are now out of the mts. So insted of mts. they is green farms and scenery that looks just like Ioway. As it was hot this p. m. a lot of us fellers went "down town" for the rest of the day, what is what we call it when we walk down the hole length of the 14 kar trane to get to the buffay kar what is up ahead rite behind the enjine.

Well after supper that eve. they had a nother cab aray show in the Observatory kar on the hind end of the trane and a lot of folks did stunts. And then at 11 oclock they had a cab aray show for men only and they had a salomay dance by this hear crazy Clarence Frambers, but the Missus she thot it was something elsen what it was and she woodnt let me stay to it so i cant tell you a bout it Jack, tho if you had a been here you cud have gone for yourself and seen what it was being as how you aint married.

Well any way next a. m. about noon we kum to Kansas City and the trane stopped there in the depo for a bout 20 min. to let every body get off and buy a newspaper and some sue veneers and then we got rite back on a gain and was off for Saint Looey. All that p. m. Jack the trane ran thru places what was flooded by the high watter what they had the day before and the corn it was all down flat and you cud see where the watter had runned over every thing. I place what we went past we seen a ½ a house a floating down a river and gosh Jack i bet it was turible to live a round there.

Sum body suggested that the hole crowd a board the trane have one last farewell supper together in Saint Looey, being as how the next a. m. was going to be the end of the trip and enough of em thot it was a good idee so a tele gram was sent a head to the Jeffersun hotel telling em we was kuming and to be sure and have enough for us to eat. Immediately after it was decided to stop in Saint Looey and have this hear dinner every body begun to doll up and get out their best duds.

Rite a way this Bill Slossman opened up his barber shop in the smoking room of our sleeping kar and with Sylvester to help him he got all fixed up, though Bill Edwards and Doc Doolittle and sum others was a joshing him all the while he was a fixing up.

Well Jack a long bout 10 oclock we got to Saint Looey and gosh but maybe you think we wasnt a hungry lot, having had 0 to eat since noon. The hole party of us hiked up the st. and took the st. kars to this Jeffersun hotel what was a pretty nice place and sure enough they had got our tele gram what was sent a head and they had supper all piping hot for us, and we pitched in. After we had ett all we cud hold the orkestra played a while and a lot of folks danced and then they had some speeches.

A feller named Layman from Du Quoin, Illinoy, he give a fare well speech and said as how he hoped some day he cud give a welcome speech to every body to cum to see him in Du Quoin, where ever that is, and then Jack a Judge Hogan from Shecawgo he got up and told Mr Layman how glad he wood be to cum and see him but he wanted the hole crowd to get together again in Shecawgo as that was a grate town. And Mr Whyte of Shecawgo he told us all a about his town and how nice it was and by that time this hear Herb Hoagland what had got offen the trane as soon as it got to Saint Looey and went up to Walt Blazers house to see Walt's folks what lived there in Saint Looey he cum into the room and every body yelled and made him make a speech.

He got up then and told us a lota bunk a bout how we hadnt been no trouble at all to look after and how he hoped sum day he cud take such a good looking crowd all off for a nother trip, but Jack i betcha he didnt mean all of it, caus gosh we must have worried him pretty near to deth before he got us all back to Shecawgo, being as how the trip was so long and we stopped so many places and they was so many of us to look after. 1 thing every body has got to admit how ever and that is that this hear Herb Hoagland is a grate shap eroan for he got us all back without no accidents, or 0, and this Bill Selig what he works for he sure deserves a lota credik two for thinking up such a grate trip and giving us all a chance to see so much for so little money.

Well after Herb Hoagland got thru with his speech they took up a colletshun to get him one of these hear lovin kups and then they had speeches by Mr Merrill and Ed Kohl and sum other folks and then we had to get back to the trane cause it was 2 o'clock in the a. m. and we had to get a going if we was going to get in to Shecawgo by 9 oclock the next a. m.

A few of those who called it home in the sleeping car presided over by Sylvester, the world's greatest porter.

Rite on the minit we was in the union depo in Shecawgo and gosh it made us absotively lone some for to go off and leave that trane what we had a been living on for 18 days. And Jack i betcha there wasnt a 1 of us but was a wishing we was just starting all over again caus we had such a good time. Well Jack we said good by to every body we had met on the trip and then i and the Missus we checked our grips and went up town to look this hear Shecawgo over a little bit more and after i drop this in the male box for you we'll be getting a board the trane to start for home. Gosh it will be good to see Squedunk a gain and the old Metropolitan and i can hardly wate to see if you got them carbons and kept the show a going while i was gone.

Yours Respy.,

Ed.

The Fox Film Corporation announces that Claire Whitney, the distinguished artist, who has appeared in many of its most successful screen offerings, will have a prominent role in support in Robert B. Mantell, who is to make his photodramatic debut in a feature entitled, "The Husband."

RUTH FINDLAY TO PLAY THE LEAD IN "THE SALAMANDER"

The subject of this sketch, Ruth Findlay, who earned for herself an enviable reputation through the excellent rendition of prominent roles in several metropolitan stage productions, and who at the present writing is enacting the leading feminine role in the picturized version of "The Salamander," which the B. S. Moss Motion Picture Corporation will shortly release, was born in New York City, September 19, 1895.

Ruth Findlay.

The stage debut of this promising young star was made in the Liebler production of "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch." Miss Findlay's excellent work in this production attracted the attention of that astute managerial sponsor, William A. Brady, who engaged her for a principal role in "Baby Mine," the farce comedy that was a rage several seasons.

Miss Findlay's photodramatic debut was made in "The Man who Found Himself," a World Film release. Mr. Selznick was so impressed with the work of Miss Findlay in this photoplay, that he engaged her to appear in "The Moonstone." It is said that in "The Salamander" Miss Findlay has a magnificent role, one which affords her vast opportunities for the display of strong acting and versatility. The success of this artist upon the screen is due to the excellent training she received when a player upon the legitimate stage.

MARIE DORO TO BE SEEN IN "THE WHITE PEARL"

Marie Doro, the enchanting young star, who, through her first appearance in motion pictures in the Famous Players' Film Company's charming film creation, "The Morals of Marcus," endowed the screen with a new personality, again attains a decisive screen triumph as the interpreter of unique roles in that company's forthcoming five-part photoplay, "The White Pearl," a fanciful romance of the Orient, by Edith Barnard Delano, to be released on the Paramount program September 20.

Anthony Kelly, considered by those conversant with the Photoplay World as one of the most promising scenario writers before the public, has been engaged exclusively by Lubin's, of Philadelphia.

Mr. Kelly's latest releases are "Destiny," in which Emily Stevens was starred; "Body and Soul," in which Florence Rockwell was featured; "Safety First," a three-act comedy, and a one-act drama, "The Trail of the White Swan."

NEW LUBIN DIRECTOR APPOINTED-FAMOUS DRAMATIST

Lubin of Philadelphia announces the engagement of Clay M. Greene, the famous dramatist and scenario writer, as another director, this being the fifth new director appointed in as many weeks. Mr. Greene's first picture will be a series of "John Henry" stories from the Saturday Evening Post in which Kempton Greene will be featured.

Clay M. Greene.

Mr. Clay Greene, to distinguish him from his star, was educated at the University of Santa Clara and the University of California, where he studied medicine, switching eventually to law. His bent, however, was literature and he wrote what at that time was the greatest success of the decade, "Struck Oil" and "M'Liss." Then he turned his time entirely to playwriting, turning to comedies, dramas and tragedies for the Hanlon Brothers, Kate Claxton, McKee Rankin, Frederick Bryton, Augustus Pitou and others. He later turned his hand to writing scenarios and in the last three years has been chief scenario writer for Lubin's.

In 1901 Mr. Greene wrote "Nazareth," a passion play, and produced it at the University of Santa Clara, which conferred the degree of P. H. D. on him for his services to literature. This play will be produced in Philadelphia and Boston by the Jesuit Fathers next spring.

"POLLY PATHE" OFF ON TOUR OF COUNTRY WITH PICTURE CAMERA

Millions of people from coast to coast will be given an opportunity to see all the historic and other points of interest in their country when Polly Pathe returns from an extended "Seeing America First" tour of the country which she is making for Pathe.

Polly Pathe began in New York last week when she was received in special audience by George McAneny, acting mayor in the absence of Mayor Mitchell. Mr. McAneny gave Polly Pathe a letter to Mayor Rolph of San Francisco and had a kind word to say about Pathe's latest patriotic venture in the motion picture field.

On her trip, Polly Pathe will be accompanied by Mrs. Frances Fisher Byers, who will have charge of the arrangements, and an expert camera man. It is expected they will take about 150,000 feet of film before they return. The present plan, as announced by Pathe, is to release the pictures in weekly series, beginning about December 15. The pictures will be called "Seeing America First."

Every city of importance in the United States will be visited by the Pathe representatives. Arrangements have been made for interviews with governors, mayors and other officials and an effort will be made to see President Wilson. According to the present itinerary, the travelers will cover 14,000 miles. They will complete their work in New York this week and will start up state.

In the metropolis, they have visited such points of national interest as the City Hall, the financial district, the Central Park Zoo and the Metropolitan Museum of Art. The schedule has been carefully mapped out and every important point of interest in the United States will be filmed for the benefit of the moving picture patrons.

Polly Pathe in private life is Miss Grace Wheeler Green, daughter of Mrs. Franklin Green and the late Franklin Green, the noted architect. Miss Green is well known in society. She made her debut three years ago, both in New York as well as in Paris, London and Brussels. She was educated in Brussels, where her parents maintained a residence for several seasons.

Mrs. Byers is well known in newspaper circles throughout the country and her special training fits her for this important work. She has been the press representative for Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, Ellen Terry and other notables.

FOX ONE-A-WEEK POLICY NOW IN OPERATION—MANY STARS FEATURED

The William Fox offices announce the following releases under the new one-a-week policy:

September 6—"The Two Orphans," featuring Theda Bara and William E. Shay, directed by Herbert Brenon.

September 13—"The Regeneration," featuring Rockcliffe Fellowes and Anna Q. Nilsson, directed by R. A. Walsh.

September 20—"The Song of Hate," featuring Betty Nansen, Dorothy Bernard and Arthur Hoops, directed by J. Gordon Edwards.

September 27—"The Wonderful Adventure," featuring William Farnum, written by Captain Wilbur Lawton, directed by Frederick Thomson.

October 4—"Sin," featuring Theda Bara and William E. Shay, directed by Herbert Brenon.

October 11—"The Little Gypsy," featuring Dorothy Bernard, directed by Oscar Apfel.

October 18—"The Family Stain," featuring Frederick Perry, directed by W. S. Davis. This picture is taken from Emile Gaboriau's famous detective story, "The Widow Lerouge."

All of these pictures are said to be staged without regard to cost.

CYRIL MAUDE IN MOROSCO'S FILM MASTERPIECE, "PEER GYNT"

The heralding of the coming of "Peer Gynt" to the Broadway Theater on September 19, featuring Cyril Maude, who will again appear this season in the title role of "Grumpy," as the star, marks an epoch in the development of photoplays, not only because Ibsen's immortal masterpiece was impossible of presentation prior to the present development in the art, but because this photoplay for the first time in the history of regular program releases is to be set entirely to specially prepared music.

George W. Baynon, who is known to the music world as an orchestration writer of wide repute, has arranged with the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company, who is producing this picture, to arrange a specially written introductory overture and following music to fit each foot of the film.

Scene from "Peer Gynt."

Those who have already seen this photoplay recognize in it more fully than in possibly anything that has yet been produced, the unlimited possibilities of the screen as compared with the limitations of the legitimate stage. When Mansfield produced "Peer Gynt" it was recognized by all that the production was masterly, but the stage offered such meagre opportunities for displaying the various scenes through which Ibsen's hero wanders in his fancy that it was a question at that time whether "Peer Gynt" would ever be brought out so as to give a complete elucidation of the thoughts which were in the mind of this master writer when he conceived this classic.

Today, however, it is acknowledged that Oliver Morosco has now given to the world a portrayal of Ibsen's thoughts with such continuity and accuracy of detail as to make this picture a graphic portrait of the events as they themselves occurred and in the scenes where they actually transpired.

Many technical innovations are noticeable in this latest Morosco release and in securing the desired atmosphere the producers have hesitated at no expenditure of time or money to get the desired results. During the production of this film the expenses in connection with the handling of the large company alone often amounted to a thousand dollars a day. This is to say nothing of the enormous salaries for the stars and the technical experts.

ASSOCIATED ENGAGES IRVING BARSKY, ONE OF GAME'S PIONEERS

The Associated is going after more talent. The latest catch is Irving J. Barsky, a pioneer at the game. He is a man of varied experience, having started at the bottom with Miles Brothers, on Fourteenth street as a reel boy, and has worked his way through with different concerns to his present position. After leaving Miles Brothers he went to Canada with the Allens, later became one of the managers of the Canadian Film Company and he also owned his own exchange and theater in Western Canada. A couple of years ago Mr. Barsky came back to New York and since then has made a host of friends in the business. Since his return he has been manager of the Pee-El-Bee Films; also manager of the New York Gotham Film Exchange and laboratory and sales manager for the Gotham Film Company. He is president of the Barsky Photo Play Company.

The Associated is rapidly perfecting a strong, aggressive organization, so comprehensive in its scope that the corporation is not only able to get business, but its policy, from the inception of a film all along the line, to the service and support given exchanges and exhibitors, enables it to command business. The policy of eliminating the middleman, while making splendid financial savings in which the trade participates, also opens the way for direct service and the expedition of business in various details that are quickly recognized by exchangemen and exhibitors.

JULIAN REED, EDISON CHARACTER MAN, MARRIED

Julian Reed, versatile Edison character man, rode into the West—so far even as Jersey City—Sunday, and staged a little drama all his own, cast himself and his lot as bridegroom, and picked for the bride Mrs. Mary Darcy Goodwin of Washington, D. C.

Julian Reed.

Springing from one of the oldest and most famous theatrical families of the American stage, his uncle was the great comedian, Roland Reed. When he was able to find tongue to his youthful emotions, he appeared as the child in an old play, "The Sea of Ice," and for some years afterward was popular as a clever child dancer until he became associated with the elder Thomas Jefferson.

Fourteen pleasant and successful years passed as actor and stage manager in his uncle's companies—Roland Reed—and he shared with his uncle some measure for the success of that brilliant comedian's plays. Five years with the Proctor stock company in New York City and Albany passed, then as "Sphinxus" with De Wolf Hopper, when the possibilities of motion pictures for a versatile actor won him over to Edison five years ago.

One of the latest acquisitions to the list of photoplay stars engaged by the Universal for Broadway Universal Features is Henry E. Dixey. Mr. Dixey has started work at the Imp studio on a five-reel feature to be called "A Pickled Romance."

Edward R. Phillips, one of the original members of the Vitagraph stock company and one of the best known screen players, died Sunday, August 29, of heart trouble. He is survived by a widow and two children.

Posters and Motion Pictures

By ROBERT E. IRWIN*

IN the realm of moving pictures no branch of the business has shown so little advance as has that necessary adjunct, the poster. Designed to herald the approaching film attraction and second in importance only to the films themselves, the poster has received little or no consideration at the hands of the film magnates.

While no end of effort and money has been spent in attempts to produce better film, mechanically and artistically, the production of posters in keeping with the improved pictures of today has with few exceptions been a sadly neglected detail of the picture industry. While the picture productions of today are miles ahead of those of even half a decade since, the poster as applied to moving pictures has virtually stood still and has made little advance in either artistry or meaning.

Why this has been so can only be conjectured, or accounted for by carelessness in detail of business management, lack of organization or lack of information concerning the value of good advertising on the part of picture makers and distributors. Possibly the financial returns have been coming so easily for most of the manufacturers that there has been no crying need felt by them to increase sales. The growth of the picture business has been so remarkable and most of the manufacturers have made so much money in spite of themselves that it is small wonder that some branches of the business have not received their proper share of attention.

With the coming of keener competition, however, when good pictures are bringing legitimate returns and poor ones are going to the discard, the need has made itself felt of better business getting and advertising methods. To put a moving picture properly before the public eye is now almost, if not quite, as important as having a good picture.

Some of the film makers have even gone so far as to let their advertising reach the scope of a national campaign through the pages of the weekly papers of large circulation and high cost of space. While all advertising is good which brings one's goods before the public, it is an open question if the money thus spent has brought the returns that it would have if expended in direct appeal to the public in good posters properly displayed on the public boards throughout the country where all could read.

Some few of the more progressive manufacturers began a few months ago to realize that something more than the usual haphazard ordering of posters by any one around the office, who had nothing else to do and regardless of whether he knew anything about posters or not, was needed in order to keep this branch of the business abreast of some of the excellent film which was being turned out.

Those, with their ears to the ground, began to hear the rumble of complaint from the public and exhibitor alike as to the usual poster which assailed the public eye from in front of every picture emporium. They began to realize that to some extent at least the oft-repeated and much-discussed objections of parents to their children going to see motion pictures was based on the bad taste displayed in the posters, while the films themselves were mostly inoffensive and, while not always in good art, were in most cases at least harmless amusement. Realizing the difficulties which lay in the way of any innovations, however innocent, it was with some misgivings that the writer assumed charge of the Metro's poster department some months ago, for he felt that the chief difficulties would not be in procuring good poster designs, with the aid of good artists and good lithographers, but because he knew in advance the opposition that anything different would meet with from a certain class of exhibitor and exchange man. He knew that commendation for anything good that might be produced from those inside who knew would be offset by adverse criticism from those outside who didn't.

He owes it to the broader visions of the heads of the Metro and their faith in the ultimate victory of good advertising over bad that he has been able to produce some good posters in the past few months, as well as some which, while they did not come entirely up to expectations, were still away from the usual run of poster mediocrity.

A set conviction in the average moving picture mind is that a poster must necessarily be a reproduction of a scene from the picture it is intended to advertise, and another is that it must contain a portrait of the principal actor or actress in the film. Without being considered an extremist one must therefore follow closely the stills from the picture, with small latitude for turning out anything original in the way of composition, nor must one stray too far from the original groupings of the figures, however bad, without meeting criticism.

Color one must have, the more the better, and if glaring, better still. In fact, the old circus man's order for "a swell poster in seventeen colors, mostly red," applies with equal truth to the old-fashioned moving picture ideal.

Under prevailing conditions of mind of the average picture man and what he considers business conservatism, proper development of poster art as applied to moving pictures is almost impossible, and as long as the hackneyed still photograph is slavishly followed for designs really good posters will be an unknown quantity, for the simple reasons that the photographs are of small artistic value and lend themselves, with few exceptions, not at all to poster composition.

A large help would be lent the poster man, however, if the moving picture director would use more care with his stills and would bear in mind the need of the advertising and poster departments for pictures which really mean something and which have life and action.

One reason the usual printing house design is of small distinctive value, and therefore poor advertising, is that with an eye to his employer's interests in reproducing the design, the artist limits himself to the use of colors which are always on the presses and therefore necessitate no washup. He revels in blue, yellow, black, red, and colors which can be made from these, and according as he uses these colors and no others he is a good artist in the eyes of his employer. Purples, lavenders, grays and unusual greens are colors not in his ken nor his paint box. Thus is his standard of art limited by his employment and his artistic worth is in an inverse ratio to his limitations.

*Of the Poster Division, Metro Pictures Corporation.

The picture man who expects and who really wants good posters, next to securing sketches of pleasing merit and advertising value, should exercise care in the selection of his printer. It is impossible to secure satisfactory results with poor material and inferior labor. The best sketch is but half the battle, for it can be surely ruined by unskilled and incompetent printers, and the picture man who pays for a design of beauty and merit and then turns it over to the tender mercies of an unfeeling and wholly mercenary lithographer might as well save his money in the first instance, for his results will most surely be unsatisfactory.

Perhaps the printer is not to blame entirely for the poor work seen in motion picture posters, for the picture producer, however liberal he may be in the production of his pictures, when it comes to the poster, is there with the economy idea worked out to the *n*th value. Ignorant as a rule of printing possibilities and limitations, he is forced to rely on whatever the printer tells him, and insistant on the lowest possible prices for his poster work, it is not to be wondered at that the printer, under the necessity of competition, and in order to meet conditions beyond his control, substitutes poor paper and poorer inks and employs cheaper labor than are consistent with even fair results.

In other lines of modern endeavor, where the poster has been developed along artistic lines the results have shown in substantial benefits that the public is appreciative of and responds to good advertising designs. This has been proved by the increasing interest in and increasing sums spent by the big advertisers in getting the best to be had in their posters. It is unnecessary to cite instances, but do not the same people who wear Arrow collars, who use Ivory soap, who ride in Pierce Arrow cars and who wear B. V. D.'s also go to the picture houses and would they not appreciate the same good taste and artistic merit in the advertising of their favorite amusement that they do in the exploitation of their other luxuries and necessities?

Good posters will attract additional attention and cause commendation for good pictures, and it is only a question of time when this fact will be appreciated by those who are responsible for the present bad taste and poor craftsmanship of the average motion picture poster.

LYDIA YEAMANS TITUS, FAMOUS AUSTRALIAN STAR, WITH MOROSCO

Lydia Yeamans Titus, who was almost as famous for her mimicries as her musicianship, is one of the latest captures for motion pictures and is now appearing for the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company in Charles Frohman's success, "Jane," in support of Charlotte Greenwood and Sydney Grant.

Mrs. Yeamans Titus became famous with "Sally In Our Alley," and although singers for over two hundred years have featured this classic of English ballads in their repertoires it remained for this diminutive Australian songstress to come along and so outdo them with her own interpretation that she made the celebrated love song practically her private property. "Sally In Our Alley" is never mentioned but it suggests the name of Lydia Yeamans Titus.

The Australian actress took quite a chance when she first rendered the national favorite during a Christmas pantomime at the Avenue theater in London by changing a tempo in it which had been accepted since its writing. The change, however, was so much for the better and was so justified by the enhanced effect the gifted little expressionist worked into the melody that no less a dignitary and musical pundit than Sime Reeves himself, the great tenor, commended her for taking the liberty.

Charlotte Greenwood, Officer Moran, Herbert Standing, Lydia Yeaman Titus and Sidney Grant rehearsing a scene in "Jane."

Her baby songs and imitations of Emma Eames, Adelina Patti and other famous stage folks, not to mention her London East End, Italian and French and "coon" types, comprise a gallery which has never been surpassed. In the Oliver Morosco production she contributes one of the most genuinely funny spinsters the screen has ever seen.

CALIFORNIA M. P. CORPORATION SELLS ITS PLAYS TO WORLD FILM

The World Film Corporation announces that at a meeting of its board of directors, held last week, arrangements were completed for the purchase, outright, of all rights of the motion picture productions of "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," "The Lily of Poverty Flat," and "Mignon" in which the famous film star, Beatriz Michelena was starred by the California Motion Picture Corporation. Heretofore, the features had been released by the California Corporation through the World Film, but with the closing of the present transaction the California Company relinquishes all the rights to the photoplays.

Another announcement made by the World Film is that of the purchase of all film rights to Edward Sheldon's famous drama, "Salvation Nell." Beatriz Michelena starred in the film version of the play in which Mrs. Fiske scored such a triumph and the World Film also announces the purchase of another Michelena feature, "Minty's Triumph."

LLOYD ROBINSON JOINS FAMOUS PLAYERS PUBLICITY DEPARTMENT

Lloyd Robinson, who for the past two years has acted as editor of the motion picture department of the New York Telegraph, has been engaged by the Famous Players Film Company as a member of its publicity and advertising departments.

During his long editorial connection with the Morning Telegraph. Mr. Robinson has displayed a profound knowledge of the motion picture industry and its various phases, a broad sympathy with every forward trend of the trade, and a keen mastery of editorial principles as connected with the motion picture. That should make him a valuable acquisition to the exploitation department of the Famous Players.

Re-Booking Policy a Success

IRWIN DISCUSSES PLAN

"THERE has never been a feature—a strong feature—exhibited long enough to give everybody interested an opportunity to see it. This means that the manufacturers of these strong features have probably lost several hundreds of thousands of dollars, all owing to the faulty methods of booking," says Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the V. L. S. E. "The main fault with the booking arrangements, and one that has been overcome in the V. L. S. E. organization, is the system of renting features on cast iron yearly contracts.

"To live up to his contract, an exhibitor cannot rebook and re-run those features that score big hits. He is compelled, after showing a feature that has aroused enthusiasm and engendered a large volume of 'word-of-mouth' advertising, to let it pass on in order to make a place for the next feature released on the program.

"No feature ever leaves the manufacturer a success; it only becomes one after it has been shown to the public and has met with an enthusiastic reception. Therefore, the exhibitor may be justly credited with creating the success, and under the yearly contract rule he finds himself in the unenviable position of being unable to take advantage of the success he creates.

"Five months of practical experience is better than an equal number of years of theorizing on the practicability of a new plan. At the end of the first five months of the existence of the V. L. S. E. we have proved to our entire satisfaction that the system of permitting the exhibitor to book the particular feature he wants, when he wants it, for as long a time as he wants it, without tying him up in a contract that makes it obligatory to take features he does not want, therefore limiting the run of each feature, is the only correct policy in the booking of feature films.

"Five months ago our four manufacturers showed they possessed the courage of their convictions by founding V. L. S. E., Inc., the keystone policy of which is the system of open bookings. That their convictions were well founded is shown by the hearty support received from exhibitors in every section of the country.

"Through the policy of allowing exhibitors to pick and choose their features and re-run them as long as the public demands, exhibitors may take full advantage of the 'word-of-mouth' advertising created by the exceptional merit of the production.

"On the other hand, our four manufacturers are assured their features will receive the bookings and rentals commensurate with the dramatic quality of each subject, and this is an incentive to continually improve the quality of their productions. They are not hindered or discouraged by a policy that limits the bookings, as the system does, which compels an exhibitor to play a different feature each week in the order of release.

"The policy of open booking puts each manufacturer on his own merit. It is a policy that returns a just reward for the efforts, thought and care put into a feature. The open booking policy, without any strings attached to it, is of inestimable benefit to the exhibitor in that it allows him to conduct his business on the same lines as that pursued by successful merchants, namely: to select his offerings on their merit, and not according to rule.

"We do not advise any exhibitor in the matter of selecting his pictures, neither do we require an exhibitor to take one picture in order to secure another. The number of bookings for each feature and the amount of rental is dependent only upon the dramatic strength and artistic quality of the subject. In this way our four manufacturers are independent of each other and their efforts to produce great picture plays are rewarded as they deserve, and the system works out to the benefit of all concerned. The exhibitor is well pleased at the opportunity to book only such features as he desires, the manufacturers are happy in the knowledge that they are working in closer harmony with the exhibitor, and their financial reward is commensurate with the quality of the pictures they turn out.

"Five months ago this was a theory. Today it is a fact and the business of V. L. S. E., Inc., will continue to be conducted along these lines."

WARDA HOWARD

Essanay has secured an unusually talented and beautiful actress in Warda Howard, well known in legitimate stage productions on Broadway and throughout the country.

Miss Howard acts exceptionally well in emotional roles and firmly established herself in motion picture work playing opposite Henry B. Walthall in "Temper." The play is full of emotional climaxes and Miss Howard brings out the subtle expressions called for in a way that makes the character she represents a living, breathing being on the screen. She not only has demonstrated her talent in acting before the camera but has proven an excellent photographic type.

Warda Howard.

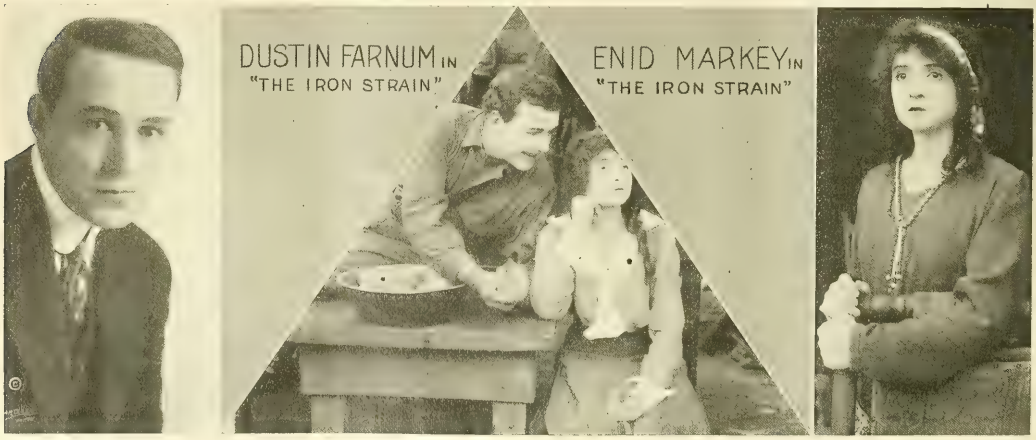
A wide experience on the speaking stage has ably fitted her for almost any role, she having starred in such productions as "The Wolf," "The Lion and the Mouse," "An American Widow," "When Knighthood Was in Flower," "The Cowboy and the Lady," "Paid in Full," "The Christian," "The Girl of the Golden West," "Sappho," "Brewster's Millions," and many others.

So popular were the Selig productions of "Captain Kate" and "Lost in the Jungle" that in response to the many requests that they be revived, the Selig Company has decided to re-issue them.

THANHOUSER ANNOUNCES NEW "THAN-O-PLAY" BRAND OF FILMS

Edwin Thanhouser is out with the announcement that every three weeks will witness the release of a three reel production under the trade name "Than-o-play." This again increases the output of the concern and it is formally stated that another week will see more additions made to the acting and producing staff.

The first "Than-o-play" will be a new class of film effort. The title of it is "A Disciple of Nietzsche." The story is by Phillip Lonergan, of the regular Thanhouser scenario staff, and it features Florence LaBadie, Lorraine Huling and Harris Gordon. That this is a timely subject will be readily recognized. The teachings of Nietzsche, the great German philosopher, have been assigned as the cause of the present war, but Mr. Lonergan has not entered into any issues of the great European conflict in developing the Nietzschian theories for photoplay adaptation. Instead he has taken the theme of individual absolutism, as advanced by the great thinker. Nietzsche preached that the power of self must be supreme, that for the strong to aid the weak unnecessarily detracts from the strength of the powerful. It is an extremist's view of the survival of the fittest, which it is claimed has been the cause of the German desire for power among the nations. That an individual upholding Nietzsche's theories may find a reversal of his belief within his own home, is the text of this powerful story. It revolves around the demonstration by a daughter to her own father that she is capable of a strength with which he did not credit her.



The "Than-o-play" films will carry an exceptional line of lithographs and will be released every three weeks. "A Disciple of Nietzsche" is scheduled for release on Saturday, September 25.

TRIANGLE STARS MAY APPEAR IN PERSON AT NEW YORK OPENING

Things are shaping up for the presence at the Knickerbocker theater opening of all the Triangle stars to appear that first week. They are Raymond Hitchcock, Dustin Farnum and Douglas Fairbanks. Messrs. Hitchcock and Farnum are already in New York and Mr. Fairbanks hopes to be there in late September following the filming of his second picture, "Double Trouble," at the Griffith studio. The report that Farnum had returned to California was incorrect. He will be in New York for several weeks to come and says he is anxious to see himself in "The Iron Strain." It appears that that play had not been assembled by the time Mr. Farnum departed from the Ince studio. The handsome young actor was aware that he had appeared in a number of heroic and gallant attitudes and had emotions of sorts, but his mind is hazy as to what it was all about. The Knickerbocker presentation will tell him. "Hitchy" says he would rather see his new picture "My Valet" than eat. The only thing that will stop him is the possibility of his being presented in a "legitimate" production that night across the street from the Knickerbocker theater. It is predicted that not even the combined abilities of Mack Sennett, Mabel Normand and Fred Mace, who appear in the picture with him, will be able to take away the honors from the versatile comedian.

It is rumored that the New York general offices of Triangle film Corporation will be consolidated. Many thousand feet of space in one of the largest skyscrapers devoted to film managerial offices are being contracted for. At present the executive offices are on the seventeenth floor of the Masonic Temple building while the publicity department is in the Longacre building. A decided innovation is that very little office space will be used in the Knickerbocker theater, which will be the first one of the model theaters to open on or about September 23. Every particle of available space in that historic playhouse will be utilized for the comfort and convenience of the patrons.

Charles B. Noadley, better known as "Pop," one of the veteran photoplaywrights and editors, has joined the scenario staff of the Selig Polyscope Company and will work in the Jungle-Zoo studios at Los Angeles, Calif.

Mutual's New Program Begins

INCLUDES VARIETY OF OFFERINGS

TWENTY-EIGHT reels of all-star, all-feature quality will be released on the Mutual's new $8,000,000 program in the week beginning September 13. These releases find the Mutual Film Corporation's new schedule now shaping into fully rounded form. By the end of September the entire new schedule will be in full swing, with the entire program made over and strengthened in every part.

The last ten days have brought a most significant series of announcements from the office of John R. Freuler, the Mutual's president. A whole flock of new stars have been announced for the regular program—making good on the promises of the Mutual's administration to give the exhibitor a program of all-star quality, filled with Broadway star casts and featuring famous screen stars—a departure giving the exhibitor for the first time the highest feature quality on his regular program, and at no increase in the rental charges.

The week of the thirteenth finds the program with two big, smashing three-reelers, giving the exhibitor something to make just as much noise about as though he had gone out and bought expensive special features outside the program.

Big new names appear now in coming releases on the program: Crane Wilbur of the Horsley Company, famous star of the speaking stage and the screen; W. C. Fields of the 1915 Ziegfeld Follies, appearing in Gaumont comedy films through the courtesy of Florenz Ziegfeld; Anna Little and Arthur Acord, stars for the "Buck Parvin in the Movies," the first of the Mustang Film Company's productions, a three-reeler. And there is an array of new companies formed to augment the production of regular program releases under brand names already familiar to Mutual patrons, as for instance, Beauty and Falstaff.

With the release on September 8 of "The Unsuspected Isles," first of the three-reel Rialto Star Features produced by the Gaumont Company, it can be said that the Mutual's new program really begins its new career. Fania Marinoff, celebrated for her many successful portrayals in notable Broadway productions, is the featured player, supported by a company of exceptionally talented screen players.

The next three-reel feature is included in the regular program of the week of the thirteenth, entitled "Shorty's Ranch," in which "Shorty" Hamilton, who has been starred in numerous "Shorty" productions filmed at the Broncho studios, has the title role. This is released Wednesday, September 15. It is an unusually interesting western comedy drama and marks the appearance of the first Broncho three-reeler ever screened for release in a regular program.

For September 16 two of the new releases which are to play such an important part in the Mutual's new program make their initial appearance. First comes the initial Centaur release, "The Rajah's Sacrifice," a two-part drama of the Orient, featuring the world-famous collection of Bostock jungle animal performers and presenting Captain Jack Bonavita, whose reputation as a trainer of beasts of the African wilds is international. The release of "The Rajah's Sacrifice" is of particular interest for the reason that it marks the first appearance of Captain Bonavita as a screen player in conjunction with "Nero," "Apollo," "Denver" and a number of other jungle kings, who were especially schooled for these productions by the world's premier animal trainer.

On the same day the first of the comedies produced by the second Falstaff company, organized by Edwin Thanhouser, of the Thanhouser studios in New Rochelle, will be released on the regular program. Arthur Cunningham and Claude Cooper, two of the cleverest and most original comedians in motion picture work, direct from Broadway, are the featured players in the first of the releases of the second Falstaff company, entitled "Bessie's Bachelor Boobs." It is a rip-roaring comedy of exceptional merit and is bound to quickly find favor with the fans. Mutual Weekly No. 37, which fills out the program for the same day, presents many interesting events of the world war, as well as numerous incidents photographed by Mutual Weekly photographers in all sections of the globe.

The regular program for the seventeenth marks the first appearance of the two-reel subjects produced at the Gaumont studios, which are to be a feature of the regular Mutual program. For the introductory release of these two-reelers, which are to be listed under the brand name of Gaumont, the producers chose "The Vivisectionist," a vitally interesting story, in which Marion Swayne and Joseph Levering appear as co-stars.

The same day's program contains two one-reel subjects, a stirring heart drama in one reel, produced by the American studios and featuring Vivian Rich, entitled "The Little Lady Next Door," and a side-splitting Cub comedy, featuring George Ovey, entitled "The Knockout."

Saturday, September 18, marks a big day in the motion picture world, for it presents Harold Lockwood as the star of "The Great Question," a three-reel drama produced at the American studios, in which he is supported by May Allison, his co-star in numerous feature releases. This is the first time that a player of Lockwood's reputation and ability has ever appeared in a three-reel subject released in the regular program and is a striking illustration of the high quality of the new Mutual program.

The program for September 18 inaugurates the second of the comedy dramas screened by the second "Beauty" company, organized by S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company. "A Friend in Need" is the title and it presents the popular Beatrice Van, specially engaged to head this second company of talented film artists. She is supported by John Sheehan, and the piece was directed by John Steppling, who is the director-in-chief of these popular second "Beauty" company releases.

First of the Gaumont all-star releases, a one-reel comedy, heads the Mutual's regular program for September 19, in which W. C. Fields, star of the Ziegfeld Follies, is presented as the featured player. Mr. Fields is one of the highest salaried artists now before the American public and is appearing in the Gaumont all-star comedies by special permission of Mr. Ziegfeld. The famous Fairbanks Twins, Marion and Madeline, whose work in Thanhouser releases have won them international fame, are the stars of "The Twins of the G. L. Ranch," a western drama in one reel, which, in addition to a two-reel Reliance drama, completes the program for that day.

Twenty-eight reels in all comprise the program of the new Mutual program for this week, establishing a record for quality productions released in a regular weekly program.

MUTUAL HAS COMEDY TREAT IN COMPANY OF MIDGETS AND W. C. FIELDS

The Mutual has two sensations in comedy. The Count and Countess Magri, better known to the public for about a half century of stage life, as General and Mrs. Tom Thumb, along with a whole company of midgets are to appear in a single reeler released September 27 and W. C. Fields, world famed star of vaudeville, now a star feature in "The Follies," will be featured in another single comedy, "The Pool Sharks," to be released on the Mutual program September 19. This comedy is being filmed by the Gaumont company and will be the first of the Star Comedy releases of that company on the Mutual's program. As Mr. Fields' contract calls for his exclusive service it is only through the courtesy of Florenz Ziegfeld that the Mutual Film Corporation is enabled to present this star feature. Mr. Fields was born in Philadelphia in 1880 and made his first appearance in vaudeville there when he was sixteen years old. He continued in vaudeville with a single exception, until his present engagement with the Follies. Ten years ago, in 1905-6, he broke away from vaudeville and was featured with McIntyre & Heath in the original production of "The Ham Tree" under the management of Klaw & Erlanger. During this engagement he became a favorite with theater-goers all over the country. Mr. Fields' popularity is not confined to the United States alone. He is well known on the continent, having performed in all the principal vaudeville houses from Naples to Petrograd, and has given command performances before most of the crowned heads of Europe. He has also toured India, Austria and Australia.

W. C. Fields.

The Tom Thumb film will be released under the brand new name of Novelty comedy. The Count and Countess Magri will be supported by a cast of Lilliputians known as the "Pee-Wee Players."

KEENAN WILL APPEAR AT BEST IN INCE'S SECOND TRIANGLE FILM

Frank Keenan, regarded by many as the peer of American character actors, is soon to be presented by Thomas H. Ince in a spectacular five-part melodrama of the Civil war, entitled, "The Coward." Singular importance attaches to this production because of the fact that it is to be the second Ince release on the newly-organized Triangle program of $2 picture plays. The production, which is from the pen of Mr. Ince, was only recently completed at Inceville, after two months of the most strenuous labors that ever characterized the big N. Y. M. P. plant.

To ardent theater-goers of recent years, the name of Keenan means much. For that reason it is expected he will prove a tremendous drawing power on the screen. He is an actor whose very heart is wrapped up in his work and it is said he has even eclipsed his numerous remarkable performances on the legitimate stage by his interpretation of the venerable Colonel Jefferson Beverly Winslow in this forthcoming Ince feature.

The plot of "The Coward" revolves about the insane fear that grips the son of Col. Winslow—a fear that results in the lad's desertion from the Confederate forces and the father's sacrifice in his stead. How the younger man is brought to a realization of his wrong-doing and how he atones is beautifully and powerfully portrayed by Mr. Keenan and his unusually strong supporting cast.

The scenes are entirely southern. Early in the story the simple home life of the colonel and his family is delightfully depicted in the many quaint settings employed. Then comes the war and with it the stupendous battle scenes that required a whole month in making. The closing scenes of the production are typical of the conditions that prevailed after the bloody conflict in the South. All have been pictureized with the customary Inceian skill and minute attention to detail, and none lacks for the want of thrill or human interest.

Inceville and its environs are particularly adapted to the production of such elaborate scenic features as "The Coward." The rolling mountains, rising majestically from the shores of the Pacific; the gaping gullies, the rippling streams, the hundred horses, all lend the picturesque atmosphere that was required for the story. Ince and his company did not once have to go outside the confines of the big plant to obtain an exterior scene. And the grandeur of the famed 18,000-acre ranch has been transplanted to the screen with an adroitness that has to be seen to be appreciated.

While Keenan bears the brunt of the burden in the piece, as Col. Winslow, the fine old southern warrior, the work of the other members of the cast is by no means overshadowed. Charles Ray, as Frank, the son, gives a pathetic portrayal of his character, while Gertrude Claire, the beloved character actress, is seen at her best in the role of Mrs. Winslow. Margaret Gibson plays the part of Amy, the sister; Charles K. French, the Confederate commander; and Nick Cogley, a colored "uncle."

FLORENCE NATOL VERSATILE VITAGRAPH STOCK ACTRESS

Florence Natol brought a wide and varied experience as a stock actress, acrobat and vaudeville performer to the Vitagraph Company, when she was elected to stock membership in this famous organization and the experience has stood her in good stead as a motion picture actress.

Florence Natol

Miss Natol was born in Kingston, Canada, March 1, 1880, and was christened Florence Beckwith, Natol being the name she adopted for stage use. As her parents died when she was young she was compelled to make her own living in the world and her brother-in-law, Harry Lindley, a comedian of note, offered her a position in a stock company of which he was the owner and manager, and it was in this company she began her career as an actress.

As is customary in stock companies, she was required to do a specialty between the acts of the drama, and being skilled in acrobatic work she incorporated this with character songs and dances in a turn that met with popular approval. A few of the many parts she played while a member of stock organizations include Lucinda in "The Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary," Lizzie Roberts in "The Lottery Man," Mrs. John Brown in "Mrs. Temple's Telegram."

Miss Natol's advent in motion pictures was necessitated by the death of her husband, who left her with four children, Fred, Lorna, Beulah and Irene. As it would have been impossible for her to continue with her stock work and still care for her children she determined to try the new art of posing before the camera. An application to the Vitagraph Company gave her the desired opportunity and since September, 1914, she has been playing character leads with this famous photoplay producing company.

"Vanity Fair," the great Edison masterpiece starring Mrs. Fiske, which was recently completed at the Bronx studios of the Edison Company, contains an elaborate ballroom scene which for size and magnificence is said to be unrivalled.

GEORGE OVEY, CUB COMEDIAN TO BE ADVERTISED WIDELY

With the idea of assisting the exhibitor to realize upon the rapidly growing popularity of George Ovey and of the new Cub comedies, David Horsley's new comedy brand on the Mutual program, a tremendous publicity and advertising campaign has been planned and is now put into effect to reach and attract the motion picture patron.

Material in different forms, such as life-size cutouts, slides, photos and other matter of "the funniest man in America," with his Cub, has been prepared and is available to exhibitors. In addition a publicity undertaking covering many hundreds of newspapers throughout the country has been effected by which the exhibitor will profit.

George Ovey is one of the big sensations in films. Six months ago he was entirely unknown to motion picture audiences. Today his name is known in many quarters and his fame continues to spread.

The Cub comedies, with Ovey as the leading comedian, are likewise becoming popular. This is best indicated in the weekly increase in the orders for prints and also from the letters of commendation received from the exhibitors.

Beside the Cub comedies, extensive means of exploitation will also be in vogue in the interests of the Centaur features and other David Horsley productions.

VALLI VALLI RE-SIGNED FOR COMING METRO FEATURE

Valli Valli who became a Metro star when she appeared in John W. Noble's very successful picture, "The High Road," one of the earlier Rolfe offerings, has been placed under contract with B. A. Rolfe Photo Plays Inc., for a new production for early autumn release. The feature picture will be in five acts and Edgar Jones whose picture, "An Enemy to Society," the George Bronson Howard play, is soon to be seen publicly, will direct it. Mr. Jones has begun casting and has assembled an exceptional supporting company.

Negotiations were conducted over the long distance wire between New York and Chicago, and the details were arranged by Max Karger for B. A. Rolfe and for Valli Valli on her own behalf. The contract was outlined and completed in twenty minutes and when it was confirmed by post the ground had been so well covered that no changes were found necessary.

The vehicle selected for Valli Valli is a novelty of exceptional strength, providing an emotional role for the star and giving her exceptional opportunities for the display of her unusual talents. The script has been done by Harry Chandlee of the Metro scenario division, from the play by Florence Gerald, "The Woman Pays."

MOROSCO ENGAGES UNA NIXON HOPKINS AS ART DIRECTOR

Following its arrangement for a specially written musical program for "Peer Gynt," starring Cyril Maude, which marked an epoch in the annals of regular program releases, the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company presents further indication of its progressiveness through its engagement of Mrs. Una Nixon Hopkins as art director with jurisdiction over the furnishings of all sets in its productions.

As in the case of many New York architects, who retain women decorators in order to secure the invaluable "woman's touch" in their flawless, but often cold creations, Mr. Morosco has foreseen the advantage of securing the services of a lady expert to supervise this particular department. Mrs. Hopkins is a distinct acquisition, having a national reputation as an artist and authority along this line. For years she has been one of the most authoritative writers on these subjects in the country, is on the regular staff of the Ladies Home Journal and the two Hearst publications, Harper's Bazaar and Good Housekeeping, and contributes regularly to the Craftsman, House Beautiful, the International Studio and magazines of similar caliber both in this country and abroad.

Mrs. Hopkins' writing has been correlative with her principal work, that of a designer. She studied art and architecture in Paris and is a housebuilder of note, some of her work for the millionaire colony in Pasadena being among the finest examples of the new art ideas on the Pacific coast.

ABANDONS STAGE FOR FILMS

Noted Stage Favorite, Impressed by Her Success Under Famous Players Management, Deserts Stage Indefinitely.

One of the most notable acquisitions from the stage to the screen was effected this week when the Famous Players Film Company induced the distinguished stage favorite, Pauline Frederick, to abandon the spoken drama permanently and appear exclusively on the screen under its management.

Pauline Frederick.

Pauline Frederick, who won distinction in the recent stage successes, "Joseph and His Brethren" and "Innocent," the latter one of last season's greatest metropolitan dramatic hits, made her debut before the motion picture camera in the Famous Players Company's elaborate photospectacle of Hall Caine's novel and play, "The Eternal City," which remained for two months at the Astor Theater, New York City, last spring, and in which she attained a sensational personal triumph.

Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players Film Company, explained when he requested the actress to forsake the legitimate stage indefinitely, that the demand for her continued appearance on the screen had become so great after the first tour of "The Eternal City" that it was her duty to the public to devote all of her time to motion pictures.

Miss Frederick said in a recent interview that the motion picture today is the most illimitable form of art that the world has ever known. Stage stars boast of having played, in the course of many years, before half a million people. Contrast this petty figure, obtained only after a score of years of constant activity, to the screen player's possession of an audience of thirty-five million a week in the United States alone! It was principally for these reasons that she has said good-bye to the oral stage and joined the stellar forces of the Famous Players.

HOWARD MITCHELL, DIRECTOR, SIGNED WITH THANHOUSER

From Philadelphia to New Rochelle is the jump that Howard Mitchell, Lubin director, has made within the last week. Film fans all over the country know the hefty "Mitch" for his splendid work with Arthur Johnson, with whom he was a co-director; but directing did not rob him of his genius for "putting it over" in a scene, and for a long time he continued to play heavies. He shines brightest in a fight, and Mr. Thanhouser, keen student of the strong points in his organization handed Mitchell a script with a corking fight in it for his first production. He "put it over" so successfully that George Marlo, leading man, came out of the fracas with a prettily colored eye. Mr. Thanhouser facetiously remarked that there would be more fights, and Marlo is still wondering whether that was meant for him or Director Mitchell.

"THE MIRTH OF A NATION" A FILM BURLESQUE IS NOW IN THE MAKING

The Universal will soon commence the work of production on "The Mirth of a Nation," a seven-reel travesty by H. H. Van Loan and Pat Rooney. The photoplay is "based on Mason and Dixon's famous novel, 'The Clansmen,'" and is "copyrighted 1915 by the Universal Film Mfg. Co."

Harry Myers, who produced the Universal Broadway Feature, "The Earl of Pawtucket," will direct "The Mirth of a Nation" in which Pat Rooney and Marion Bent will be featured. Rosemary Theby will be assigned to an important role, while Harry himself will browse around in the picture now and then.

Little Jimmie Rosen, who played "The Kid" in "The Newlyweds" and who also originated the role of "Buster Brown" in the stage, will cavort about in all the dignity of his two feet eight inches. Lee Kohlmar, who played with David Warfield for three years in "The Music Master," will be assigned to a comedy role. Work of production will commence at Coytesville, N. J., but, as Harry Myers wails, "Lord only knows where we'll wind up." Myers declares that "The Mirth of a Nation" is the funniest thing that ever escaped being put into a drug user's retreat. And Myers, the producer of "Baby," ought to know what's funny.

"The Mirth of a Nation" cast includes Hezekiah Spuffendike, Rumhouser Skynch, a kickapoo octoroon, General Nuisance and General Electric Graflexius Camera and an all star cast of Civil War veterans. It tells all about the horrible "slotter" at the battle of Bay Rum, and of the "carpet jag period" following the close of the war and the nefarious operations of the Cluck Cluck Clansmen.

The So-Called "Sensational" Picture

THE word "sensational" has come to be regarded, through its press usage, as almost synonymous with "morbid." Properly it has a much more innocent meaning. Dr. Robertson said, "He whose eye is so refined by discipline that he can repose with pleasure upon the serene outline of beautiful form, has reached the purest of the sensational raptures." Yet even that ascetic declaration is subject to misunderstanding and perversion without changing the use of the abused adjective.

Certain film subjects are quite generally classed as sensational, in a disparaging sense. But the criticism comes too easily. There is no hard and fast divisional line, no well defined meridian between different classes of film subjects. The same subject may, indeed, be given either uplifting or degrading treatment by different producers. Much that is only "sensational," in the modern meaning of the word, gets by in the name of art; and much that is really art awakens prurient thought in prudish minds.

The majority of people ARE prudes. They will not acknowledge the existence of what they know to be true, if there be evil in it. The polygamous habits of a percentage of married men; the unchastity of a percentage of unmarried men; the exceedingly definite establishment and absolute solidity of the social evil; even the scientific recognition of the pervert; these things may be joked about in male society—but recognized as a human element, never.

We are idealists of an unpractical sort. We cast our eyes upward and protest that we, at least, are pure. And if anyone tells us the truth about ourselves, we denounce him in vigorous terms as pandering to vile emotions—somebody else's vile emotions, of course.

Yet the strongest writers of literary history are those who have dredged out rather than sunk into the muck of truth beneath the fair surface of idealism. There is something more than "sensationalism" in the interest with which normal human beings regard those bits of hideous truth which are so generally concealed behind a noble lie.

There must be a place in the scheme of things for the picture that tells some of the avoided truths. Those dark life-facts that everyone knows and no one mentions are nourished and vitalized by concealment. In the light of recognition and calm, intelligent consideration they would wither and wane. What better medium for that purpose than the motion picture?

These, more or less modified, constitute the so-called "sensational" pictures. Obviously they can never be pictures for children or for immature eyes. Beyond that restriction who shall say that they do all harm and no good?

That the presentation of vice is interesting to normal, intelligent men does not mean that it is in itself attractive. We read with avid curiosity the news of calamity; but we do not wish for calamity. Our absorption in a "sensational" picture does not mean that we desire a similar experience for ourselves.

Frankly, we think much of the cry against sensational pictures is hypocritical. The picture that is made for the sole purpose of exciting prurient interest is one thing; the picture that boldly reveals a truth that is better for the light that is generally refused it is another. It should not be difficult to distinguish between them. The first kind is, of course, impossible. The other we think, as we said before, will find a useful place in the broader view of life.

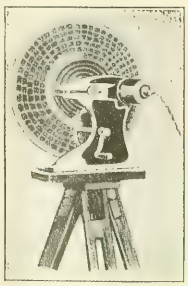
CENSORING THE SCENARIO.

A MEMBER of the Los Angeles Censor Board is endeavoring to introduce a system of censorship calculated to pick the flaws in a picture before money is invested in its manufacture. The scheme is to censor the scenario. This censor's motive is laudable, as its aim is to save the industry considerable expense and annoyance. Whether it is practical is open for discussion.

Under the title of "Censoring at the Fountainhead," an editorial in the January 23, 1915, issue of MOTOGRAPHY discussed this same question at considerable length. The suggestion originated with a well-known New York film man. His proposal was to censor the producer rather than the scenario. That plan of action, if less feasible, is at least more reasonable than the other.



The scenario, as boiled down by the producer, is little more than a scheme of action. Out of it two different producers would bring forth two entirely dissimilar actions. One might be above reproach, the other decidedly objectionable. Censoring the scenario would not solve the problem.

Censoring unquestionably should be done before the picture is taken, if it is to be done at all. Censoring the scenario helps some by eliminating some. But a harmless scenario is no guarantee that the finished film will pass the same censor board that O. K.'d the script. The objectionable part may be some bit of business or some setting whose details were not described in the scenario at all.

If censorship were an exact science, like surgery, it would be comparatively simple to instruct all directors in its principles and let them censor their own productions as they went along. Of course a majority of them do that at present, guided by their experience with censor boards in the past. But since censorship can never be scientific or even logical, films are bound to be wasted with the best of care.

Censorship will be wholly abolished in a few years. Meanwhile, so long as it persists, there can be little harm in experimenting with the censoring of scenarios, producers, players, anything to reduce the big waste caused by the rejection of finished products.

Modifications have been made to simplify a motion-picture camera and projector developed abroad some time ago, and previously described in this magazine, which is designed to use plates instead of a film. The machine as now constructed is fitted with a large circular disk in which the plates are set so that the exposures come one after the other in a spiral, instead of being arranged in rows extending from left to right across a rectangular plate as heretofore. The plate disk, both when used in the camera and in the projector, is revolved by a shaft which moves in a horizontal plane relatively to the lens, which is maintained in a fixed position.

Just a Moment Please

Ain't it h—— to have to come back to work after a holiday?

Yes, we find it that way, too.

However, since our job depends upon it, here goes to grind an installment of this piffle right out of the blue sky.

One bright spot in our existence the past few days was the arrival of the fair and dimpled Billie Burke in our midst, en route to the Pacific Coast to work for Director Ince. Her rapture over the bungalow and yacht which Ince has prepared for her coming and which she first lamped in the columns of this handbook of the industry, were only exceeded by her fright when the train started off with her as she was posing in the window of her special car for a bashful photographer.

Incidentally, that incident aboard the train would have made a corking scene for a Keystone comedy; but Billie is working with the Ince faction of the N. Y. M. P. instead of the Sennett, isn't she?—so there's no chance.

MANY THANKS, TOM.

Our old friend and former deskmate, Tom Hamlin, now managing editor of Amusements, the breezy little sheet dealing with vaudeville and motion pictures published in Minneapolis, saw fit in a recent issue to refer to us in a kindly way, recalling incidentally that we used to push the pencil on the Minneapolis Trib, back in the early days when Tom himself was some pumpkins on the staff. It sure recalled old times, Tom. Ah, them was the happy days!

We facetiously referred in this column last week to the desire of certain publicity men to try their hand at editing a paper. Straightway there blew into Our Burg last week one Tarleton Winchester, publicity-man-in-chief of the Paramount Corporation, and, by golly, T. W. proved he was there seven ways from the ace, both as publicity man and an editor, by getting columns of publicity in our daily press and then editing and publishing one of the breeziest, most interesting little convention dailies it has ever been our pleasure to lamp. Congrats, T. W. As an editor commend us to a publicity shark every time.

While we're on the subject we might mention to our Noo Yawk friends that we are in possession of a most artistic pen and ink sketch of this same Winchester person, but lest we cover him with blushes we are suppressing it. Never mind the thanks, old top; you'd do as much for us, we know.

OUR BURG.

W. W. Hodkinson of Noo Yawk was a bus. visitor in Our Burg on Thurs., Fri. and Sat. of last wk. Welcome to our city, W. W. Come again.

Among other out-of-town visitors in Our Burg during last wk. was Jesse Lasky, who says his address is California Limited No. 3, Santa Fe. Hope he thinks enough of our fair village to visit it again.

Carl Pierce of Bosworth, Inc., and Oliver Morosco Photoplay Co., wearing a smile a foot wide, was seen in the lobby of Our Burg's w. k. La Salle House on Sat. last.

Cecil De Mille, with as much hair as ever, flitted into and out of Our Burg on Thurs. last.

Geo. Carpenter, the chap as puts the fun in Reel Reels of Salt Lake City, Utah, said "Howdy" to friends in this Village last wk. Geo. is looking well and prosperous as when we last seen him in his own diggings. Guess that Salt Lake water agrees with him.

John Flinn of Noo Yawk, what was a visitor here last wk., found the life too slow for him and tripped back to Broadway on the next Limited.

In all the crowd what was in Our Village last wk. we missed Ben Schulberg and Pete Schmid, but then somebody had to sit on the lid while the rest was away.

The fishermen what vacationed in remote precincts over Labor Day is back to home once more, and actually brought some fish, so we know they caught something.

Vic. Hodupp, the world's greatest little business getter, has at last got space enough in the Mallers building to suit even him. That new film vault, Vic says, has "a seating capacity" of more'n 2,000 reels, but from the looks of Vic's booking sheets most of the time there'll be "nobody home."

Some Current Releases Reviewed

Essanay's "The Man Trail"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward.

THE rough and rugged life of a lumbering camp is depicted in all its rawness in the six reel feature "The Man Trail," which is to be Essanay's offering for September through the V. L. S. E. exchanges. It bristles throughout with action of a strenuous kind and the red blooded portion of the story is softened and refined by a pretty romance that finds a happy conclusion in the last few feet of the sixth reel.

E. H. Calvert is credited with the production of the tale, which is an adaptation of the novel of the same title from the pen of Henry Oyen. He has succeeded in getting the real lumber camp atmosphere over in a striking manner and there are several scenes in which hundreds of supernumeraries participate. Particular praise is due the director and his cameraman for the magnificent setting chosen for the love scene at the close of the story. It is strikingly beautiful, and done in oil and framed in an art gallery would be proclaimed a masterpiece.

Richard C. Travers has the leading role in "The Man Trail" and interprets it in a fashion that will not readily be forgotten. He is just the type of man needed for the part of "John Peabody" and fairly lives the character. Ernest Maupain as "Wolf John" creates a convincing personality who, despite his gruffness, wins his way to the hearts of all who watch the development of the story, and June Keith makes

The rivals dine at Belle's home.

"Belle" a winsome maid. Thomas McKarnie as "Bull Bart" thunders and storms about the lumbering camp of which he is in charge, and Arthur Bates as Old Nels does one of the best "bits" of the entire production. Hundreds will be found, following the release of the film, ready to swear that they have met Old Nels in real life, so realistic is his role.

John Peabody, as the story opens, is discovered to be a boyish, fun-loving fellow, who feels cramped in his father's big office in the city. Accordingly, when the opportunity offers for John to go to his uncle's lumber camp in the far north, he fairly tumbles over himself to get there. Upon his arrival at the end of the railroad he discovers that his uncle is a queer old man who believes that John must be the namby-pamby sort of man his father is, and accordingly, to toughen him to life in his new surroundings, has issued orders for no one to help John from the railroad station out to the lumber camp. Nothing daunted, John sets out afoot and arrives, tired but resolute, some hours later.

"Wolf John," as Peabody's uncle is called, is immediately impressed by John's sticktoitiveness and when the young man, later, still further proves his strength and determination, the uncle grows to positively care for his nephew. "Bull Bart," the foreman of "Wolf John's" lumber camp, soon becomes a rival of John's for the hand of Belle, the adopted daughter of "Wolf John," but the girl prefers the city man.

By way of revenging himself upon both "Wolf John" and the newcomer "Bull Bart" quits his post as foreman and goes over to a rival lumbering organization. In his new capacity he sets about making all the trouble for "Wolf John" that he can, and since Peabody, who is known in the camp as "John Mudd," is appointed foreman after Bart's departure, he, too, comes in for rough treatment.

Wolf John tells who Mudd is.

Foiled in his every attempt to make "Wolf John" forfeit his title to a certain bit of timberland, Bart deliberately stalks Peabody in an attempt to kill him. Ultimately Peabody proves "the quicker on the draw" and in a gun battle snuffs out the life of Bart.

John having triumphed in a notable fashion over all obstacles, "Wolf John" introduces "Mudd" to the camp as his nephew, John Peabody and his future partner. The partnership is still further cemented by John's engagement to Belle, which occurs against one of the prettiest backgrounds ever thrown on a motion picture screen.

"The Wolf Man"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward

A THRILLING story, dealing with the attempt of an unscrupulous captain of industry to secure the secret process by which tile may be given a new and exceedingly attractive glaze, without paying for it, forms the basis of "The Wolf Man," the four-reel Mutual Master-Picture of this week. C. B. Clapp is credited with being the author of the story, while Paul Powell is the director who skillfully produced it.

The old inventor at work.

Ralph Lewis as the Wolf Man has an infinite number of opportunities to show his capability, and is, perhaps, most convincing in the big scene in the fourth reel when he is exposed for the villain he is. His facial expression and general attitude while trying to bluff the stockholders into believing he has been falsely accused by Mole, his chemist, is splendid. Richard Cummings makes of the old inventor a character wonderfully true to life and of such a sort that the audience will instantly be attracted toward and sympathize with him. William Hinckley, as David, the grandson of the old inventor, and Billie West, as Mary, David's fiancee, are well cast and thoroughly convincing all the way through the piece. To Jack Brammall falls the role of Mole, the tile company's chemist, and he makes a real personage of what in another's hands might have been a minor bit.

From the standpoint of photography and direction, "The Wolf Man" is a thoroughly satisfactory offering and the flashbacks used to hold one's interest in the fourth reel, while the board of directors of the tile company are awaiting the arrival of David with his formulas, are splendidly handled, and will grip and hold any audience.

Old Benjamin Lord, and his grandson, David, discover a pottery glaze that will revolutionize the industry, as the tale begins, and one sees David depart with a sample of the pottery to visit the Wolf Man in his office at the pottery works. Since the Wolf Man and his partner are not on the best of terms, the former sees in the invention a means of acquiring the business for himself, if he can control it, though he hesitates about buying it.

Retaining the sample on the pretext that he wishes to test it, the Wolf Man turns the bit of clay over to Mole, the chief chemist of the pottery works, with instructions to discover the formula by which the new glaze is produced and then to imitate it. Mole succeeds in stealing a half completed formula from old Lord, but later, in endeavoring to secure the secrets needed to complete it, he has to kill the aged inventor. By using his knowledge of chemicals Mole succeeds in causing an explosion that leads to the belief that old Lord died while experimenting, though the Wolf Man really knows he was murdered.

At a stockholders' meeting, while he is attempting to reorganize the company and take the business away from his partner, David arrives to expose the method by which the formulas were really obtained. The exposé results in a postponement of the meeting and a request that David return with his proof and own formulas at a later hour that evening.

While David is experimenting and completing his formula proof that evening in company with Mary, the Wolf Man and Mole call and offer to buy the formula from David. When the latter spurns the offer made him, the Wolf Man pushes David and Mary into a concrete vault and slams the door. With the assistance of Mole a huge receptacle containing acid is so arranged that the chlorine gas which issues from it will pour into the locked room and kill both David and his fiancee. The Wolf Man then strikes Mole down, believing the crime will be automatically fixed on him, and departs. Mole does not die, however, but regains consciousness, and inspired with a wild desire for revenge hastens to the tile works to accuse the Wolf Man of murder.

At the stockholders' meeting the Wolf Man is all but triumphant when Mole enters and brings about his undoing. Rescuers at once start to search for David and Mary, and arrive in time to restore both to their senses. Upon all being disclosed, David is offered the place in the factory vacated by the Wolf Man's arrest.

Pathe's "The Failure"

Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

ANOTHER confederate is added to the already formidable group which is headed by the intriguing Hernandez, in the third episode of "Neal of the Navy," the Pathe-Balboa serial, written by William Hamilton Osborne and adapted by Douglas Bronston. The title of this chapter is "The Failure." The attempt to secure the packet which Annette now jealously guards is frustrated by a fire which destroys the Hardin house. The building, a large structure, burns to the ground. The scenes of the fire, which are filled with exciting action, are well directed and the photography is good.

"The Failure" is a striking example of the expense and pains to which the producers will put themselves to give the story a realistic staging. "Neal of the Navy" has the approval of the United States Naval authorities, who have granted the producers permission to photograph scenes aboard the ships and at the training stations. In this release some of the phases of life at the training station are entertainingly introduced, and it is likely that the advantages, duties and social activities of life in the navy will be accurately shown ere the story is concluded.

Neal and his foster-brother, Joe, take the examination for Annapolis. Joe has found a paper containing answers to all the questions. The loss of this paper is discovered and the men in charge of the examination announce that a search will be made. Joe places the paper in Neal's pocket. There it is found and Neal is disqualified. This does not discourage Neal, and he enlists in the Navy. He is determined to become an officer and intends winning his commission by conscientious work.

Inez induces Joe to meet her at a cafe. After they have been there some time Hernandez enters. Inez introduces him as her husband. This has the desired effect on Joe, and fearing the "husband" he agrees to steal the yellow packet from Annette. That night he hesitates. He realizes his obligation to Mrs. Hardin and Annette, but his fear of Hernandez is paramount and he is about to break into Annette's room when he discovers that the house is afire.

Annette is the last to leave the house. Remembering the packet she returns to the house. The brute-man, who has been earnestly watching her, follows her. After securing the packet she faints. The brute-man carries her from the burning building and tenderly places her on the ground near Mrs. Hardin and retires. In the meantime Neal has passed his examination and is admitted to the navy.

"The Blood Seedling"

Reviewed by John C. Garrett

ON September 30, "The Blood Seedling," an exceptionally dramatic offering, picturized from the short story of the same name written by the late John Hay, former secretary of state, U. S. A., will be released by the Selig Polyscope

Scene from Selig's "The Blood Seedling."

Company. Thomas Santschi does excellent work as Allen Golyer and he is supported by an extremely well balanced cast. The production is also directed by Santschi.

Allen Golyer, a young farmer, is a neighbor to Saul

Cheney and his family. He remonstrates with Cheney because Cheney's son, Gershom, is permitted to fill his head with "spirit notions." Mrs. Barringer and her pretty daughter, Susie, live in the village not far from Golyer's farm, and although the girl loves the young farmer she refuses to accept his proposal. Bertie Leon, a traveling salesman, sees Susie in the general store and gains an introduction to her. After calling at Aunt Abigail's home he finally wins the admiration of the maiden and she from thence on endeavors to avoid young Golyer.

Colonel Blood has presented Allen with a sapling which the farmer plants on his farm and in honor of Colonel Blood calls the sapling "The Blood Seedling." Susie tells Allen this day that she is engaged to Bertie Leon and after some time passes and she does not hear from him, she tells Golyer she has broken her engagement with Leon and then it is that Golyer proposes and is accepted by Susie.

For twenty years Allen and his wife live together in happiness and on the neighboring farm Cheney achieves reputation as a soothsayer. Golyer and his wife go to the home of Cheney and Susie recalls that twenty years ago that day Allen had planted the "Blood Seedling" and she had accepted his proposal.

Gershom Cheney goes into a trance and writes on a pad of paper "A spade, a man you hated, a grave beneath an apple tree." Then it is that Golyer breaks down and confesses that he had killed Leon years before and buried him underneath the tree.

Golyer then staggers home, goes to the "Blood Seedling" and removes a knife from the cleft in the tree. Later under the "Blood Seedling" they find his lifeless body. He had taken his own life.

"The Heart of Jennifer"

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon

HAZEL DAWN'S likeable, boyish personality and graceful ways and mannerisms scintillate all the way through "The Heart of Jennifer," her latest Famous Players picture, released on the Paramount program. It is distinctly a play for a girl of her type, and she clothes the role of Jennifer with the sparkling vivacity, good looks and pertinent independence to which it is entitled. James Kirkwood directed the picture in his usual efficient manner, besides playing the male lead in it as James Murray, the placid lumber foreman whose anger, once aroused, is a matter for serious consideration by his opposers.

Humorous situations mingle with highly dramatic moments through the story, making for a well-balanced play whose action is protected from becoming slow or monotonous by the rare quality of variety. One very clever situation is that in which Murray loosens Jennifer's foot from the rocks in a trout stream, and derides her for being so susceptible to injury, not recognizing the girl in her angler's costume of jacket and breeches.

Murray believes Jenifer guilty of the crime.

Taken as a whole, the picture has the ring of true sterling quality. This is evidenced by its superb settings, excellent photography, the tasteful, well-selected wardrobe of its cast and the many other details which mark a picture produced by a stable, progressive organization. In support of Hazel Dawn and James Kirkwood are Irene Howley as Agnes Murray, Harry Brown as Stephen Weldon, and Russell Bassett as Mr. Hale, Jennifer's father.

The accusation.

Stephen Weldon, young, good-looking and wealthy, wishes to marry Jennifer Hale, and on being refused by her seeks to force Jennifer's father to bring about the marriage by buying up a worthless note issued by the latter to tide him over a financial depression. But Mr. Hale has more love for his daughter than he has fear of failure, and, much to Weldon's surprise, he refuses to intervene in the latter's behalf. Angered and humiliated, the defeated suitor determines to ruin Hale.

While staying at the Hale summer home in the woods Jennifer meets James Murray, a lumber foreman. He falls in love with the girl and shortly after their first meeting proposes to her. Upon learning that Jennifer has pledged herself to marry Weldon in order to save her father from ruin, Murray offers his small fortune to save her from a man whom she does not love. He also offers himself as a substitute for Weldon, and is accepted.

After their marriage Weldon calls on Jennifer and succeeds in giving Murray the impression that there is a secret something between them. Jennifer's silence supports this suspicion. A breech results. Weldon meets Murray's sister, Agnes, wins her confidence and deceives her. She meets him on the day on which he has planned to leave town and shoots him. Circumstances, in Murray's mind, point to Jennifer as the guilty one, and, believing it to be his duty as her husband, he takes her up into the mountains, determined to protect her from the law.

Agnes, while fleeing, falls over the edge of a cliff and is picked up in a dying condition below. Before passing away she tells of shooting Weldon. The sheriff's posse overtakes Murray and Jennifer and is about to arrest the former when a man rides up with the news of Agnes' death and confession. A reconciliation between Murray and Jennifer follows.

"The Diamond From The Sky"

Reviewed by John C. Garrett

"THE LION'S BRIDE," chapter twenty-one of the North American serial, "The Diamond From the Sky," is full of engrossing interest from start to finish. Clean comedy is apparent throughout the chapter. Marmaduke Smythe, carrying the ever-prominent deer head, affords a hearty laugh when, after walking for days through the mountains, he spies a donkey and tries to mount him to ride part way out of the mountains.

"The Diamond From the Sky," which was last seen in the hands of the bill poster, is taken to the Santly Circus by the man and there he puts it up as stakes in a game of dice. Santly, the owner of the circus, wins the jewel, and presents it to La Belle, the lion tamer, who later, while in the lion's cage, is attacked by the beast, thrown to the floor and terribly mangled. We last see an arm and hand, apparently that of La Belle's husband, the circus clown, grasp the necklace and then disappear.

potion into his arm at every possible chance. Blair Stanley receives a telegram telling him that his mother is on the point of death. He tells Vivian that he is leaving for Virginia, but she manages through her wiles to persuade him to stay with her so they can better get hold of the Powell estate. She says she cannot remain alone, as she thinks that Durand and DeVaux are trying to double-cross them.

Esther again makes an effort to see Arthur, who continually asks if Esther had not been at his bedside, but he is told that it was merely a phantasy of his imagination and that he should never let this hallucination overpower him again, as it is very bad for him. Esther comes to the Powell mansion and is informed by the butler that John Powell had been removed to the country on the day before. The ever faithful Quabba, however, gets in touch with the gardener at the Powell estate, who is one of his own countrymen, and is informed that the master of the house has not been taken away, but that afternoon is to attend the Santly Circus, which is in town. Santly's Stupendous Circus has as its chief attraction La Belle, the lion tamer, whose husband, the clown, is jealous of the attentions paid to the girl by Santly, the owner of the circus. Santly wins the "Diamond From the Sky" in a crap game and presents La Belle with the gem.

Esther sees Arthur again.

Her husband later sees her in the arms of the manager and vows to kill them both.

Vivian, Devaux, Durand, Blair Stanley and John Powell arrive at the circus and are seated in one of the prominent boxes. Esther later comes in with Quabba and they are seated near the other party. The big attraction of the program starts. When La Belle, the lion tamer, enters the arena both Blair and Arthur Stanley see the famous Stanley heirloom glistening on her bosom, and raise up in their chairs. Just then the lion makes a lunge at La Belle, hurls her to the ground and paws her to death. Santly, who is standing near the cage, is shot down by La Belle's husband, and we last see "The Diamond From the Sky" taken from the lion tamer's neck by a mysterious hand and then disappear.

"The Great Question"

"THE GREAT QUESTION," a three-reel production, marks the launching of the Clipper brand of films on the Mutual program. This picture, featuring Harold Lockwood, the handsome and versatile leading man, as Morton Bagley, Jr., and May Allison, the winning little star, as Flora Donner, is to be released on September 18. A good precedent has been established and if the future releases prove to be as well directed and acted as this initial one the Clipper brand of films are bound to be popular. The story is one of which audiences never tire, and the handling of the scenes is done with remarkable cleverness, with the exception of one slip the director made. The hero is shown in one of the opening scenes reading a letter from Lois Valerie, an adventuress, and later, when the scene reverts to the day he receives this letter years before, he is seen to crumple the same letter up and throw it in the fire.

The photography in this production is splendid and the leads are well supported by a strong cast, in which are Morton Bagley, Jr., a young man who has had many love affairs, sits before the open fire in his apartments with a box of mementoes on his lap. One by one he takes out and destroys such mementoes, as they bring back his past love affairs. The last one to be taken out is a letter from Lois Valerie, an adventuress. The letter reads in part as follows: "Dear Morton:—I am writing to say farewell to you. Business comes before love, so although you are a dear little boy, I must say ta ta!" Visions of the past immediately appear before young Bagley and we see his life from the night he first met Lois Valerie in a cafe up to the time of the reading of this letter.

Morton Bagley, Jr., goes to a cafe with his friend, Paul Armstrong, and there is attracted to Lois Valerie, an adventuress. He manages to meet the woman and later many champagne parties for two take place in his bachelor apartments. His father hears of his attachment for the woman and gives her a large sum of money to relinquish all claims on his son. Young Bagley is heartbroken over the affair and finally condescends to go out West to his father's ranch and begin over.

Out in the western country the young man meets Flora Donner, the daughter of a rancher, and their friendship ripens into love. The young people are married and return to live in New York.

One night at a tango party at Bagley's club his wife discovers that he is paying much attention to another woman present and is neglecting her. He finally gets up and leaves her in Armstrong's company. Armstrong, seeing a way to take advantage of the girl, does so by pretending to console her. He takes her to Bagley's room in the club and there attacks her. A porter in the club happens to see Armstrong's act and immediately goes down and tells Bagley, who rushes to his club room, finds his wife lying unconscious on the bed and young Armstrong escaped. Bagley suspects the worst and, after a fight with Armstrong, he pushes his wife aside and returns home.

At the club all the women and men refuse to have anything to do with young Mrs. Bagley, with the exception of one hard-faced woman, who takes her home with her. Arrived at the woman's home, the young girl realizes that she has been trapped, and manages to get to the telephone and tells her husband that she is a prisoner in this house. After an exciting fight, young Bagley manages to rescue his wife and then he loses no time in sending a message to his father telling him that they are returning to the ranch. We last see the young couple happy in each other's love out West.

Lubin's "The Red Virgin"

Reviewed by John C. Garrett

ON September 16 the Lubin company will release "The Red Virgin," a three-reel production from the pen of Julian Louis Lamothe. The title role is played by Helen Eddy, who does some excellent dramatic work. She takes a double role—that of Rose, a sweet country girl, and later that of her daughter, Fay, known as the "Red Virgin."

There is a lot of action and many tense moments throughout the production, and the photography and direction are splendid. L. C. Shumway plays opposite Miss Eddy as Prince William of Moravia, and does convincing work. These two stars are strongly supported by Robert Gray, George Routh and Florine Garland.

Prince William of Moravia, being unwilling to marry the Princess Hilda of Sunderland, goes to America. He arrives in America and goes to a small village and here meets Rose, the daughter of Deacon Pettijohn. Their friendship ripens into love and prince William, knowing he must return to his home some time and, loving the girl, secretly marries her.

William is followed to America and one day the prime minister of Moravia comes to him and tells him of his father's death, and that in order to save his country he must return and marry the Princess Hilda, whom he has brought with him to America.

William, to gain time for his country, consents to the marriage and as he is embracing the Princess Hilda, Rose steps into the room. She pleads with him to explain this to her and asks him if they are not married. Knowing that it would mean ruination to his country if he admitted his marriage, he prince denies it, and Rose goes out into the wilderness and writes a farewell note to William telling him she is about to become a mother. The prince later finds the note and, believing Rose to be dead, goes back to his country.

Years later Rose's daughter, Fay, a wild creature of the woods, has been brought up to hate all men. One day she is seen by a famous actress and Clinton Steele, the man who had deserted Madeline, the woman who brought Fay up. They ask her to return to New York with them, as they realize she will become a great actress, and when Madeline sees the man she urges Fay to go to the city with them and for every tear she shed to make Steele shed a drop of blood. Fay goes to the city and in a few months blossoms forth a radiant actress.

A young artist, Pierre Lagarde, falls in love with her, and Fay poses for the artist's painting, "The Red Virgin." She toys with Steele's affections and one day he finds her at the artist's studio. He slashes the painting to shreds and then attacks the artist, but in the struggle he is killed. King William and his motherless son, Prince Franz, are ordered to abdicate the throne, and they come to America, where young Franz meets Fay and becomes her devoted slave. She discovers that his father is the man that ruined her mother's life and so determines to ruin the young prince's life. William, knowing that the woman has an influence over the prince, goes to call on her, and there recognizes in her the face of Rose. He explains to her how he had searched for Rose, but could not find her. Later father and daughter are reunited and, together with Prince Franz and her father, the girl returns to Moravia.

"The Money Master"

Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

INTENSELY human in theme, "The Money Master," a five-part George Kleine production for release through Kleine-Edison, is uncommonly interesting and carries a general appeal. The numerous characters who figure prominently in the development of the plot are brought together during its unfolding by coincidence, and ere the story ends each is influential in bringing about the other's ultimate happiness.

The story, adapted from the successful stage drama, "The Battle," by Cleveland Moffett, is rather complicated, there being a rapid change of scene in the action of the earlier portion of the plot. In the central figure, John Haggleton, the financial king whose theory is that success is only the result of ambition and the survival of the fittest, the author has created a character true to life. He is a type not infrequently found in everyday life—the so-called "self-made" man, whose confidence born of success, no matter how attained, is his most valuable asset.

Frank Sheridan is admirably cast as Haggleton, who, for a time, gives up his luxurious home and starts without a penny as a laborer to win the affection of his son, who has been separated from him for years. "The Senor's Silver Buckle"

Reviewed by John C. Garrett

"THE SENOR'S SILVER BUCKLE," the two-reel American production to be released on September 13, is an entertaining picture based on a romantic and adventurous story. Edward Coxen as George Davis, a young surveyor, and Winnifred Greenwood as Alice, the daughter of an old pioneer, are featured. George Field as Felipe, the son of old Miguel, also does convincing work.

Henry Otto is responsible for the direction of this picture and he has obtained very good results. The scenic beauties of the country in which the production was filmed adds much to the picture and the most artistic spots were evidently chosen. Excellent photography is apparent throughout the production.

As the picture opens we see Senor Cabello, a Spaniard of the early Californian days, leave his home, accompanied by his peon servant, Miguel, and together they bury an old silver chest. An old settler's wagon is seen to drive up some days later and John Monroe, a pioneer, and his wife build their home near the site of the buried treasure, using as lumber for their cabin the tree which was nearest the buried treasure.

Twenty years later old Miguel, who is now near his death, calls his son Felipe to him and gives him a silver buckle, telling him of how years before he had gone with his master to bury the treasure; of how the location of the treasure had been scratched on the buckle, and then of how he had killed his master to obtain the secret. He gives Felipe the buckle and tells him to go and search for the buried chest.

John Monroe, the settler, is still living in the original cabin with his daughter, Alice. George Davis, a young surveyor who is surveying the surrounding country, is a very good friend of Alice and they are together constantly. The twentieth anniversary of the building of the cabin comes around and Alice, her father and the young surveyor hold a celebration on the spot where the old tree once stood. For a table the girl turns over a washtub and places it over the stump of the old tree.

Felipe arrives in the mountains and, after recognizing some of the marks which he knows are near the buried treasure, he starts to hunt for it. However, as the tree stump is covered up, he gauges the direction from the wrong tree and in his digging for the treasure he comes upon the skull of Senor Cabello. Later the young Spaniard sees Alice remove the tub from the tree stump and then realizes that he had been searching in the wrong place. In the dead of night he comes to the spot and is digging for the treasure when Davis, led on by some unseen hand, arrives on the spot. The Spaniard covers the hole he had been digging and, after stabbing the young surveyor, escapes; but he loses the silver buckle, which is found by Alice.

A pretty scene from American's "The Senor's Silver Buckle."

Some days later, after Davis has recovered from his wounds, Alice shows him the buckle which she had found. They accidentally come upon the place where the Spaniard had been digging, and then dig up the chest of jewels.

"Tish's Spy"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward

ANOTHER one of the famous "Tish" stories will be released by the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company on Tuesday, September 14, the picture again featuring Camille D'Arcy as "Tish," which is the abbreviation for Letitia, the lady's real name, supported by Richard C. Travers, the popular leading man, as Jim McDonald, a "moneyed loafer," and Lillian Drew as pretty Jane Newcomb.

The story is laid, as were the others in the series, amid outdoor scenes of clear splendor, and laughs come thick and fast, due not alone to the amusing complications of the plot, but also to the real comedy in the way of "business" enacted by the principals.

As the story opens, Jane Newcomb quarrels with Jim McDonald, who is wildly infatuated with her, because she asserts that he is nothing but a "moneyed loafer." She refuses to marry him and to teach him a lesson resolves to become a "lady chauffeur" for "Tish" Carberry, who, with her companions, Aggie and Lizzie, is planning to start into the wilds of Canada in search of a place where Aggie's hay fever may be cured.

Jane's father, who has learned of his daughter's strange decision to become a female Barney Oldfield, engages a red-haired detective to follow and be responsible for her safety, while Jim McDonald, learning of her intention, likewise tags along, with the hope of inducing her to relent and marry him.

resort are frightened nearly to death by a big snake which chases them toward the river. "Tish" finally stops the stampede at the water's edge and restores her little company once more to its normal condition.

Later "Tish" proves a real heroine when she wakes up in the middle of the night, thinking a burglar is in the vicinity, and with her rifle shoots a tremendous hole in one of her shoes before she discovers that the innocent shoe was the suspected burglar.

Jane disappears from the camp next day in a canoe and is shortly followed by the other ladies in a clumsy old rowboat. The situation gives rise to innumerable chances for fun as, one after another, the boats are tipped over and their occupants plunged into the chilly waters of the quiet lake.

Even the red-haired detective and Jim McDonald eventually find themselves in the water, but since Jim is enabled to rescue Jane he feels well repaid for his ducking. The detective, after expressing his indignation over the catastrophe that has befallen him, explains his mission in the Canadian wilds and quits his job, Jane seemingly now being amply protected by her fiance, though she humorously explains, as the film closes, that she only married him "to take care of him."

MANY OF NOTED REAL STARS ARE BECOMING REEL STARS

Hailed as a marvel of mimetic art, surpassing all expectations of the merits of motion picture creation, "The Birth of a Nation," now in its eighth month of prosperity at the Liberty Theater, New York, began its Philadelphia engagement Saturday evening (September 4) at the Forrest. Within a few weeks another famous Quaker City playhouse will also be offering picture dramas at the regular scale of theater prices. In New York before the end of the month, when the Knickerbocker opens with Triangle Film Corporation plays at these prices, there will be three Broadway theaters devoted to the new art at the old scale of prices for the spoken and singing attraction.

On the other hand, the flesh-and-blood stellar attractions are being offered at cut prices. For example, Robert Edeson has just finished an engagement at the Walnut Street Theater, Philadelphia, at 15-25-50-75 cents. Emma Dunn, formerly featured by Belasco and Brady, is the visiting star there this week at similar cheap prices.

Such a momentous revolution has the new era of stage art brought about. More than a hundred of the most popular stars have been snared by the Triangle. De Wolf Hopper is now in California for a year before the camera, making the jump from legitimate to the motion picture play direct and not by the usual route, via stock and vaudeville. Billie Burke, Raymond Hitchcock, Douglas Fairbanks, and a host of others merely postpone the opening of their regular seasons to devote their art to the new theater.

Many of those who are not under long contract to work under Griffith, Ince and Sennett will soon be playing in the flesh on one side of Broadway while their California work is shown in Triangle star combinations at the Knickerbocker Theater across the way.

"TRILBY" WITH CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG, A SCREEN TRIUMPH

"Trilby," the first release of the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation, opened Monday night, September 6, at the Forty-fourth Street Theater, New York. The production, an artistic triumph in five acts, is fully worthy the distinction of introducing to the motion picture world the product of the industry's latest and one of its most important factors, Equitable. It was received as was to be expected—with great applause, admiration, and enthusiasm.

The musical accompaniment, arranged by S. L.

Scene from "Trilby," an Equitable feature.

Rothapfel, formerly managing director of the Strand Theater, is wonderful. Clara Kimball Young and Wilton Lackeye are seen in the leading parts of "Trilby," the most important and most magnificent production of recent date. A full review of "Trilby" will appear in next week's issue.

The Washington theater, situated at Forty-fourth street and Fifth avenue, Brooklyn, the handsomest and the newest playhouse in the city of churches, will throw open its doors to the public the latter part of September.

B. S. Moss, who controls the Regent, Hamilton, Prospect, Jefferson and Eighty-sixth street theaters, will direct the policy of the new playhouse, which will be conducted as a high class motion picture theater with prices ranging from ten to twenty-five cents. A feature of the entertainment will be the musical program which will consist of soloists, an augmented orchestra and a pipe organ.

BILLIE BURKE OFF FOR COAST

Latest Triangle Star Obtains in Motography First Glimpse of Bungalow and Yacht Prepared for Her

On Wednesday of last week Chicago had the pleasure of entertaining dainty, dimpled, debonaire Billie Burke, from the East, with the red gold glinting in her hair on the first stage of her jump west to engage in moving pictures with the new Triangle Film Corporation. Billie Burke is the first Frohman star to go in for moving pictures, and she certainly has the best reason thus far advanced for the artiste to enter motography. Primarily Messrs. Ince and Sullivan have written for her exclusive appearance the quaintest and cleverest scenario on a Scotch theme in eight reels in which she will appear in roguish, elfish, winsome sort of a role, one peculiarly adapted to her protean powers. She will have in support a cast embracing one of America's greatest character actors, W. H. Thompson, and other notables. Secondarily Billie Burke is to receive for her five weeks' work in the one picture the tidy fee of $40,000, together with an allowance of $2,000 for her costumes, and seven fares to and from New York to California, not to remark a spacious bungalow on Catalina and a private yacht at her disposal, all of which easily establishes a new high water mark for moving picture service.

Billie Burke.

Billie Burke and her husband, the famous Flo Ziegfeld, were met at the Twentieth Century Limited by George Bowles who has "had 'em in line" for five weeks past at the Illinois and now has 'em at the Colonial to see "The Birth of a Nation" at the regular one and two dollar tariffs; together with Mason Peters who is to manage the Triangle attractions at the Studebaker, and representatives of all the daily papers doubly armed with pencils and cameras. It was an imposing welcome and quite fussed the modest little lady, but her husband urged her to do her duty, so she posed graciously and gracefully.

The LaSalle Station is not as bloomingly light as the land of the Midnight Sun and she was asked to get back into the train, look out of the window and wave for the uplift of ambitious photographers. Miss Burke did and climbed back on the train, but she had only one wave to the responsive chorus of clicking cameras when the switch engine, that knew nothing about the art, began to briskly drag the empty train out toward the yards. She gave a scream and started for the rear platform, but the train had gained headway and it looked as if some rival picture concern was about to kidnap the star. Then George Bowles, who was once an athlete in jumping in and out of the pit on the Chicago Board of Trade, caught the fair lady and with a flying leap she was restored to her friends with her hat on straight.

"I do not mind surprises, but kindly give me a hint after this," said Miss Burke as she climbed into a taxi and was whirled away to the Blackstone cuddling her Scotch doggie that had been her accompanist in all the commotion.

When Miss Burke gave audience to the representative of Motography, she was engaged in looking at that periodical and taking the first view of her bungalow and yacht, pictured therein. "The Triangle is certainly on the square," she remarked appreciatively as she studied the look ahead.

"This will be my sixth visit to Los Angeles and I have agreeable anticipations—for the people of California are the most courteous and hospitable I have ever met, and the very air out there is a tonic to me. I do not wonder that it is fine for photography, for one necessarily looks pleasant—Ince is a prince and Griffith a genius—I shall certainly get along. I do hope I will not be camera shy!"

"Nonsense," interrupted her admiring husband, "It's nothing but a click, don't pay any attention to it! You will be all right."

"You see," continued Miss Burke, "I take my art very seriously; and I never could quite understand why people called me cute and cunning, until I saw myself in pictures. A winter or two ago the Kinamacolor people came up to my home on the Hudson and caught me sledding and snowballing. They presented me with a reel of myself so that I saw my celluloid self and was agreeably surprised at the playful results.

"My costumes for the Scotch fantasie have been made from specially designed plates and my mother thinks they are charming and she has exquisite taste—so has Flo—and he is the last word in costumes. My best friends and sincerest critics and the home jury are satisfied, so that is a hopeful beginning. Presently it will be up to Motography and the other papers to pass upon the substance in the shadow and they will speak for themselves.

"I have been repeatedly urged to appear in pictures and Tom Ince finally won me over. Now do not for a moment get the idea that I am leaving the stage for the screen—I am doing this one picture for Mr. Ince and then I return to my vocation on the theatrical stage. While I believe that pictures is one of the most ingenious entertainments ever devised and has real artistic values, I am strong for the stage with its spoken word, the influence of the dramatist and the personality of the artists. Moving pictures are wonderful beyond compare, interesting and attractive; but, I do not just know how it will be without the inspiration of the audience."

Mr. Ziegfeld corroborated his wife's statement that she would be on the stage this season in a play under his management, as yet untitled. He further declared that Thomas Ince was anxious to sign up Miss Burke for a three-year contract at $150,000 per annum, but she did not want to give up the stage. He is an enthusiast in pictures and was one of the first managers in New York to introduce moving pictorial effects in play—the famous tiger chorus being one of the pioneer effects of music and animated photography on the theatrical stage.

FUTURE LUBIN V. L. S. E. RELEASE GOOD COMEDY

Since its completion, the new Marie Dressler feature, "Tillie's Tomato Surprise," that will be released by the V. L. S. E. on September 20, has been carefully guarded by the Lubin Company. The first view that will be had of Miss Dressler's new picture will be at a private showing arranged by Miss Dressler, to which have been invited many of New York's most prominent society people, and a choice gathering of celebrated stars of the speaking stage.

No one but the privileged few officials of the Lubin Company and the V-L-S-E have seen the feature screened; but it is reported to be the most excruciatingly funny production ever recorded in motion pictures. The first still pictures that have been received, appear to testify to the truth of these remarks.

These stills show situations and depict facial expressions that in themselves are irresistible laugh provokers. Marie Dressler has always been funny. She can assume more humorous attitudes, and "pull" more comical faces than any woman on the stage or screen, and the most important part of her acting, is that the camera registers every one of her glances and facial contortions.

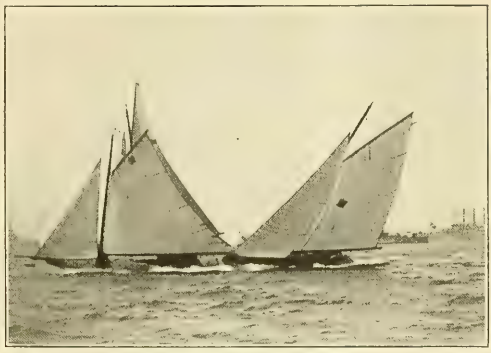
SECOND MUSTANG COMPANY IS FORMED AT WESTERN STUDIO

Dispatches from the western studios of the Mustang Company announce the forming of a second company for the making of the two reel releases of this brand for the Mutual's new $8,000,000 program. The first of these releases will feature Helene Rosson, William Stowell and Jack Richardson. Richardson has been lined up with the Mustang for a long series of snappy western plays. He will be cast for "the heavy," a role which eminently fits his handsome and impressive bearing and personality. The title and release date of this first of the Mustang features for the regular program are yet to be announced.

The next of the two reelers of the Mustang brand will feature Anna Little and E. Forrest Taylor as leads and Mr. Richardson will appear in the cast in his favorite role of picturesque villainy. These photoplays carry stories strong with dramatic situations and will be in modern western settings, with plenty of thrills and strong passages.

"Man Afraid of His Wardrobe" is the title of the first of the Mustang Star features, three reel productions for the Mutual's regular program. This is the first of the "Buck Parvin in the Movies" series, with scenarios by Charles E. Van Loan, baseball fiction writer. The preliminaries of this production have already been begun at the Mustang studios under the general supervision of Mr. Van Loan. In this first three reeler Art. Acord, famous cowboy actor, and Miss Anna Little, the feminine star of the series, are featured. They have reported at the studio and the work has begun. It is announced that "Man Afraid of His Wardrobe" will be ready for release October 2.

BALSHOFER PROVES HIMSELF A REAL JACK OF ALL TRADES



In this day of specialization in motion pictures, as in other things, the all-round man who can do anything, from writing the scenario to developing and printing the negative, is something of a rarity. Which is one of the reasons why Fred J. Balshofer, president and general manager of the Quality Pictures Corporation, is such an interesting personality. It is nearly fifteen years since a hustling, ambitious youngster walked into the diminutive Lubin laboratory, then in a Philadelphia back alley, and asked for a job. That marked the beginning of Fred J. Balshofer's career in filmland. It was not long before he gained a reputation for versatility, that was destined to carry him far. There was practically nothing in motion picture manufacture to which he could not turn his hand in an emergency. About eight years ago he tired of taking down a salary, even though it was a big one, and determined to branch out into the manufacturing end of the business on his own account. With Adam Kessel and Charles C. Baumann he formed the New York Motion Picture Company and a buffalo's head on a ten-dollar bill determined the brand name. The Bison films, later called the "101 Bison," undoubtedly the most successful motion picture of that period of the industry's history, came into being. Mr. Balshofer produced three reels a week, writing the scenarios, acting, directing and often turning the camera crank, which might be called a regular job, especially in this day, when a director, with a full staff of actors and cameramen and with a script all prepared, counts himself lucky to finish a single reel in the same time.

Fred J. Balshofer

When Mr. Balshofer severed his connection with the New York Motion Picture Company, for a year and a half he engaged in producing the Sterling comedies, with Ford Sterling in the leading role. But it had long been his ambition to make feature pictures, multiple reel subjects of distinctive character, and early this year he formed the Quality Pictures Corporation, releasing through Metro, with Francis X. Bushman and Marguerite Snow as his stellar attractions. Within the past fortnight he has engaged Beverly Bayne, the noted screen actress, for a term of years.

He sent his wife to Chicago and was arrested at the Union station on complaint of the Shaw Taxicab Company because he couldn't pay his bills. He was taken to a justice court and arraigned for trial.

MISSOURI.

A delegation of negroes called upon Mayor Kiel of St. Louis, Mo., and protested against the exhibition of the moving picture drama, "The Birth of a Nation," claiming that the picture depicted scenes in the South during reconstruction days which reflected upon the negro race and which were liable to cause race prejudices and cause trouble. Mayor Kiel took the matter up with City counselor Dawes, who rendered the opinion that the Mayor has no power to interfere with the production, as there was no city ordinance against the exhibition of any moving picture production in the City of St. Louis.

An ordinance to delegate to the park commissioner of St. Louis, Missouri, the power to censor moving-picture films, before their exhibition in St. Louis has been introduced in the Board of Aldermen. The ordinance was drafted by Commissioner Cunliff, as the result of numerous protests against the production of films purporting to depict the history of the Leo Frank case, now being shown in several St. Louis theaters.

The new charter provides that the park commissioner may be given power to exercise "supervision and control" over public recreation functions, amusements and entertainments not connected with the city.

An injunction restraining the police department and Prosecuting Attorney Howard Sidener, of St. Louis, Missouri, from interfering with the production of the film play "The Birth of a Nation," which began a five weeks' engagement at the Olympic Theater August 29, was granted by Circuit Judge Kimmel at his home.

A petition asking for a restraining order was filed after closing hours of the Epoch Producing Company, and named as defendants the Board of Police Commissioners, Chief of Police Young, Chief of Detectives Aliendar and Prosecutor Sidener. The suit was filed after Prosecutor Sidener announced that he would do everything in his power to prevent the production of the film play, on the grounds that the film contained scenes which reflected unjustly on the negro race and would tend to produce race prejudices.

The petition filed by the Epoch Company alleged that the film play had been approved by the National Board of Censors, and that the report of the board dated last January 20, "enthusiastically indorsed the spectacle, and declared it was a great step forward in motion picture productions."

The petition stated that the film had been produced for many weeks in Boston, New York, Chicago, Milwaukee and other places and had not created any prejudice. It was further alleged that the defendants without warrant or authority of law, threatened to arrest the plaintiffs, if they produced the spectacle.

The plaintiffs stated that in carrying out the contract to produce the play in St. Louis it has already incurred an expense of $5,000, all of which amount it will lose and also additional sums unless a restraining order is maintained.

Delegations of white citizens have also done the same, notably a committee representing the Civic League.

In the meantime, while the matter is being fought out in the courts, the theaters showing the film "The Birth of a Nation," are reaping a harvest, the theater being crowded to capacity both afternoon and at night.

The Mississippi Valley Trust Company of St. Louis, Mo., kept its doors open Sunday, while the directors, officers and employes posed for photoplay, in their every day official capacities. St. Louis financiers say that this is the first time in the history of St. Louis that a financial institution opened its doors on a Sunday. The scenario written for national production by G. Prather Knapp of the trust company, include certain scenes of a business romance, which must be photographed in the office of a large financial institution on a busy day.

D. C. Cox, manufacturing director of the photoplay producing company, decided it was impossible to make these scenes in life-like manner in a studio, and equally impossible to intrude on the regular business of any large bank or trust company, with actors, camera men and apparatus.

President Breckinridge Jones, of the Mississippi Valley Trust Company, was confronted with the problem and his consent was given to the staging of the play in the trust company's office on a Sunday, and to the having of such officers and employes as were willing to do so, enact their every day characters as trust company attaches.

Biograph Company—The directors rescinded their former action, declaring a script dividend and now state they will leave their surplus undistributed. This establishes a new precedent in the motion picture field and explains the decline in the market during the past four or five weeks.

New York Picture Corp: The market has been very unsettled, but selling pressure has been in considerable evidence. Most of the trading, however, is in small lots.

General Film Corp., preferred: The market in this stock has become absolutely stagnant. It is somewhat difficult to offer an adequate explanation as to why a security—which has been paying 7% for a number of years—cannot secure a better bid than 40.

Triangle Film Corp.: Average trades on the New York Curb are something over 1,000 shares. Apparently the stock is in fair demand and the extensive advertising is making itself felt.

Mutual Film Corp.: There have been a fairly large number of people with their minds made up to buy Mutual if it goes lower. The strengthening of the program together with the very drastic changes in the business policy, seem to have had a very decided stiffening effect on all those connected with the organization throughout the country. The preferred is in demand with very little offered.

North American Film Corp.: Bookings of "The Diamond from the Sky" continue to increase each week. From information based on reports by the various exchange managers, the company expects additional bookings by the end of the year of between $300,000 and $400,000. When this is realized it will put the total bookings well over the $1,000,000 mark. Sales of the preferred have taken place at figures above 70. Stock is firmly held and options, at considerably higher figures, have been asked for within the week.

Permit to do business in Texas was granted at Austin September 1, to the Equitable Motion Picture Corporation of Wilmington, Delaware. Capital stock $10,000. Texas headquarters at Austin.

Dallas, Texas, will get an even break with New York and other eastern cities in the showing of the official moving pictures of war scenes taken in Germany during the first year of the war. These pictures are said to be the finest of their kind ever produced. When picture men were ordered to make the films they were advised to get onto the firing line and to make every minute's time count. Permission to take the pictures was secured from the German Government by the New York Zeitung, and immediately upon the completion of the work the Progressive Feature Film Company of Dallas, Texas, began negotiations with the result that the pictures are to be shown at Dallas on date of release. There are about 100 of the reels featuring the war drama. L. W. Miller, of the Progressive Feature Film Company, announces that his company has secured the rights for Texas, Oklahoma and Louisiana, and that the films would be ready for distribution within the next ten days.

A moving picture to be known as "On the Banks of the San Antonio River by Moonlight," is being prepared by Fred A. Archambault in San Antonio, Texas. The actors are all members of the younger society set of San Antonio, and the scenes are laid on the banks of the San Antonio river, and in the parks and gardens of that city. About fifty of the society folks of San Antonio, including the most prominent, are included in the caste.

CHICAGO GOSSIP

A. M. Gollos opened his rejuvenated Jefferson Theater, Saturday, September 4. The seating capacity of this house has been doubled and the theater redecorated throughout. The attendance Saturday was 3,800, Sunday 4,100, Monday (Labor Day) 3,400.

Nate Ascher opened his beautiful Lakeside Theater, 4720 Sheridan Road, September 4, to a record crowd.

The pictures made for the Simmons Manufacturing Company of St. Louis by George L. Cox proved so successful that Mr. Cox has been commissioned to go to Kenosha this week and take several thousand feet of this company's factories and product in that city.

The divine Sarah has again disappointed the public by postponing her American tour, and no one is more disappointed than A. M. Gollos, president of the Photoplay Releasing Company, who owns the state rights on the picture "Sarah Bernhardt at Home." Mme. Bernhardt will, however, come to this country in October, which gives Mr. Gollos more time to work out his advertising plans and sell state rights. California was disposed of last week at a handsome figure.

W. W. Hodkinson of the Paramount Company spent Thursday, Friday and Saturday in our midst. He was accompanied by Mrs. Hodkinson.

Hazelhurst, Georgia, is a town of 1,200 inhabitants that has no moving picture theater. S. L. Rothapfel please note.

Hans Spanuth is sojourning in New York for a few days selling state rights on the Tribune war pictures. Advertise in Motography, Hans, and stay at home.

A Paramount Convention was held in Chicago last week. The story appears elsewhere in this issue.

C. Lang Cobb, Jr., postcards us from Saratoga Springs, N. Y., marking his card En Tour. Time was when folks going to S. S. had to walk back. Better luck than that to you, C. Lang.

Harry Grossman of the Lincoln Cycle of Photodramas was in Chicago last week. He has had several splendid offers for his film, one of them guaranteeing six weeks in loop houses, but at last word from him he had not decided which one of the offers appealed most to him.

NOTES FROM ALL OVER

The American Film Company at Santa Barbara is making rapid strides in the production of pictures which will be given the public under the Clipper and Mustang brands.

After a long season west, or rather a number of long seasons west, Harry McRae Webster, who for a long time has been chief producer at the Essanay Chicago plant, has finally returned to his old stamping ground, the Rialto. He was engaged to come east by the Universal Company to direct the productions in which King Baggot appears, and he is now working at the Imp studio, in New York City.

As a fitting climax to one of the most realistic scenes in the forthcoming World Film production of "The Family Cupboard," the famous William A. Brady play, Director Frank H. Crane, Sunday morning, transported the entire ballet from "Chin Chin" to the World Film Studios at Fort Lee, N. J.

President S. S. Hutchinson has just approved plans to practically double the present area of the American Film plant at Santa Barbara. Present details contemplate what is to be the largest stage under glass in the world, and when work under construction is completed the "Flying A" studios will cover approximately seven acres.

The Bobbs-Merrill Publishing Company is printing a beautiful photoplay edition in honor of the release of the Selig Red Seal Play, "The House of a Thousand Candles." Meredith Nicholson, author of the novel has written a preface and the volume will be illustrated by taking scenes from this wonderful film play.

In spite of the fact that many legitimate companies who have gone in for pictures have made attractive offers to George Fawcett to act for them on the screen, the noted character actor has signed to appear in a Broadway Universal Feature entitled "Tainted Money."

Mack Sennett has arranged to enlarge the administration building at the Keystone studios and to add to the suite of offices in the scenario department. The growth of the scenario's staff has been so great since the organization of the Triangle Film Corporation and the resultant demand for more and bigger features that it has outgrown its quarters.

Frederick J. Bird of the Nicholas Power Company sales department, and one of the valuable cogs in the organization which has placed the Power's motion picture projecting machines on such a high plane, has recently returned to his desk after a sojourn of several weeks in the southwestern states. Mr. Bird reports business in general to be excellent and that we may look forward to a most prosperous year, and one that promises to outshine any previous year since the inception of the motion picture industry.

Wm. J. Bowman, director at the Quality studio, has completed "A Corner in Cotton," written by Francis X. Bushman, in which Miss Marguerite Snow is starred.

Miss Charlotte Burton, who plays the role of Vivian Marston—the adventuress—in "The Diamond From The Sky," the $800,000 serial photoplay now being produced by the American Film Company, has become one of Santa Barbara's most popular residents. Versatile, vivacious, good to look upon and a charming personality have won for her an enviable place in the esteem of her acquaintances.

Frank Griffin, one of Sennett's directors with the Keystone Film Company, has prepared an interesting magazine article which will be published in the near future. It will deal with the early days of the profession and has a store of information regarding the early and crude methods of photography and production.

The meeting of the directors of The American Correspondent Film Co., Inc., was held recently in the offices at 220 West 42d street. The officials of the company are delighted with its rapid progress and its quickly earned prominence in the motion picture field.

The company of children hitherto known as the Majestic Juvenile Company, has been promoted to larger things owing to the popularity of the child films for children acted by children. They are now to appear in two reel features under the Reliance brand.

Edna Aug, known on Broadway as a shining light in comedyland is now in Universal City conferring with Al. Christie on the play in which she is to star for the Universal.

The pictures in which Anna Little will appear with the American company, will be called the "Mustang" brand. The first picture in which she will act for them, will be "The Man Afraid of His Wardrobe," which is one of the Charles Van Loan series of "Buck Parvin" stories.

The Western Vitagraph will soon be right in the heart of the Photoplay Colony, and papers have been duly signed and sealed for the lease of a tract of nine acres of land not far from the Griffith and Kalem studios at East Hollywood.

The personnel of the Selig Polyscope Company is in mourning. "Chang" is dead. "Chang" was a gigantic ourang outang, beloved by the Selig workers from Chicago to the Pacific Coast. "Chang's" last appearance on any stage was in the title role "The Ourang Outang" recently released as a Selig pictureplay.

Fred Mace has received a large number of letters urging him to take immediate action toward reorganizing the now defunct Photoplayers Club of Los Angeles and action will probably be taken in the near future to hold a meeting and arrange details. Mr. Mace was the first president of the old organization and while he was at its head it flourished.

A famous comedian, who has scored international repute on the speaking stage, is about ready to sign a contract as the star of one reel comedies to be produced by the Gaumont Company for release through the Mutual. There will be some gossip along Broadway when the name becomes public.

Tina Marshall, for several years leading woman in the support of Edwin Stevens, is now playing in that capacity in the Universal film, "The Man Inside," Broadway Universal play featuring Edwin Stevens.

Harry Rubin and Herman Steinman, formerly with the Alliance Company, are now with the forces of the American Correspondent Film Co., Inc.

"The blond beauty of the studios" was the sobriquet given Beatrice Van, recently engaged by President S. S. Hutchinson, of the American Film Company, to play the lead in the second American "Beauty" company.

The four-reel Mutual Master-Picture, "The Lure of the Mask," has proved such a distinct success on the screen that Bobbs-Merrill & Co., has published a motion picture edition of this famous story by Harold MacGrath.

Robert Fischer, the well known actor who has created a sensation the last two weeks in his role of the Belgian innkeeper in Roi Cooper Magrue's war play, "Under Fire," at the Hudson Theater, New York City, is one of the members of the all-star cast of "School Bells," the five-reel feature picture written by Charles K. Harris, which has just been completed for Perry N. Vekroff, and will be released through the World Film Corporation. Mr. Fischer plays the role of "Adolph Rapp," a German chemist.

Lester Cuneo has recovered from his shock of a week ago when his machine in which he was riding was struck by an interurban car directly in front of the home of Miss Myrtle Stedman. Miss Stedman took Mr. Cuneo in her machine to the Sisters Hospital, where he was revived and rested for two days. Mr. Cuneo has recovered completely and has returned to work.

At the Selig Edendale studios, Director Frank Beal has begun work on Roy L. McCardell's intensely dramatic story in two reels, "The Bridge of Time," with an all-star cast, which includes Harry Mestayer, Eugenie Besserer, Virginia Kirtly and Guy Oliver.

All the wiseacres have had Edna Maison leaving the Universal company, but so far neither the company nor Edna seem to know of it. As a matter of fact, when Edna has finished her acting in the "Blind Girl of Portici" with the Smalleys, she will return to features with her own company and a special director. Thus say the Panjamdrums at Universal City. Good news.

Edwin Carewe, Rolfe-Metro director, has recovered from a slight illness and is hard at work on his next feature, starring Ethel Barrymore. The feature is taken from a play as yet unnamed by George Scarborough. An unusual thing is that while the motion picture will make its appearance within a few weeks, Mr. Scarborough's play will not reach Broadway till about Christmas.

The Essanay scenario and prize beauty contest, conducted in conjunction with the Age-Herald, of Birmingham, Ala., is nearing a close. The scenario contest was won by Morgan D. Jones, of Dadeville, Ala. It is entitled "The River of Romance," and will be produced by Essanay at the Chicago studios and be released under the General Film program. The five girls who win the largest number of votes in the contest will go to Chicago to take part in the play. The one with the highest score will take the lead in the picture and the other four will be cast for minor parts.

Webster Campbell is to do his first work for the Vitagraph Company in a one reel comedy by Edwin Ray Coffin. George Stanley is directing it and is much pleased with all of the cast, considering them ideal types for the story.

Alma Hanlon, youngest daughter of George Hanlon of Hanlon Brothers, internationally famous as acrobats, pantomimists and comedians, is a present member of the Kleine forces and one who will be very much in evidence in the forthcoming Kleine comedy. "The Fixer," featuring Bickel and Watson.

H. Cooper Cliffe, who played with Sir Henry Irving for many years, will soon be seen on the screen in "An Enemy to Society," a coming Columbia-Metro feature, and also in the coming Rolfe-Metro feature, as yet unnamed, which will star Ethel Barrymore.

Ferle Heller's internationally known modiste shop in Fifth avenue was last week used for a series of unique scenes in a forthcoming Kleine-Grandin subject entitled "The Fashion Shop." All of Madame's pretty manikins and many of her most beautiful sample gowns acted as a fitting background for the work of dainty Ethel Grandin.

The popularity of the Essanay western photoplays has increased so greatly that G. M. Anderson now is putting out a series of two act dramas besides his regular releases of one act Broncho Billy Films. The first two reeler is "A Convict's Threat," and will be released September 28.

Carlotta De Felice, featured by Vitagraph for several years, whose brunette beauty formed an excellent foil for Emmy Wehlen's blonde pulchritude in "When a Woman Loves," the Rolfe-Metro feature, will be seen again on the Metro program playing opposite William Faversham in "One Million Dollars," also a Rolfe production.

Harry Crandall, Jr., crack pitcher on the Pathe baseball team, has been grabbed by the Federal League for next season.

Mrs. Martha Hamilton Young, whose maiden name is Roegnerut and who is a distinguished actress, after a stay in New York to study theatrical conditions in the United States, has just sailed on the S. S. Bergensfjord back to Christiania, to visit her mother, who is also prominent in theatrical circles in Norway. Mrs. Young has so far only occasionally devoted her talents to the motion pictures, but it is her intention to return to the United States shortly and to take up active motion picture work as has lately been done by many of the stars of the stage. Mrs. Young is a distinct blond type, peculiar to her nativity, and is a young woman of many noted athletic accomplishments, such as tennis champion, and also ski champion. She is a long distance swimmer and a skilled horsewoman, which should make her services of great value in the motion picture field.

Complete Record of Current Films

Believing the classification of film pictures by the nature of their subjects to be of greater importance to the exhibitor than classification by maker, MOTOGRAPHY has adopted this style in listing current films. Exhibitors are urged to make use of this convenient tabulation in making up their programs. Films will be listed as long in advance of their release dates as possible. Film manufacturers are requested to send us their bulletins as early as possible. Reasonable care is used, and the publishers cannot be responsible for errors.

Amos happens to remember that Hercules is a coward and on his wedding day Hercules upon entering the kitchen in search of something to eat finds Citronella apparently murdered. He carries her outside and dumps her into a packing case. Later the lover's plot is discovered and Amos flees for his life. As for Hercules he declines to wed the girl who had scared him nearly to death.

When Thieves Fall Out—(Two Reels)—Kalem—September 8.—Marin Sais and True Boardman featured. Kate the brains of the Whalen gang conceives a plot whereby a valuable exhibit can be stolen. Accompanied by Whalen, the leader of the gang, she registers at the Grand Hotel. Whalen's trunk arrives and when it is opened Benny Berg, his lieutenant, steps out. The jewelry is placed in the place he has vacated. Later Berg attacks Hilton, the house detective, and also Whalen, whom he hates and thrusts them into the strong room. A phone hidden in the wall enables Hilton to summons help. Whalen and Kate are placed under arrest and the girl furious at Berg's treachery betrays the gang.

Broncho Billy and the Lumber King—Essanay—September 10.—G. M. Anderson and Marguerite Clayton featured. A ranger happens upon a cabin and is met by a pretty girl. It is a case of love at first sight. The girl's father, leader of a band of lumber thieves, returns and is about to strike the girl when the ranger rushes up and hurls him from her. The leader of the thieves catching the ranger unawares forces him at the point of a rifle to go to the thieves' rendezvous. The chief is about to shoot the ranger when the sheriff led by the girl rush up and arrest the thieves. The ranger and the girl pledge their love.

The Little Singer—Kalem—September 10.—Featuring Alice Joyce. Papita, a little street singer, who is an orphan is taken in by Carl Heller's mother. The girl years later sings at a society concert where Mrs. Burleigh, a woman of wealth, is attracted to her voice and sends her to Europe for a musical education. Papita after years of studying returns to America and on the night of her debut at the Metropolitan Opera House Carl tries to see her but Mrs. Burleigh tells him that Papita does not care to see him. The girl scores a tremendous success but she misses Carl. On returning home she hears the sound of a violin playing her favorite air and she enters the house from where the music comes and later confronts Carl, who learns that Papita's heart is true.

Nerves of Steel—(An efisode of the "Hazards of Helen" railroad series)—Kalem—September 11.—Helen sees convicts who have escaped from the penitentiary breaking into a box car. Later the men overpower the crew of a locomotive and start the engine down the track. Helen induces the man in charge of a wrecking derrick to run his apparatus on a parallel track with a runaway engine which is swiftly approaching. Just as the engine flashes by Helen drops from the boon hook and lands on the tender of the engine. Later the outlaws perish in the quick sands along the river.

One Performance Only — (Three Reels)—Vitagraph—September 11.—A strong cast featured. Dwight Orme, a crook, secures an interview with "The Great Valdo," an actor and impersonator. He offers the actor $5,000 for "one performance." Valdo's cupidity aroused consents to aid the crook. Orme calls on a jeweler at the office, renders him unconscious with the aid of a poisoned needle and then Valdo makes up closely to resemble the jeweler. After that they secure a valuable necklace worn by the jeweler's wife. Jack Chency, a detective, locates his men, makes up as Heldmayer, the jeweler, and by the use of electrical effects, so frightens Valdo that he breaks down and confesses, implicating Orme.

The Man Who Never Was Caught—Biograph — September 13. — Featuring Joseph McDermott and Mary Malatesta. Shifty Steve is know in the underworld as "The man who never was caught." He enters a house to rob, chokes the beautiful young housekeeper into insensibility and later after throttling a policeman, who has followed him, and hurling him out of the window he escapes. A girl reporter is assigned to investigate dance halls and in a low dive she meets a girl habitue who points out Shifty Steve. Later Steve gets away in company with the reporter who tells him she will admit him into the house where she is employed. The trap is laid in the newspaper owner's home and Steve is captured, but on the way to the station he effects a daring escape.

A Mansion of Tragedy—(Three Reels)—Essanay—September 13.—Darwin Karr and Beverly Bayne featured. Through the efforts of Richard Baldwin Nell and Hester receive a large sum of money from their deceased father's invention. Prince Oswald wins Hester's love, but casts her aside when he learns she is not the heiress. Later the prince marries Nell and Baldwin marries Hester. Later Baldwin finds Hester trying to repel the prince's advances and in a struggle a revolver is accidently discharged killing the prince, thus ending the already tragic and apparently hopeless love tangle.

The Manservant—(Three Reels)—Kalem—September 13.—Featuring Jack Henderson as Sidney Rolfe, a millionaire sociologist, who secures a position as a valet to Park, a clubman who neglects his wife, Evelyn. As time passes Evelyn and Rolfe fall in live with each other. On one of his nights off the millionaire valet visits his club and there is seen by Park, who becomes suspicious. Days later Park again meets his valet at the club and attacks him. Park accompanied by Georgette, an adventuress, returns home and Park again attacks his valet. The adventuress accidentally shoots Park and later she is placed under arrest.

Advertising Did It—Lubin—September 13.—A strong cast featured. Phil Humphrey has lived his entire life in a small mining town and has fallen in love with a picture of a ladies dress model and given the town merchant $2,600 to purchase it for him. The merchant places an ad in the window for a young lady who can wear the costume, but none of the girls of the small town can fill the order. In the meantime Harriet Millet, a girl who has fallen in love with a kodak picture her father, a rancher, has taken of a young man. She has been left on the desert and stumbles into Phil's cabin. They find the original in each other of the photographs they have admired and they leave, preparing for a hasty marriage.

Man's Law — Selig — September 13. — Marion Wade is in love with Will Green, a foreman in a little fishing village. Green, however, makes love to Gertie, sister of Bill Robbins, one of the fishermen. Green and Marion are secretly married and Gertie realizing that it will be easier to die rather than face what is to come, she hurls herself from the cliffs. Bill sets out to avenge his sister's death. Green escapes in the water and Bill fires after him and the girl's betrayer goes down. A year passes and Marion has discovered happiness in the love of Joe Lane, a beach comber, and consents to be his bride. One day a stranger comes into the village and in him Marion recognizes her husband. For a moment she sees all the happiness gone from her life, but there is a revolver shot and Green falls to the ground dead. Bill has at last avenged his hister and Marion turns to Joe and goes to his arms, for nothing now stands between them and happiness.

Sonny Jim and the Amusement Co. L't'd.—Vitagraph—September 13.—Bobby Connelly featured as Sonny Jim, who is told by the Sunday school teacher that he can't go to the picnic because he brought a huge bull frog to school. He gets even by getting up the Amusement Company limited, then gets all the boys to stay away from the picnic to attend the circus to be given in his father's barn. The result is that the only ones who go to the picnic are girls, the superintendent, Gerald Montague, the "goody-goody" boy and the teacher. "Goody" snitches on the lads and all troop over to the barn, where soon all but the teacher are enjoying the little "circus" performers.

The Rehearsal — (Two Reels) — Biograph—September 14.—Featuring an all star cast. Cecil King, a young playwright, rescues an orphan, Evelyn Payne, from footpads and requests his mother and sister, who live in the country, to take her in. Cecil takes his play to a manager who says it is not rightly constructed and Mabel Grey, his fiancee, tells him she has no time for a failure. He returns home and and later a motorboat explosion sends the constable flying into a tree. Jim rescues Jane and she decides to marry him to take care of her. For a longer review see another page of this issue.

The Rajah's Sacrifice—(Two Reels)—Centaur.—Featuring Mlle. Ottawa with an all star cast. Helen Roberts, the daughter of Captain Roberts, is carried far away into a Hindoo City and presented to the Rajah who falls in love with her. The Rajah has Helen go through a formality of marriage and when the girl consents Captain Roberts is notified to come forward. The Rajah is later killed by lions and the high priest makes Helen prisoner to be burned alive with the body of her husband. Helen is tied to a stake and the funeral pyre is fired, but while the fire burns she is lowered to a sacred chamber and is placed in charge of Jumbo, keeper of sacred animals, who is in love with the high priest. Jumbo endeavors to free Helen and passes her through the den of sacred animals and the secret chambers. Helen rises from the altar and the natives thinking her a ghost flee in terror. Later Jumbo kills the high priest and then flees from the temple.

The Great Question—(Three Reels)—Clipper.—Featuring Harold Lockwood and May Allison. The picture shows the life of a young club man, Morton Bagley, Jr., from the time he meets an adventuress and forms an attachment to her, until his marriage to a sweet and simple girl in the West. After his meeting with the adventuress his father pays her the sum of $20,000 to relinquish all claims on his son. The young man goes West and here meets Flora Donner, whom he later marries and takes back to New York with him. However, the duplicity and artificiality of both men and women of New York's high society and the fact that his wife through an innocent indiscretion is estranged from her husband, persuades him to return West. For a longer review see another page of this issue. J. C. G.

Pansy's Prison Pies—Falstaff—September 6.—Pansy runs a restaurant, and her cooking is famous throughout the neighboring country. She is much sought after, but repulses the local swains with scorn, saying that she will only marry a man who knows the world. A drummer hits town, and being in financial straights, it is lucky for him that he finds in Pansy an ardent admirer. She showers pies and doughnuts upon him freely. As he is a dispenser of musical instruments (when he can find a customer) he is locked up by the local police force of one, for being a band without a license. He is fed so well by Pansy during his visit at the jail, that when he tries to effect his escape, he has become so adipose that his body sticks in the window, thus keeping himself and the other prisoners from getting out. The sheriff arrives on the scene and exerts his authority. The police chief is deposed for his negligence, and the drummer receives his helmet and title of office as a reward for so ably barring the escape of the prisoners.

The Bowl Bearer — (Two Reels) — Thanhouser — September 7. — A young American, while traveling through Mexico, loses his way, but finally comes upon a house and asks shelter for the night. He indulges in a flirtation with a dainty Spanish girl over a bowl of Mexican Torta. At dinner he finds out that Delicia is a poor relation of the family and is treated as a drudge. She is cruelly treated by one of her cousins during the course of the meal. The young American is indignant and soundly thrashes the bully. The next day the bully and his allies waylay the Americano and leave him in the road for dead. Delicia, however, finds her benefactor and tenderly nurses him back to life. Strong love springs up between the two. Delicia's lover finally leaves for Pasadena, his home, saying that he will soon be back. Days lengthen into weeks and Delicia hears nothing from her lover, but she is still confident of his loyalty. She goes to Pasadena, and by chance, gets an engagement in the house of the American's mother. She learns that at a banquet, the young man's engagement is to be announced, is broken-hearted, and is tempted to kill him, but when the affair comes off, he discovers the girl, and taking her in his arms, introduces her as his future bride.

Jerry and the Gunman—Cub—September 9.—The Goodriches and their pretty daughter make the acquaintance of Dead Shot Dick while in the West. On returning home, they invite the latter for a visit. He comes, followed by Jerry, his rival in love, and both pay marked attentions to Jessie. In a tilt that takes place between the rivals, the lordly outlaw is worsted, but on recovering, lays hands on a brace of six shooters, and Jerry comes in for an extraordinary share of attention in commemoration of past performances. Dick compels Jerry to swap clothes, and continues on his rampage. At an opportune moment, however, Jerry applies a shillalah to Dick's head. In his dival's pocket Jerry finds a copy of the notice offering the thousand for the outlaw's capture, and he ties a rope a round the ankles of his unconscious victim, and drags him feet first to the authorities.

Weary Walker's Woes — Falstaff — September 10.—In which a tramp finds a letter which reads: "Dear Sir: Call at our office and receive $10,000 left by your late uncle. The single stipulation is that you are prosperous. This letter is the only identification required." Of course this wakes the "Weary Willie" out of his lethargy and it is not long before he has accumulated a goodly collection of other people's clothes, and made himself look prosperous. But the fellow's success is short-lived, and his downfall is rapid. The aforementioned "other people" claim their clothes one by one and the tramp is left in the cooler in a pitiable state of dishabille. The lieutenant says that his only inheritance will be either three or six months, depending on how much the judge enjoyes his breakfast.

When the Call Came—(TWO REELS)—GAUMONT—SEPTEMBER 10.—Jim Gleason is a man of evil reputation. One night he breaks into the home of the Widow Hunter, and overhears Will, her son and sole support, resolving to enter a life of crime to save his mother from starvation. Gleason follows Will to the house of Harvey Elliott and hides to watch the boy commit his first crime. Will steals a diamond brooch before Gleason can prevent him, and escapes. Gleason runs into Mr. Elliott and, being accused of the theft, is locked up. Will has a fit of remorse, and starts back with the jewel. He is waylaid, however, by two men and knocked senseless. When the boy reads of Gleason's arrest, he goes to the station and gives himself up. Gleason, meanwhile, is released, and devotes his time to tracing down the thieves. He also cares for Will's mother. At last the fugitives are caught. Will is freed, and on returning home, finds his mother well and happy, instead of dead, as he had surmised. Gleason leaves the boy and his mother, a reformed man.

The Mother of her Dreams—THANHOUSER—SEPTEMBER 10.—The little girl has been an orphan as long as she can remember. The happiest hours of her life are those when she lies asleep, and "the mother of her dreams" visits her. She is adopted by a woman who is seeking a drudge. The poor girl is treated cruelly and is in a most wretched state. One night the "Mother of her dreams" appears and beckons her to follow. The child dresses and wanders out into the night. She comes across a little boy who has lost his way in the woods, and comforts him. Some hours later, a searching party arrive, headed by the wild-eyed mother of the boy. The little girl looks at her with awe, and says, "Why, you are the mother of my dreams." The wealthy woman hears the child's pitiful tale, after which she takes the child back to her home, and the boy's wish, that she be his sister, is fulfilled.

The Stronger Man—(TWO REELS)—RELIANCE—SEPTEMBER 11.—Cecil Graham learns that her husband is faithless. They agree to be divorced. At a house-party Cecil meets James Long, with whom she flirts to divert her mind from her troubles. A love affair develops between them, but they soon tire of one another and drift apart. Cecil then goes West. On the train she meets Stanley Hargrave, whom she later marries. Long's enthusiasm for her revives and he follows her across the continent. Finding her married to Hargrave, he tries to persuade her to leave her husband, pleading that their love comes first. Cecil at last is won over. On the point of going away with Long, however, she is discovered by Hargrave, who orders her from the house. She pleads with him. The story of her unhappy life affects Hargrave profoundly. Cecil is now sure that she loves only Hargrave. At last he sees everything through his wife's eyes and gladly forgives her.

The Jinx on Jenks — KOMIC — SEPTEMBER 12.—Max and his friends are out celebrating. After they separate, Jenks breaks a window and is followed to his office by a detective. He gives the sleuth the slip by locking himself in his private sanctuary, where he spends the night. In the morning he is a trifle nonplussed to find the detective waiting in the hall to make the arrest. Jenks phones Max for help, and the latter manages to slip a woman's costume and false hair into the office. Jenks escapes and meets his friend in the street. They repair to Max's hotel. The latter's wife returns, and over the transom, she gets a bird's eye view of her husband smoking and drinking with a being in petticoats. She bursts into the room, and before Max can collect his wits to explain, he is caught up in a hurricane of vindicative martial violence.

His Guiding Angel—(TWO REELS)—SEPTEMBER 12.—Alaric Neal, notorious "bad man" of the West, idealizes the beautiful actress, Vivian Gray, and she becomes his guiding angel. Chance brings to Neal's door Jack Gray, Vivian's reckless brother. Neal saves the boy and goes with him to New York. Vivian, a heartless woman of the world, meets the reformed outlaw, and his feeling for her awakens a kindred emotion in herself. For the first time, both are in love. A former paramour of the actress's, Fred Ainsworth, threatens to give away her past unless she borrows money for him from Neal, and she fearfully agrees. Neal discovers the ruse in time, and Ainsworth, foiled in his attempt to get the money, turns informant. His stories are confirmed by Vivian's confession. Neal remembers his own wild career, however, and asks her to forgive him even as he forgives her. They both begin life over again.

Out of the Sea—THANHOUSER—SEPTEMBER 12.—The fisherman's daughter saves a man whom she sees struggling in the surf, and the girl and her father tenderly care for him. However, when they discover in his possession a police officer's shield and a newspaper article which identifies him as a detective who is searching for a bank embezzler, their solicitude changes to terror, as the detective is searching for the old fisherman. The detective recovers, and the conflict between duty on one side, and love for the girl on the other ensues. However, just as he is about to decide in favor of his benefactors, he is spared the decision. A telegram arrives and informs him that the real culprit has made a death bed confession, and that the fisherman is innocent. The happy girl bids her lover farewell, knowing in her heart the question he will ask her when he returns.

The Senor's Silver Buckle — (TWO REELS)—AMERICAN—SEPTEMBER 13.—Featuring Winnifred Greenwood and Edward Coxen. Felipe, the son of Miguel, is given a silver buckle on the back of which are directions for the finding of an old chest hidden by Miguel's master years before. On this spot is now living John Monroe, a pioneer, with his daughter Alice. There is a young surveyor working in the vicinity, George Davis, and he and Alice are very good friends. Felipe arrives on the spot where the treasure is hidden and after some difficulty he is on the verge of digging up the treasure when he is discovered by Davis. The Spaniard stabs the young surveyor and in his escape loses the silver buckle which helps Alice and Davis to find the buried treasure. For a longer review see another page of this issue.

young groom sees a a handbill announcing $1,000 in prizes for trotting races at the county fair. He takes a chance on winning enough money to send his sick mother to the country, and enters the race with "Old Ironsides," Haverley's favorite horse. The horse wins, but Haverley is furious because his stable boy has taken his horse without permission, and threatens to discharge Bob. However, he goes with Bob to see his mother. Touched, yet wishing to teach Bob a lesson, Haverley takes from him all his winnings and sends him back to the stable with the trainer. He then gives the money to the sick woman, and the following day she is sent to the country.

Incognito — BEAUTY — SEPTEMBER 14. — Featuring Webster Campbell and Neva Gerber. John Cross, a millionaire, and his daughter, Patty, visit Oak Forrest Inn, traveling incognito to avoid fartune seekers. Dick Ellis arrives at the same hotel and becomes a great friend of Patty and her father. There is staying at the hotel an impostor posing as a count, who finds a note dropped by John Cross and which reveals his identity and he immediately lays seige to Patty's fortune through feigned love. Through mistake Dick gets into a room occupied by a woman of wealth and is seen emerging. He leaves the hotel and starts for home at the same time John Cross and his daughter Patty leave. By this time the woman into whose room Dick accidentally stepped, misses some jewels, and the count has also found it necessary to leave the hotel. The three different parties are arrested, the count is detained and Dick coolly walks off with Patty.

The Little Life Guard—Majestic—September 14.—Dan, the boaster, wins Anita away from Adrian, her devoted sweetheart. Adrian overhears the beach life guard telling an admiring bevy of bathing girls stories of his bravery in winning many medals. Adrian consults the guard and how to be a hero. Larry gives the youngster lessons on how to deport himself to make the biggest hit with the little girls, covers his diminutive bathing suit with medals and sends him back to recover his lost love. Dan and Adrian come to blows over their respective claims to bravery, and Anita, to test the mettle of the rivals, pretends to be drowning. She ventures out too far and is sinking in earnest, when Adrian dares all to save Anita. The two children are swept far out by the undertow and are barely saved by Larry, the life guard.

Shorty's Ranch — (Three Reels) — Broncho—September 15.—Sir Cecil Pallymore, an Englishman, owner of a cattle ranch in Arizona, arrives in Tucson on the way to inspect his property. Suffering from a bad attack of the gout, and ordered by the doctor to keep perfectly quiet, he is stranded. He advertises for a man to inspect the ranch. Shorty applies and gets the commission. Sir Cecil gives the cowboy a roll of bills for expenses, and Shorty resolves to rig up and impersonate the Englishman. At the ranch, Jackson, the superintendent, falls for the hoax. Shorty cuts quite a figure, and prepares to give a large party to all hands. But before he can go much further with his lans, Sir Cecil (the gout notwithstanding), and his valet arrives on the scene. After much trouble in proving their identity, Shorty, the imposter, is locked up in a shanty. The cowboy succeeds in getting into his familiar togs that night and making his getaway.

The child falls ill and the father hastens to his neighbor for assistance and he arrives just in time to witness an affectiontae meeting between her and a handsome stranger. The village doctor cannot bring relief to the child and says that she must have the care of a specialist. The father finds that he cannot wire for one as the wires are down and he is shut off from the outside world. He returns home and finds "the little lady" and the handsome stranger in the house. He is introduced to the stranger as Dr. Sterling, the lady's brother—a noted specialist. The child's life is saved and the father overcomes his hesitancy and gains a loving wife.

The Knock-out—Cub—September 17.—Featuring George Ovey. Jerry, after flirting with the pretty Miss Smith, is escorting her home when they meet Duke Earlton, the girl's fiance, for whose company the girl dismisses Jerry. Jerry is later run over by an automobile. The occupant, Count O'Zowie, gives Jerry a card with an invitation to call. The card gives Jerry a happy idea. He calls at the home of Dr. Gray, Miss Smith's uncle, whom she is visiting, and when he is ushered into the reception room he is dumbfounded at the sight before him. As he had sent his card in for the doctor's daughter, he is confronted by a girl weighing only about two hundred pounds. Later Jerry gets the duke, who comes in with Miss Smith, to put on the gloves with the athletic girl, after putting horseshoes in the girl's gloves. One blow and the duke is in dreamland. He then chloroforms Miss Gray and puts her next to the duke with her arms around his shoulders. He calls Miss Smith and at Jerry's insistent urging she consents to elope. They start for the minister's on horseback and as they cross a shallow stream Jerry falls from the horse and the police, who are giving chase, have no trouble in picking him up Jerry's well laid matrimonial plans are for naught.

A Friend in Need—Beauty—September 18.—Featuring Beatrice Van, John Sheehan and Frank Borzage. Frank and Johnny, two soda fountain clerks, have but one suit between them. Both are in love with the same girl. John proposes to the girl and is to meet her at the church and rushes back and tells Frank to stay on the job until he gets married. Frank agrees, not knowing who the girl is, and when he sees her he drops a glass of soda and is discharged, losing out on the girl, job and the clothes.

The Doll House Mystery — (Two Reels)—September 19.—John Grant, a broker, places some very valuable bonds in his library desk. Carmen, Grant's little daughter, discovers the bonds and, thinking them very pretty, takes them out to her doll house to play with. Little Georgie Morley, a poor boy, comes to play, and the two children proceed to paper the walls of the doll house with the bonds. Georgie's father is an ex-convict, trying to live honestly; therefore, when the little boy brings some of the bonds home, and the police get on the track, it fares hard with Mr. Morley. The man and his son get away with all speed, but the detectives' posse finally corners them in a cabin. Meanwhile Carmen has told her father about playing with the bonds. Mr. Grant realizes that an innocent man's life is in jeopardy. He leaves with the police in their high powered car, and they arrive just in time to restrain the posse from slaying the ex-convict. Morley is exonerated and the two playmates, Georgie and Carmen, fly to each other's arms.

Universal Program

The Elephant Circus—(Split Reel)—August 12.—A vaudeville act exploiting the deeds of two huge elephants, which are jugglers, trick performers and musical entertainers all rolled into one.

A Game of Love—L-Ko—September 1. Fat tries to get a lady to faint in Reggie's arms to make Peggy jealous. The lady faints all right, but not in the way Fat had anticipated. Father's dislike for Fat is not overcome when Fat gets him in trouble with a statue man, and gives Peggy and Reggie an opportunity to get to a quiet spot for a talk. Father and Fat have a fight, and Peggy and Reggy have a flight in an automobile. It is rumored that they went to the minister's.

When Hiram Went to the City—JOKER—SEPTEMBER 4.—Hiram leaves his girl and Squash Center for the call of the bright lights. In the city he makes a hit with Dora, the belle of the Palace hotel dining room, because of his physical prowess and chivalry. He is also taken under the wing of a prize-fight promoter, but on the night of the scrap he distinguishes himself by being knocked out in the first round. His sweetheart, Lizzie, has followed him to the city, but her campaign of vindication goes awry. Both are shot out of the hotel. They forget past differences and happily return together.

Universal Animated Weekly No. 183—UNIVERSAL—SEPTEMBER 8.—Loading 100 foot boat for use on rivers in gold district of Alaska aboard big liners at Seattle, Washington; monument dealers visit U. S. quarries in Colorado; battleships mark course as fast motorboats in west fight for speed crown; shaft of war veterans with base made of metal from the Maine dedicated at Monongahela, Pa.; giant tractors plow ten furrows at once, then reap and bind wheat at record speed, Los Angeles, Calif.; Veteran troops from Western battle line transferred to Eastern frontier to reinforce armies advancing upon Czar's forts; launching of torpedo boat Porter at Philadelphia, Pa.; prisoners of Sing Sing welcoming Warden Osborne on his return from vacation; cartoons by Hy. Mayer; fire chiefs hold convention at Cincinnati, Ohio.

Little People in Fur—(SPLIT REEL)—POWERS—SEPTEMBER 12.—In this film all sorts of four-legged animals, some of whose skins are in high demand for ornamentation, are shown in the characteristic way in which Mr. Ditmar, Curator of the New York Zoological Park, has filmed them. Among the exhibits are the opossum, armadillo, porcupine and ocelot.

Too Many Smiths—NESTOR—SEPTEMBER 13.—Eddie Smith and Dolly elope and take a trip to Coronado Beach for the honeymoon. Father sends a detective after them, but the sleuth gets the wrong pair of Smiths, who are two society crooks. The detective that is shadowing the latter, has the misfortune to round up the other pair of Smiths, whose actions excite his suspicion. After the desperate chase for freedom, Eddie and Dolly manage to make good their escape, in the confusion of getting straightened out. Father's detective thinks he has the right parties, but on discovering the jewelry hidden on them, he realized his mistake. The sharp eyes of the other sleuth are quick to notice the glitter of the gems, and he strides up and marches off triumphantly with the culprits.

The Queen of Hearts—(THREE REELS)—GOLD SEAL—SEPTEMBER 14.—Col. Phillipot, an expert in the government ordnance department, has in his possession plans and prints of the latest inventions. He owes the enormous sum of $50,000 in gambling debts. Bruce Henderson, the owner of the gambling house, loves Berenice, the Colonel's daughter, and when Phillipot finally puts his home in the balance against the I. O. U's. Henderson fills out the blank name space of the deed in Berenice's favor. The Colonel's son is indignant when he sees the deed, and leaves for good. The Colonel then has a quarrel with Henderson over his interference with the family's affairs. In the duel which follows, Henderson sacrifices himself for Berenice's sake and shoots into the air. Henderson is wounded. Berenice's brother, Jim, aids an international spy in getting the government plans. Henderson sacrifices himself in Jim's favor, knowing it would not do to have Berenice learn of her brother's theft. But the papers are finally recovered, confessions are made all around, and Berenice gratefully returns to the man who has proved himself so worthy of her affection.

The Man in the Chair—(THREE REELS)—GOLD SEAL—SEPTEMBR 14.—In her early childhood Mina Taylor, on the decease of her father, had gone to live with her father's friend, John Bryon, on Long Island. In the beginning of the picture, Vincent Bryon, son of John Bryon, is on trial for murder. On the stand, he vindicates himself by relating the events which led up to the murder. On Mina's arrival from the West, he had taken an interest in her and gradually taught her to be a refined and useful woman. Geoffrey Storm, who had snubbed her at first, began to covet her as she grew more beautiful. Vincent was a victim of nervous trouble, and unable to stand on his feet. Storm's attentions to the girl had become intolerable, but Vincent was forced to look on helplessly, while Storm sneered and goaded him. One day, after Storm had grossly insulted Mina, Vincent had sprung up with super-human effort and killed the man. Vincent Bryon is acquitted, and being cured by a nerve specialist, marries the girl of his dreams.

Bashful Glen—IMP—SEPTEMBER 14.—Glen Martin is very much sought after by members of the opposite sex, but these attentions annoy him intensely. At a summer hotel, he determines to check the flow of curiosity, and puts up the picture of another man's wife and children in his room. A famous acress and her husband come to the hotel. Unfortunately, Glen's photograph is of this actress. The latter's husband mistakes Glen's door for his own, and thereby finds the photo of his wife on the dresser. Thinking she has given it to Glen, he rushes to his own room and accuses her. She pleads "not guilty." They find Glen in the hotel office, and after explanations, both men give the summer girls the laugh. Glen is finally accepted by the chambermaid, whom he has managed to woo during the intervals of her occupation.

No Flirting Allowed—L-KO—SEPTEMBER 15.—Hank's boss flirts with his wife. Because there is no flirting allowed in the park, the two are arrested. The boss sends for Hank to come and bail them out. Hank bails his wife out, but not so his boss. The boss' wife meets Hank in the park and forces her affections on him. They land in a cell next to Hank's. The partitions are broken and the wargod hovers near. The jail is considerably mussed up, officers are injured, and the judge is grossly insulted.

Joe Martin Turns Them Loose—(TWO REELS)—VICTOR—SEPTEMBER 15.—An old maid receives an inheritance from a distant uncle. The inheritance arrives in a box, and proves to be no less than a full-sized ourangoutang. After somewhat damaging the premises, the animal escapes, makes his way to a circus tent, and proceeds to release all the animals of the menagerie. After a reign of terror in the neighborhood, the roaming beasts are captured. A long drawn out romance between the old maid and a so called musician culminates in marriage, after the excitement has abated.

A Shriek in the Night—(TWO REELS)—VICTOR—SEPTEMBER 15.—With Warren Kerrigan. The story deals with a "bull movement" engineered by C. P. Allison, a prominent New York operator, whose daughter, May, is visiting at a mountain resort, where the Lathrop family are staying for the summer. In order to save his father from ruin, Billy Lathrop reluctantly consents to propose to May. Jim Kirkley, a young man-about-town, contrives to make the acquaintance of Patsy, Billy's sweetheart. Patsy is piqued at Billy's unaccountably strange behavior and accepts the attentions of Jim. Jim decoys the girl to a lonely cabin in the mountains. Billy has become suspicious, and sets out on a search for the couple. Patsy's screams bring him to the cabin, and the two men have a desperate struggle. Billy is wounded, and Jim escapes. The two lovers are rescued and they make at once for the minister's. Consternation reigns when the Lathrops learn of the marriage, but a telegram arrives and advices Lathrop that Allison is only a figurehead in the railroad deal and that Patsy's father is really the power behind it. When the unique situation dawns upon Lathrop, he joins his wife in congratulating the happy couple.

In the Heart of the Hills—Big U—September 16.—Jim Bailey loves Laura Hicks. So does the sheriff, but the former is the fortunate man. Jim is caught trying to overpower Dolly Brady, daughter of a mountaineer, but escapes his captors. As her father has been shot in the fight, Laura takes a gun from the wall and starts off to hunt Jim down. On finding Jim, however, her love gets the best of her, and she cannot shoot. As Jim picks up the weapon, it accidently discharges, and he is killed.

The Suburban—(Four Reels)—Imp—September 17.—Robert Gordon is a wealthy stock owner. His son, Donald, loves Alice, the lodge-keeper's daughter, Sir Ralph Gordon, Scotch heir, and his sister arrive on the scene for a visit. Gordon wishes Donald to marry Helen, but the latter is not interested and marries Alice in secret. Donald is disinherited and leaves home with the stocks and bonds willed to him by his mother. In his hurry Donald leaves the safe door open, and Ralph steals a large amount of money to pay a gambling debt. Hyde, the butler, catches him and extracts a written confession from him at the point of a revolver. He pockets some hush money from Ralph at the same time. Donald has left Alice in the care of Joe, the stable boy, while he looks up work. The time of the Suburban arrives, and Gordon stakes his fortune on the race. Donald finds that the jockey has been bribed to throw the race in favor of another. He substitutes Joe to ride his horse, and the race is won. Fearing his exposure, Ralph kills Hyde. At the end of the story he escapes his captors and commits suicide.

Molly's Malady — Nestor — September 17.—Molly cuts out her old sweetheart in favor of Jack, a young doctor who has just moved to the country town to take up his practice. Father orders the young doctor out of the house; but the young people arrange to so closely counterfeit an accident to Molly that they are not discovered, and Jack, being the only doctor within five miles, is called in to attend the case. Jack, by a clever ruse, convinces Molly's father that she will never be able to walk again. Then he pretends to discover a remedy and then quickly cures her. Of course, the father has already promised marriage as a reward if the cure is effected. A confession of the deception follows and dad's forgiveness is at last obtained.

The Surrender—(Three Reels)—Bison—September 18.—Anita Muldoon's father has, through old-fashioned methods, lost his former good position, and now barely earns enough to live. Anita's tastes run high and she regards her lover with apathy. Jimmy is rough and uncouth, and Anita is resolved to marry a gentleman. Jimmy saves her from a white-slaver's trap, and they are shortly married. After marriage, Anita is not happy. Ian Paulson pays attention to her, and to the surprise of all, Jimmy withdraws in his favor, saying that he is a gentleman and can make her happy. Muldoon steals money at the mill, in order to satisfy his longing to better provide for his daughter. When Jimmy tries to take the blame for this theft, Anita realizes how much she has misjudged him. Muldoon makes restitution, and true love springs up in Anita's heart for her husband.

He Couldn't Fool His Mother-in-Law—Joker—September 18.—Wifey's mother has long been suspicious of Shultz, and when she comes on a visit, is skeptical of his frequent delays "on account of business," and decides to investigate. In disguise, she discovers Shultz and his pal at a cafe with a couple of chickens. Shultz leaves the cafe, but wherever he is wont to go, the Nemesis is sure to pop up. On arriving home, he nearly has heart failure, when he views her as his cook. After the cook has her hand full of hush money, she pulls of the disguise, and has no trouble in extracting an oath that he will never more flirt along the "Great White Way."

Beach Birds—L-Ko—September 19.—Papa, mama, and their darling daughter go for a swim. The latter is accompanied by a gink called Hank. Hank's wife doesn't get lonesome, however, as she finds daughter's father under an umbrella. Now, daughter has a sweetheart, and mama has leisure, so they become acquainted. As hiding places on beaches are few and far between, the several personages mentioned above are not long in getting wise to each other. Everyone loses out except the bath-house man, who collects in full for his bathing suits and umbrellas.

The House with the Drawn Shades—(Two Reels)—Rex—September 19.—Judge Grant is so absorbed in his profession, that he painfully neglects his wife. The latter, hungering for attention and affection, is prevailed upon by a musician friend to elope with him. Years later, a pale and bedraggled creature is brought up before the Judge charged with being a habitual drug user. The woman is none other than the judge's wife, and after an effort in recovering her, she is nursed back to health under the tender ministrations of her big-hearted husband. Now the Judge and his repentant wife are the picture of happiness.

The Pine's Revenge—(Two Reels)—Rex—September 19.—Dick Rance, a forest ranger, rescues a girl from an overturned canoe. To his surprise, he discovers that the girl is Grace Milton, whom he was to have married, but whom he left on finding her in the arms of John Harding. Rance is cold and unforgiving, and Grace is heart-broken. Harding finds her at the foot of a huge pine-tree called "The King," and presses his suit. Grace denounces him and runs away. Harding now joins forces with Black Scotty, an enemy of Rance's. Harding decoys Rance to a remote spot in the forest, and while he is holding Rance up, Scotty lays the death trap and sets fire to the pine. Rance sees the flames consuming his beloved tree, and, after a terrific struggle, he escapes from Harding. The fire is fought and conquered. The huge tree falls upon its murderer. Harding confesses, and the lovers are re-united by the grave of the King Pine.

Paramount

The Incorrigible Dukane — (FIVE REELS)—PARAMOUNT—SEPTEMBER 2.—The Incorrigible Dukane, familiarly known as Jimmie, is the son of a wealthy owner of a concrete construction company, but his father makes him go west to work. En route Jimmie's clothes are stolen by a tramp who leaves his own, and clothed in this uniform Dukane arrives at the scene of the dam which he thought he came to manage and starts to work with a pick and a shovel at $2.00 a day. The surprises and adventures that ensue from this point and the development of the romance between himself and the daughter of a ranch owner make a lively and enjoyable photoplay.

Pathe

The Fallen Standard—(TWO REELS)—PATHE-BALBOA.—Richard Brent, who takes great pride in his illustrious name, asks Rose Grey to marry him. The girl promises to marry him at the end of the year, as she wishes first to try her literary "wings." In the city she finds a waif which she adopts. At the end of the year she returns, with the baby, to her home. Brent, believing the baby to be her own, breaks the engagement. Fifteen years later, the waif, a wayward youth, is shot while committing a robbery. He falls, exhausted, in front of Brent's house. He is taken into the house. Rose learns that he is there. The boy dies before she can reach the house. She then explains how she found the boy—abandoned in a park in the city. Brent's wife swoons. On recovering she confesses that the boy is her son.

Neal of the Navy—CHAPTER THREE, ENTITLED "THE FAILURE"—(TWO REELS)—PATHE.—Neal and his foster-brother, Joe, take the entrance examinations for Annapolis. It is discovered that a paper containing answers to the questions has been lost. It is announced that the candidates will be searched. Joe has found the paper and he places it in Neal's pocket. There it is found and Neal is disqualified. He determines to enter the Navy and win a commission by conscientious work. The South Americans have Joe in their power and demand him to steal the packet. He is about to do so when the house catches fire. Annette secures the packet and is carried from the burning house by the brute-man. This act on the part of their ape-like associate puzzles Ponto and Hernandez. For a longer review see another page this issue.

Maid of the Wild—(THREE REELS)—PATHE-BALBOA.—Written and produced by Sherwood McDonald. Lucy Bingham, an orphan girl, lives with her little brother and sister in the mountains. David Graham is in love with her but her feeling for him is only friendship. Sterling, a wealthy city chap, spends his vacation in the mountains. Lucy falls in love with him and consents to become his wife. In the city Sterling's friends patronize the little "wild girl." At a dance they induce her to drink too much punch. Sterling upbraids her. The next morning she returns to her hut in the wilderness. Sometime later her husband follows her. He pleads for her forgiveness and they are reunited.

Matrimonial Bliss—PATHE.—A strenuous Heinie and Louie comedy, in which Louie wins the girl they both wish to marry. Heinie disguises himself and acts as waiter at the wedding feast. From the floor above he pours water on the entire bridal party. They come to the table dressed in sheets. He continues to make things exciting and is finally discovered to be the rejected suitor. The guests threaten to punish him severely. To avoid this he asserts that Louie put him up to it. Both make speedy exits from the house.

Intimate Study of Birds—(SPLIT REEL)—PATHE—PART SEVEN.—This is one of the most interesting pictures in the series. The carrier pigeon is the subject. The French pigeon fanciers hold a race in which six thousand birds participate. The birds are all numbered, and when they reach their various homes the time is automatically recorded. The winner flew a long distance at an average speed

Universal Special

The Broken Coin—(Thirteenth Episode)—September 13.—In the twelfth episode, the chief of the Apaches had shot at Roleaux. Blanc is horrified to find that he has shot one of his own men, and that Roleaux is nowhere to be seen. The gendarmes enter, and after a free for all fight Blanc and some of his men are taken to the station-house. In a third degree examination, Blanc breaks down and tells who committed the murder in Kitty's room, thus exonerating Roleaux. Sachio arrives in Grahoffen, gives the fake coin to his king, and marches at the head of his army toward Gretzhoffen. Intoxicated with his success, he gives his men orders to charge the bushes ahead and capture the palace and its unsuspecting inmates. As they charge, hundreds of Gretzhoffen soldiers dash toward them from the bushes and open fire.

World

The Ivory Snuff Box—(Five Reels)—Brady—September 13.—Holbrook Blinn featured as Richard Duvall, a young American detective, in the employ of the French Secret Police. He marries Grace Ellicot, an American, and they are about to start on their honeymoon when he is called upon to find an ivory snuff box which was owned by the French Ambassador to England. Arrived at the embassy in London the ambassador tells them the snuff box had been stolen while he had been dressing and suspecting his valet, Noel, had locked him into the room. They find the valet murdered. Meanwhile Duvall's wife, wishing to follow him, is told to go to Brussels, place herself in a sanitarium run by Dr. Hartman, who it is believed is instrumental in the theft of the snuff box. Later Duvall is taken prisoner by two of Dr. Hartman's attendants and given until the next evening to confess the whereabouts of the box. Finally Richard discovers that a top hat of Hartman's has a double top and later his wife gets the box and delivers it to Hartman. They are then released and proceed to Paris and start out on their delayed honeymoon.

Associated Service

Released during the week of September 13.

Her Atonement—(Four Reels)—Associated—September 20.—John DeForest, owner of a fashionable gambling den, through the aid of Lil, a beautiful blond, lures Jack Bryce, a young millionaire, to his den. After losing his fortune Bryce leaves for the West and here becomes a friend of the minister. DeForest meanwhile married Bryce's sweetheart and after giving Lil some money tells her to go away. She strikes the same town as Bryce is in and tells him of DeForest's schemes. Phyllis arrives in the same town and after being told that DeForest is dead she marries Jack. A year later DeForest wanders into the same town and meets Lil, now a charity worker. In a quarrel which follows DeForest accidentally kills himself.

Fast and Furious—(Two Reels)—Romona.—A boxing exhibition at Boneville brings a champion to town who is lionized by Rube's girl. Rube starts to deface the champion the first time they meet. A western fight fan decides to match the pair and the fun begins. Rube is put in training and he performs some marvelous deeds. The fight which follows is one rip roaring scream in which Rube kicks the champion for a goal and thereby wins his girl back again.

Curing Bill—Banner.—Bill, a favorite of sleep and eats but a hater of work, is married to an unreasonable wife who would not let him either sleep or eat and is always demanding of him to do some work. In order to escape her ire Bill pretends to be sick, but he cannot fool his wife. She gets the doctor for him who pretends the necessity of an operation thereby frightening Bill out of his sickness and making him do some real work.

His Masterpiece—(Two Reels)—Liberty.—Marvin, a writer, has finished his masterpiece which will enable him to marry Estelle, the girl he loves. Mary, the daughter of his landlady, loves Marvin in silence, but he pays no attention to her. Higgins, a supposed friend of Marvin's, reads the play without Marvin's knowledge, then has Marvin shanghaied and he himself poses as the author of the play and also wins the love of Estelle. Marvin manages to break away from the ship and returns home. He faces Higgins with his dastardly acts. He realizes Estelle's shallow love and recognizing the sincerity and depths of Mary's he proposes and is accepted. By chance Higgins is shanghaied by the same bunch he had paid to shanghai Marvin.

The Price She Paid—(Two Reels)—Santa Barbara.—A husband who forged his employer's name tries to take the latter's life when he tempts his wife but he is overpowered and the gun taken from him. The man leaves taking the revolver and telling the wife he will give her until midnight to pay the price. The woman loving her husband and desiring to save him from the penitentiary administers a sleeping potion to him and arrives at the man's house, where she finds him dead and her husband's gun at his side. She is about to leave when she is apprehended and subsequently judged guilty of murder and sentenced to life. The husband awakens from his stupor, realizes that his wife has yielded to the man and leaves for the West. Ten years later the woman is pardoned and in a distant state is seeking employment. She becomes a nurse and her first patient is the man who had killed her husband's employer and he tells the woman that he is guilty. In an adjoining room her husband suffering from burns is recognized by his wife and finally makes his peace with her.

First Triangle Model Theatre

THE Knickerbocker Theatre in New York will open Thursday Evening, September 23rd. The opening has been moved forward from September 20th, the date mentioned last week, not because it would be impossible to give the first presentation of the Griffith-Ince-Sennett plays then, but because the Triangle Plan requires that every detail shall be plus-perfect.

These details have been most carefully worked out, not only because the Triangle offerings deserve the best, but for the purpose of setting a standard that shall bring out the highest qualities of this newest dramatic art.

Effects wholly new to the art have been devised to set forth the supreme qualities of these coming Triangle Plays.

The special music for each picture, written by William Furst, will be interpreted by an orchestra of 30 musicians under the personal leadership of the composer.

The initial three part bill made up of a splendid five reel Griffith-supervised Mexican drama, "The Lamb," with Douglas Fairbanks in the title role, supported by Seena Owen; a stirring five reel Ince-supervised Alaskan love play, with Dustin Farnum in the leading part and Enid Markey as his chief support; and then the Sennett-Keystone three reel farce, "My Valet," with Raymond Hitchcock as the star, supported by Mabel Normand.

At a date later to be announced, the Model Theatres in Philadelphia, Boston and Chicago will open with first offerings to be presented with the same care and artistry.

You will find much of value and interest in the new methods of presentation which have been devised.

Famous Players' New York Studio Burns

DESPITE TREMENDOUS LOSS, FILM PRODUCTION HAS ALREADY BEEN RESUMED

FLAMES leaped 200 feet into the air and were visible for miles around New York City on Saturday evening, September 11, when films stored in the studio and offices of the Famous Players Film Company, in the old Ninth Regiment Armory building, 213-227 West Twenty-sixth street, between Seventh and Eighth avenues, burned in the midst of a fire which destroyed the building, caused a loss estimated anywhere between $300,000 and $1,500,000, and sent firemen and spectators to the corps of doctors from several hospitals, overcome by smoke or bruised by heavy streams of water from bursting hose.

It was on the second floor that the fire is supposed to have started, though when smoke was first noticed at 6:55 o'clock Saturday night it was coming from the windows of the film company. How much longer the blaze had smoldered unnoticed no one knows, but when Battalion Chief McGuire arrived in answer to the first alarm the whole building practically was in flames. He sent in a second, which brought Acting Chief "Smoky Joe" Martin, and Martin by 7:33 o'clock had sent in two more alarms.

Twenty-five engines, five truck companies, and two water towers, with full complements of men, were called to the blaze, for it seemed at first as though nothing could save the whole block on the north side of Twenty-sixth street between Seventh and Eighth avenues and possibly the houses in the rear and across the street as well. The building was surrounded by tenements housing negroes, Greeks and Italians, and these persons, hundreds of them, fled in wild panic when the flames burst through the roof of the old armory building and from all the windows.

Heavy clouds of smoke rose from the blaze and then sank again beneath the streams of water which firemen were directing at the building from the roofs of all adjoining houses, until Twenty-sixth street was made as dark as a pocket. It was impossible for men to pass through it, and firemen worked in relays, relieving one another at the nozzles of hose already carried into the street.

Time and again men were dragged from this pall to the clearer atmosphere of Seventh or Eighth avenues, and there doctors from Bellevue, the Polyclinic, Flower, and the New York Hospitals resuscitated whom they could and sent the others to the hospital.

A northwest wind which shifted occasionally to the southwest and blew fitfully from there carried sparks and embers out over the eastern part of the city. Ambulance surgeons reported sparks as far east as Second avenue as they came from Bellevue and Flower Hospitals, and big chunks of blazing débris fell in all the surrounding streets and upon nearby roofs, where tenants of these houses were kept busy with pails of water dousing incipient fires.

Fire hose burst frequently and crowds at Twenty-sixth and Twenty-seventh streets, both at Seventh and Eighth avenues, were drenched. Water from one broken line flooded the firebox of Engine 2, which stood almost in front of the blazing building. Two's streams were stilled when its pressure failed and the searchlight, operated by a generator taking power from the engine, was put out of commission.

Members of Rescue Squad 1, equipped with oxygen helmets, were called on to reach the roof, for no man not so equipped could live in the smoke. They got to the roof of the three-story tenement adjoining at 211 West Twenty-sixth street and mounted the other two stories on ladders. They had just opened skylights and scuttles when there came an explosion and the roof sank beneath their feet.

All reached the edge of the roof and their ladders in safety, but at first it was thought two of the men had gone down with the roof and the other members of the squad risked their lives to return to the blaze until it was found that all had been accounted for.

"Smoky Joe" Martin, with eight men, were on the third floor when the explosion came, and three of the men were overcome and carried out by the chief and others.

Lieutenant Gibney of Truck 24 became separated from his men in the third floor and when they were driven out by an explosion the lieutenant was found to be missing. Telling the others to save themselves, Fireman Hauser went back for his officer and found Gibney, lost in the big floor and almost overcome. He got him out just as the upper floors fell in where they had been standing.

It was evident to every fireman at the blaze that there was no hope of saving the old armory building, and every effort was directed to keep the fire from spreading. It seemed impossible, and time and again the window frames of surrounding tenements caught fire, but each time they were put out.

"If 'Smoky Joe' keeps it where it is he'll be a wonder," was the remark of almost every fireman, and "Smoky Joe" did. He raised walls of water on all sides of the building, the great sheets glittering like strings of jewels as the flames were reflected against them. Tongues of fire sprang out at them. Sometimes they darted through "Smoky Joe's" wall, but each time the firemen drove the flames back.

The walls were kept intact, while down inside them other streams of water thundered from all adjoining roofs. Notwithstanding the thousands of tons of water hurled on them, the flames seemed never to die down for nearly two hours. Then, finally, they began to retreat within the building. The huge pillars no longer rose over the roof. The blasts receded within the windows from which they had been leaping, and at 9 o'clock "Smoky Joe" announced that he had the fire under control.

Much of the great loss will be borne by the Famous Players Film Company. Adolph Zukor, president of the company, said films worth $150,000 had been stored in steel vaults, and this was understood not to include the film of "The Twisting Road," in course of preparation and valued at $75,000, in which Mary Pickford appeared.

Mr. Zukor said some of the films lost were almost priceless. One of these was "Belladonna," in which Pauline Frederick starred. As most of the scenes were acted in the Florida Everglades, he said, the film would cost many thousands of dollars to make again.

In addition, thousands of dollars' worth of costumes were destroyed. Among the losers in this way are Mary Pickford, Marguerite Clark, Hazel Dawn, and John Barrymore. Several pets belonging to the actors and actresses, including six canaries, two parrots, and a Persian cat were destroyed.

Other firms in the building were the Corrugated Paper Products Company in the basement and first floor; J. W. Scheuer, women's dresses, on the second floor, and the Independent Braid Company on the third floor. The film company had the fourth and fifth floors.

At conferences held on Monday at Hotel Astor were Adolph Zukor, president; James Durkin, James Kirkwood, Sidney Olcott and J. Searle Dawley, directors, and Edwin F. Porter, treasurer of the company and chief producer. Daniel Frohman, the managing director, is out of the city. No word was received from him and it is believed he does not yet know of the fire.

Benjamin P. Schulberg said Monday afternoon: "Of course the loss is a very severe one, but we are not losing a minute's time in the process of rehabilitating the business. The Biograph, the Universal and Baumann & Kessel have very generously offered us the use of their studios until we can find other quarters, but we do not think it will be necessary to burden them.

"There are unoccupied studios at Fort Lee, N. J., which can be put into shape within a very few days and in all probability we will go over there until our proposed plant on Marble Hill, overlooking the Harlem River, is ready. The site comprises thirty-one lots on Two Hundred and Twenty-fifth street. The plans are still in the hands of the architects, but will be completed within a month and building operations will be started immediately. These plans include two studio buildings —one open air structure and one closed—a factory, a laboratory and an office building.

"Besides these we will have an experimental laboratory for the use of Mr. Porter and his assistants in trying to get better results in the projection of the pictures.

"While waiting until these buildings are completed it is altogether probable that we will send several companies to Los Angeles, where we have a large establishment.

"Tuesday morning we will open business offices either in the Knickerbocker Theater building or in the World Tower building in Forty-first street, near Broadway. Just now our people are widely scattered owing to the fire. But to-morrow we will resume rehearsals at our Yonkers studios.

"No one seems to know how the flames started. The most remarkable thing about the fire—and I think this speaks mighty well for the precautions used by motion picture film manufacturers—is that our laboratory was untouched, while every other part of the building was gutted. The laboratory had been made absolutely fireproof. It contains explosive chemicals and highly inflammable materials, but even the wooden drums on which the celluloid films are stretched to dry remain unscorched.

THANHOUSER NEAR DEATH

President of Thanhouser Film Corporation and Entire Family Have Narrow Escape From Plunge Over Precipice in Auto

The memory of Sunday, September 5, will be a lasting one in the household of Edwin Thanhouser, president of the Thanhouser Film Corporation, of New Rochelle. By the narrowest kind of chance Mr. Thanhouser and his entire family escaped an instant and violent death of the most shocking description.

With Mrs. Thanhouser and their son and daughter, Lloyd and Marie, the "film wizard of New Rochelle" left his home on Riverside Drive for a day in the magnificent Thanhouser Winton, a powerful machine, and headed up along the Hudson river. The way led up toward Haverstraw and at a point a few miles below, they were going along the river road at not more than thirty-five miles an hour. On one side rose a wall and on the other a precipitious embankment led to the river, sixty feet below. The chauffeur suddenly saw a machine coming from the opposite direction at terrific speed, headed straight for the wrong side of the road. To avoid a collision Mr. Thanhouser's chauffeur turned sharply toward the river, and the other car shot by, but he had miscalculated his turn and was headed for the precipice too fast to stop. He applied the brakes heroically, but a little too late, and the front wheels went over the embankment; but there the miraculous occurred. Long ago somebody had apparently rigged up a lifting device, part of which was a steel cable running parallel with the edge of the road, but about a foot out, in the air. This is all that held the front wheels fast, so that the car could not go over the cliff for a sixty foot drop to certain destruction.

It is a strange incident, on recalling the fate of Mr. Thanhouser's predecessor, the late C. J. Hite, who died by the plunge of his automobile down an embankment. But Mr. Thanhouser does not believe in coincidences—he's very happy that fate intervened and even refuses to take credit for calmness in a tight place. He says that the coolest one in the car was little Marie.

The Frohman Amusement Corporation is just in receipt of a handsome herald issued by Kineco, Ltd., of Cardiff, England, in which it is stated a private exhibition of "The Builder of Bridges" was given at the Majestic Picturedrome of London, September 1. The author, Alfred Sutro, accepted an invitation to be present. Kineco, Ltd., will handle all of the Frohman Amusement Corporation's productions in the British Isles.

INCEVILLE A HIVE OF INDUSTRY

Billie Burke Already at Work in Western Studio—Jack Standing Arrives—New Subordinate Director Appointed

Billie Burke, the beloved star of the American stage, arrived at Inceville this week to make her photo-dramatic debut under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince in the Ince Triangle features. Attended by a retinue of maids, she was whirled into Los Angeles aboard a private car attached to the Overland Limited on the Santa Fe line. She was met at the depot by Producer Ince who escorted her to the studios, where a reception was tendered her by the Ince players. She then boarded the steam yacht engaged for her by Ince and was taken to the bungalow on the Catalina Islands, where she will reside during her stay in Southern California.

Before another week has passed, Miss Burke will have become a full-fledged photoplay actress. For more than two months, Inceville has been alive with preparations for the production of the subject in which she will be starred and now everything is in readiness for the first turn of the camera that will record her for the screen of the Triangle playhouses.

The story that has been written by C. Gardner Sullivan for Miss Burke is one of Scotch atmosphere, and the role she will interpret is expected to offer her more and greater opportunities than she has ever had in all her footlight career. She will have the part of an American hoyden who goes to Scotland and there becomes the second party to a romance that prospers to a happy culmination in the heathery hills of the Highlands.

The production of the Burke vehicle will be given a setting such as has rarely been attempted before in motion picture making. One street scene alone is costing Ince more than $5,000. It will be nearly a quarter mile in length and embrace about thirty-five dwellings, shops and other buildings. Its aspect will be that of the quaint Scotch village seen in almost any part of the country surrounding Glasgow or Edinburgh. Finishing touches are now being applied to this set.

Additional proof that Ince intends to spare no expense in making this production one of unrivaled elaboration is furnished by the fact that he has called upon New York City to provide him with most of the important "props." These consist of costly Scotch furniture, which was only obtainable at a certain Metropolitan antique house. They arrived, three carloads of them, a few days before the star for whose use they are intended, and are now being supplied to the various sets already constructed within the big glass-enclosed sets at Inceville.

The supporting cast which will appear with Miss Burke in the production has not as yet been chosen. Producer Ince is giving considerable of his time to this important item and will announce his decision next week.

One member of the cast, however, who has been definitely decided upon is William H. Thompson, dean of the American stage, who was prevailed upon by Producer Ince to act for films. Mr. Thompson and the N. Y. M. P. director-general are bosom friends, the latter having played for a number of seasons with the venerable actor, and it is due to this fact, in a large measure, that the contract was effected. Mr. Thompson arrived at Inceville on the same day as Miss Burke and related the thrilling railroad wreck in which he figured while en route. The train on which he was a passenger plunged from the track while crossing a desert stretch in Nevada, and though none were injured, the mishap delayed the journey.

Jack Standing, one of the seven famous brothers of that name, is also among the celebrities who recently have taken up their abode at the Inceville studios.

He has been engaged to appear exclusively in the Ince Triangle productions, in support of the notable stars now working under Ince's supervision, and is to be paid, it is said, a remarkably high salary for his services. His first appearance will be in the "heavy" role in support of William S. Hart when that illustrious star begins work on his next subject.

Dave Hartford, noted all over America, but more particularly on the Pacific Coast, as an actor and producer of the highest calibre, has been added to the forces of Producer Thomas H. Ince, in the capacity of subordinate supervising director. This acquisition is in the nature of an innovation, for while Hartford will do no actual directing, he will be in a great measure responsible for the productions. With the demand of the Triangle for one five-reel masterpiece each week from the Ince field, the great director-general has reached the conclusion that he needs help in his work of superintending the general output of the plant. Hence, the engagement of Hartford. It will be Hartford's duty to be instrumental in carrying out the many valuable suggestions of his chief concerning the betterment of pictures and to this end he has been vested with an authority that is second only to that of Ince in the directing end of the business.

CROWNED AT SAN DIEGO FAIR

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne Chosen as King and Queen of Carnival at Big Fair by Big Plurality

Metro stars shone brightest in the constellation of screen artists that scintillated about the grounds of the San Diego Panama-California Exposition on Motion Picture Day, Saturday, September 11, and Metro was the magic word on the lips of the tremendous crowd who gathered to do honor to their favorites among the notables of filmland. It was a veritable Metro day, and two of Metro's most popular artists were honored above all others at the fete.

In a formidable field of starters that included the foremost artists of the screen, Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, Quality-Metro stars, were respectively crowned king and queen of the great carnival, their selection being made after a hotly waged popularity contest conducted by the newspapers of Los Angeles and San Diego. The public voted for their favorite screen actor and actress on coupons provided for the purpose and Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne won with an overwhelming plurality.

The royal purple and ermine fitted snugly upon Mr. Bushman, as he was elevated to the king's throne in a similar contest a few weeks ago at the San Francisco Exposition. The signal honor bestowed upon Miss Bayne, the newest stellar attraction of the Quality Pictures Corporation, was received with considerable elation by President Fred J. Balshofer and her coworkers of the Quality-Metro forces. Miss Bayne looked every inch the "Quality Queen" of the occasion.

The keenest sort of rivalry and interest prevailed in the newspaper popularity contest, for the "Who's Who" among screen artists appreciated the distinction of being named to don the regal robes and crowns. A committee of representative citizens of Los Angeles and San Diego had personal charge in the final count of the bales of coupons deposited in the contest. This committee was composed of Mayor E. M. Capps, of San Diego, Mayor C. E. Sebastian, of Los Angeles, S. A. Davidson, president of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, Carl Heilbron, president of the San Diego Chamber of Commerce, D. F. Garrettson, president of the First National Bank of San Diego, and Marco H. Hellman, president of the Hellman Commercial Trust and Savings Bank of Los Angeles.

King Bushman and Queen Bayne ruled over the festivities arranged for the occasion, riding in state throughout the exposition grounds, where they received the plaudits of a record crowd, and the envious glances of a score of motion picture stars who were unsuccessful in the contest.

Famous Manuscripts Purchased

The entire collection of plays and manuscripts which represent a lifetime of collecting by Lester Wallack, the noted actor and producer, have been purchased by the Metro Pictures Corporation. These manuscripts, many of them so rare as to be without the possibility of duplication, number more than one hundred, and they will be made into feature plays for the screen by the several companies contributing to the Metro program.

At the auction sale of the properties of the Lester Wallack estate, held at the time when Wallack's theater, at Broadway and Thirtieth street, was sacrificed to the onmarch of office buildings, the manuscripts were bought by a private collector. When President Richard A. Rowland learned of their whereabouts negotions were begun and these were completed this week by the purchase of the entire collection.

Rare old plays by dramatists who contributed to the foundation work of the English drama, quaint plots as vigorous and as red-blooded as the most stirring of modern day picture plays and virile dramas that lend themselves admirably to the screen are included in the collection, and these will be adapted to needs of the modern day with such stars as Ethel Barrymore, William Faversham, Francis X. Bushman, Mme. Petrova, Mary Miles Minter, Edmund Breese, Hamilton Revelle, Lois Meridith, Emmy Wehlen, Valli Valli, Henry Kolker, Emily Stevens, Marguerite Snow and other great players now under contract with the Metro companies.

The list of dramatists included such well-known names as Richard Brinsley Sheridan, Mrs. Chas. Kemble, Dion Boucicault, J. Sterling Coyne, William Brough, John Brougham, Colley Cibber, James Sheridan Knowles, and Samuel Foote.

Richard Carle Secured by Pathe

Richard Carle, who has been secured to star in the forthcoming Pathe Gold Rooster play, "Mary's Lamb," produced by Donald Mackenzie, is easily one of the foremost figures on the American stage today. He was born in Somerville, Mass., making his first stage appearance with James F. Powers and Peter F. Dailey in "A Straight Tip." He made his first marked success in "The Lady Slavey." As a legitimate actor Mr. Carle won much notice as the carpenter in Zangwill's "Children of the Ghetto." He made a hit on the London stage in "The Casino Girl," and retains his popularity in England to this day. Returning to this country he starred in his own musical comedies, "The Mayor of Tokio" and "The Tenderfoot." In November, 1907, he appeared in his own comedy, "Mary's Lamb," which is now fast being put into motion pictures. To show Mr. Carle's ability it is only necessary to say that for the last ten years he has been at the head of his own companies as star and is the author of no fewer than ten musical comedies, all of them decided successes.

Richard Carle.

"The Proof of the Pudding"

A substantial and convincing bulletin entitled "The Proof of the Pudding" has been prepared by Paul R. Kuhn of the Nichols Finn Advertising Company, and mailed to exhibitors all over the country.

The bulletin contains statements of concrete results obtained by over 50 theaters running the big continued screen novel "The Diamond from the Sky," and as theaters and managers are named and addresses given it should be a simple matter for the skeptical reader to prove the facts.

One page gives twenty-two illustrations of advertising plans and devices that have been successfully used by exhibitors in attracting crowds to their theaters after which the picture was given its chance to clinch their interest.

My Method of Direction

By HARRY HARVEY*

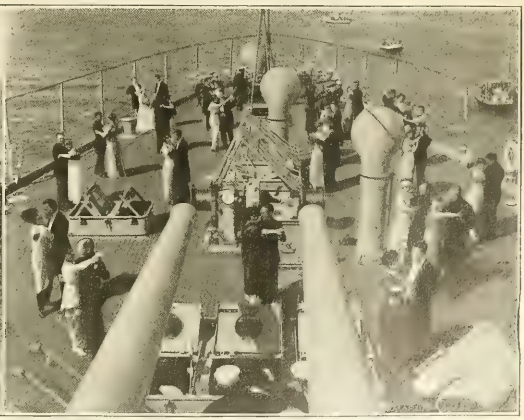
BE nice to your people—even down to the property boys and the smallest "extra." Then they will do anything you want them to and you will be able to get the result you are striving for. That sums up the most important thing, to my way of thinking, that the motion picture director must keep foremost in his mind all the time. If he flies off the handle, everyone else is tempted to follow suit. You cannot get anywhere, when things are at sixes and sevens, so to speak. As for the essential point in the matter of direction, it can hardly be summed up in a word. The methods change according to the action. It also depends on whom you are working with, the ability of your players, whether they come from the legitimate stage or the ranks of camera-trained. Accordingly, different tactics must be used.

Harry Harvey.

Not so long ago, it was customary to read the script about to be produced to the players. They were expected to memorize the action as was the custom with dialogue. But now I give each one of my principals a script and insist that they study it like a part so that they may know what they are trying to do. Actors from the legitimate have a tendency to work fast. They are used to having the spoken word help carry them along. In pictures, they cannot depend on this aid and their movements must be slowed down. They have to be taught to make deliberate, sweeping gestures.

Owing to the limitation of the camera's area, the actor has to learn to play in a much smaller space. I should say about one-fourth of what he was used to on the stage. And in this compact area, he must move slowly and surely, giving expression to his purpose by simon-pure acting. Occasionally a sub-title may help him out. But for the most part the screen-player is called upon to do more real acting than his brother on the stage who has dialogue to fall back on.

Take a full-evening play. It runs about two and a quarter hours. This is often compressed into 4,000 feet of film which is run off in half that time. For the stage version, there are four weeks of rehearsal. We do the same thing for the screen in twelve to fourteen days. All this means that expedition is an essential part of cinema production. Furthermore, it must be remembered that when a piece is filmed, that is the way the people see it. Not so with the spoken drama. Changes can be made whenever they suggest themselves. But after the camera has registered a scene, it remains that way.



Naturalness is required of screen actors more and more, because they do not work under the artificial conditions and the make-believe surroundings that compass the stage about. It has frequently been observed that so-called legitimate actors have a tendency to be mechanical. When they come before the camera, it is the director's duty to overcome this tendency. In some instances they must almost be taught to act all over again. Some players resent this keenly. Having made names for themselves in the established art, they fail to recognize that cinematographic expression is something entirely new. In such cases, the director has to be a diplomat, if he is to succeed with his co-workers.

When a screen production fails, it may be due to Probably as unique a scene as has ever been staged, showing a dance on the deck of the U. S. S. Maryland, in "Neal of the Navy."

any one of a number of reasons. The actor may have been rushed. You can't crowd him. He must have time to get over his business; for in this regard the camera is most exacting. Then again, some directors do not give their players credit for knowing. When working with experienced people, one should always consider that they have given years of study to their profession. Each person who has achieved some position must have intelligence. It can and should be made use of.

An interesting moment in "Neal of the Navy."

I am always on the lookout for suggestions from the people in my company. They want to appear to the best possible advantage. Hence, they think about their work. I have received many pointers from my people which have helped to improve scenes and actions notably. Frequently I solicit suggestion and then lump the ideas derived. You'd be surprised as to the effectiveness of such composite notions. Co-operation achieves wonderful results.

The successful director must have an executive head. He is called on to handle many different people and you know that of all types actor-folk have the reputation of being the least tractable. But that is unfair to them. They are not so much to blame as the ones who have tried to handle them. Their stage managers in the past have gone on the wrong basis. It has been customary to try to drive players, to get them up in the air so as to keep them on their toes. That's the very thing that should never be done.

In handling actors, like any other human beings, be careful not to antagonize them or get them nervous. Respect their feelings at all times. Guard against over-rehearsing. It becomes tiresome and is sure to show in the picture when the camerman begins to grind. You must keep your players interested in their work so that the mind does not wander, when the real filming is going on. This is highly important. It accounts for the effectiveness of certain scenes or situations, that at other times fall flat.

If you don't rare and swear, it is not difficult to direct a motion picture. Keep your wits about you, the story clearly in mind and take things easy. Treat your actors courteously and be as polite to them as you would to the people you meet at a social function. It is never necessary to raise the voice, no matter how strong the temptation to do so may seem. When things go wrong, as they frequently do, keep your temper notwithstanding. Your actors feel as badly about the mishaps as you do.

By overlooking a mistake or two, things will run along much more smoothly on the whole than if the "bawling out" process is resorted to. I never threaten my actors. If they make mistakes, we rehearse the scene over a few times and then retake it. This is much more effective in the long run than to paw the earth and get your associates excited, so that they will not be any good for the rest of the day. Win their friendship and their confidence. Then they will respect you and do your bidding. If an actor seems a bit slow about getting your meaning, it may be your fault instead of his. Sit down with him and talk it over. The average player will get your idea if you take time to tell the story. Once he understands what you are aiming at, he will have no trouble to express it.

Success on the director's part comes surest when he works as the middleman between his employer and the actors. They must all work hand-in-glove, to the common end of putting on intelligent picture-stories. I always lay out my work a week in advance, for each successive day. I can tell definitely when a production will be finished. System is necessary. It's all right to be eratic, artistic, tempermental or whatever you may call it—if you will; but for positive results, day in, day out, you have got to have a system. I have one all my own. I don't maintain that it is the only one; for many directors have splendid methods of their devising.

I leave nothing to chance, but work out every imaginable detail in advance. A record is kept of the scenes and sets, the location of a chair, where the comb was on the dresser, the sort of costumes worn, light conditions, time of taking, the make-ups of all actors, even to the hour of the clock on the stage, so that in following up scenes the continuity may be kept consistent and the details correct. This makes the work a pleasure and eliminates the impression of haphazardness that certain film productions give.

It makes a lot of difference as to the nature of the picture you are producing. The more reels it consists of the more complexed becomes the direction. In a multiple-reel film, there are more things to think of than in one limited to a thousand feet. And just so, the serial production of a score or more reels becomes more complicated than the "one-shot" story. First and foremost, it is up to the director to sustain the interest. The best writers overlook lapses that only stand out in actual production. This applies to the spoken stage as well as the silent drama. Then, one must keep in mind the matter of continuity and guard against inconsistencies for which the chances multiply almost by inverse ratio the length the continued film story runs. Only those directors who have made screen serials know of the countless points that must constantly be kept in mind. Considering the pressure of time under which most long pieces are put on, I think it remarkable that there are not more breaks in them.

My employers, the Horkheimer brothers, have given me every liberty possible and all leeway within reason. Working under such conditions, I have been able to produce the pictures which have given satisfaction to the exhibitors and their patrons. This is evidenced by the fact that Pathe Freres have asked for a follow-up series of the "Who Pays" stories, which were put on under my direction. As each tale was separate and distinct, I had to be careful in working out the production. They touched on important life problems, so I made a special study of each one.

Will M. Ritchey, Balboa's scenario editor, who wrote the stories furnished perfect working scripts. Then I had as capable a cast of motion picture actors as could be found. Ruth Roland and Henry King worked with me all the time and their ideas helped to unravel many tangles.

In beginning the production of "Neal of the Navy," I faced many difficulties, new to me. The picture was of an entirely different class. The locations fluctuated up and down the Pacific Coast, between San Francisco and San Diego. There was much under water work too. I had to study geography in order to know what sort of spots looked like Martinique, Lower California and South America. Then, I had to familiarize myself with the ways of the Aztecs, Spanish revolutionists and the West Indians. The naval officers aboard Uncle Sam's ships assisted me bounteously in getting correct naval details. Everywhere, I met cheerful co-operation.

After the first two episodes, I had everything in smooth running order so that the production is going along in ship-shape fashion. It's like finding the end of a ball of twine. When you have that, the unwinding comes easily. My principals in "Neal of the Navy" are trojans for work. Though it is Lillian Lorraine's first venture into pictures, she is one of the truly unafraid. She dives, plunges and does all sorts of stunts. Her Irish pluck is ever ready. William Courtleigh, Jr., ditto. I would like to mention all the rest, if I could have the space. But one more must be named. That is Joe Brotherton, the cameraman. No cinematographer has worked in more difficult places and with such success.

In conclusion, my chief suggestion to directors would be don't lose your head; be patient, and become thoroughly familiar with your scripts. If you will only be pleasant and considerate, there is no reason why you should fail—that is, if you know your business. A lot of directors do, but they overlook the little points that I have tried to bring out here. To practice them is one thing; to tell about them is another. But they are effective, whether I have made them clear or not.

Gaumont's Exceptional Photography

Richard Garrick, directing the three-reel Rialto star feature, "The House With Nobody In It," has introduced some splendid double and triple exposure in the photographing of this subject.

takes the lead, was made from in back of her while she looked in a mirror. The other photograph, symbolic of a dream, necessitated double exposure on the "still" plate and triple exposure to obtain the same effect on the film. This subject will be released September 22, on the regular Mutual program.

SHOULD YOU RAISE PRICES?

John R. Freuler Discusses Right Way and Wrong in Which to Increase Box Office Admission Prices and Hold Public's Good Will

Many exhibitors are up against the problem of increasing their admission prices to keep step with the increasing cost of conducting their shows. This involves many difficult problems and it is a step approached with fear and trembling by most exhibitors.

John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, in an interview, given out this week, discusses this problem and points to methods by which the exhibitor entitled to a high admission price may get it without imperiling his business.

"The same principles are involved whether you are getting 5 cents and want 10, or whether you are getting 10 and want 15 cents, or an increase in any similar ratio," remarked Mr. Freuler. "It has been the too common experience that attempts to increase admission prices have led to trouble and loss of business. The usual way in which exhibitors have started to raise prices is the wrong way. The competing exhibitors meet and decide to put up the price, say from 5 cents to 10 cents, agreeing to start it at the same time. Then along come the people, many of them with only a nickel in their pockets, and patronage is lost, patrons embarrassed or made unhappy. What happens next is that the exhibitor with the biggest streak of yellow in him, seeing a nickel or two escaping, rushes out to tear down his 10 cent admission sign, putting up a big 5 cent sign. The agreement is all shot to pieces and the business is upset for everybody. Or else the people, discovering the increased price, put on a little boycott of their own and quit going to the picture shows.

"Now, the way around all this sort of trouble is to take the public into your confidence in every change of policy. Also I believe in each exhibitor deciding on his policy for himself, independently of agreements with competitors and that sort of thing. So much about the wrong way—let's talk about the right way to raise the price of admission.

"The first move should be to get a big special feature, for example, one of the Rialto star features like Ivy Troutman in 'The House With Nobody In It,' on the Mutual program, or one of the big American three-reelers with Mae Allison and Harold Lockwood or 'The Pool Sharks,' a Gaumont one-reel comedy featuring W. C. Fields, a man that New Yorkers are paying $2 to see in New York. Book it and advertise it big. Make a lot of noise about the expensive nature of the film, how you are spending a lot of money to get the highest class of entertainment possible. Shout about the quality. Then for this particular show, probably Sunday, make the price ten cents. Then for the next Sunday announce another big feature, a bigger one if you can get it, and again make the admission ten cents.

"It is of the utmost importance that you make the patrons feel that they are getting a lot for their money. They will be sore if they think you are charging them a dime for a nickel show, but they will be happy if they think you are giving them a twenty-five cent show for a dime. Show them the goods, prove that you have the goods and they will be willing to pay for the goods. You can't just raise the price without any preparation and get away with it. You must create the impression that you are spending a lot more to entertain your patrons. After you have done this for three or four Sundays, you will have the habit of paying a dime to see your show fairly well established.

"The house manager must understand what is most desired in the neighborhood and by consulting the booking man in his exchange, arrange to get that particular stuff. One exhibitor may want to book 'Buck Parvin and the Movies' because he knows the Saturday Evening Post, which carried these stories, has a big circulation in his neighborhood. Another may want particularly to get Florence La Badie pictures because of her following; another may have a special demand for Horsley pictures with Crane Wilbur, famous screen star, for the same reason.

"Remember, when you raise your price of admission that you have to give the public a better reason than that you merely want the money. You must give your patrons a show that makes them want to spend the increased admission price to see it."

"DAMAGED GOODS" RELEASED

Famous Story Acted by All Star Cast—Will be Issued to Exhibitors On Mutual Program, on Monday, October Fourth

Now comes "Damaged Goods" in motion pictures.

The Mutual Film Corporation announces that it will release this play in seven reels, presenting Richard Bennett and all his cast of co-workers from the famous stage production, on October 4.

The release date for this remarkable picture was decided upon at a meeting of executives of the Mutual at the New York office, attended also by Samuel S. Hutchinson of the American Film Manufacturing Company. The production was filmed by this company and will be released under the "Flying A" brand.

"This is probably the greatest thing we have done in motion pictures," said Mr. Hutchinson.

"Our 'Damaged Goods' is also a rare testimonial to the ability of the motion picture to carry over such a remarkable plot and its involved sex lession in a clean way. None of the things that had to be said in the speaking stage production, with the inevitable mincing of words, come in to affect the film.

"The film tells the whole story of 'Damaged Goods' in such a way that it can give offense to nobody, without a tinge of the repulsive and yet it remains the most astonishingly powerful story I have ever seen on the screen."

Perhaps the most telling statement of all has come from Mr. Bennett himself, who has declared himself completely satisfied with the film version of this wonderful play.

A complete review of the feature appeared in Motography last spring, at the time the picture was completed by American and released on a states rights basis.

Bull Attacks Cameraman

George Barker, one of the Pathe Weekly's camera men, has discovered that life for a crank turner of the big animated news staff is a long ways from being a joke, for, while filming the rodeo at the "Frontier Days" held at Silver Creek, Nebraska, last week, to secure a close-up of "Texas Jack," alleged to be the world's champion steer bull-dozer, while the latter was attempting to bull dog a steer, he had a narrow escape from being killed when the bull, forgetting Texas Jack, charged straight for Barker and the Pathe camera.

Mr. Barker was busily watching the film gage on his machine and had no intimation of the bull's onrush until the animal's horns were just before him. Barker was unable to save his machine, which was tipped over and badly damaged, but luckily escaped with all his arms and legs still attached and later was able to put a second camera of his equipment into use.

Producer of "Thriller" Answers Critic

BY SAMUEL S. HUTCHINSON*

IT has become a fad for certain editors to rise up periodically and with much noise and display of ink, lay bare what they say are the mysteries of motion picture making. As is usual in such cases, the self-appointed propagandists are particularly uninformed, and it is their own great lack of information that is laid bare and nothing else. When a magazine sets out to tell the public all about how it—the public—is being fooled, there should be some effort made to ascertain real facts, and, if obtained, present them in a bold fashion that will serve a definite and honestly-meant purpose. But, if such real facts cannot be obtained, the publication of an article purporting to be authentic works to no benefit and only brings ridicule down upon the head of him who meant to ridicule. The motion picture business is too important and extensive an industry to need to reply to unknown critics—unknown in the sense that they are not sufficiently informed to pose as critics of an established trade factor, but, at the same time, it is difficult to pass without comment a recent article in the Saturday Evening Post, the writer of which sought to relate how free from danger are dare-devil deeds in pictures and to plant the thought that trick photography is the root of all evil and the backbone of all daring.

Samuel S. Hutchinson.

In obtaining certain effects of "lightning," the camera is, at times, used differently. But the general and continual use of the camera to trick the "action," as described by the writer in Saturday Evening Post, is more imaginative than practical.

At the American studios in Santa Barbara, we are just completing the most "thrill-filled" picture ever produced—"The Diamond from the Sky." In it there is the complete gamut of intense excitement. Each thrill is genuinely so acted out by real people without subterfuge or recourse to trick photography.

I have found in my producing experience, that a trick can never equal a reality or a deceit mock the truth. And, further, trickery is expensive. In making pictures it is an economy to tell the truth and that is a good axiom for any business. Trickery is expensive; first, because it requires delicate camera mechanism and time of the cameraman during whose special trick efforts the actors and actresses are idle.

Second, when exhibitors begin to learn that "trickery" is being substituted for realism, there is an immediate and well deserved comeback on the manufacturer. And it does not take long for an exhibitor to discover the deceptions, as his eye, trained to the screen, is a quick acting sleuth. When a picture deceives the exhibitor, it also deceives his patrons, and no man in a legitimate business is willing that his clients, upon whom he relies for his bread and butter, shall have any service through him except the best and most reliable.

The writer in the Saturday Evening Post takes a scene in "The Diamond from the Sky" to illustrate his "expose." Not satisfied with citing a scene of which he knows nothing, his misplaced confidence lures him further into an explanation of how it was accomplished.

His explanation is lengthy, as most inaccurate ones are. The scene is that one in which Irving Cummings is shown racing across the track in front of a speeding locomotive. Several paragraphs are devoted by the writer in tell how, by double printing, et cetera, the miracle of escaped death is pictured on the screen.

I can explain it accurately in two words—it happened. There was no double printing nor any trickery, and the camera man did not stand on his head, nor did either the racing car or the locomotive pose on the track. Personally, I am glad this writer chose this incident, for otherwise some interesting facts regarding it might have escaped publication.

Officials of a certain western railroad can testify to the fact that the scene was actually taken as it is shown on the screen, for the scare given one of its employes by the mad ride across the front of the speeding locomotive was such that it was necessary to relieve him from duty when the train pulled into the next station.

Mr. Cummings first appeared on the train engineer's horizon about one-quarter of a mile from the crossing which is the climax of a mad race. The engineer whistled a warning. Mr. Cumings answered, giving the engineer the impression that he would drive his auto up over a nearby hill along a road branching off and away from the crossing.

Naturally, the engineer—confident of this intention—put on more steam. And so did Mr. Cummings. Quick as a flash, the auto sped onto the track, crossed right under the headlight, careened off the track, swerved, righted itself and down the road it went out of the scene.

Those who have not seen this chapter of "The Diamond from the Sky," I ask to particularly notice this scene and note that just as the auto crosses the track the hood of the machine flies up and settles in a crossed position over the engine. This is proof of the realism of it all, for the fender of the auto was struck by the locomotive and, flying back, knocked off the hood.

An actor who accomplishes what Mr. Cummings accomplished in this death-defying scene, should not be subjected to the criticism that his daring deed was the result of trickery and "stop-camera" work.

The Saturday Evening Post writer also offers an explanation of how a man goes over a cliff in an automobile in "The Diamond from the Sky." The value of this explanation is equal to the other one for accuracy and just as replete with ignorance of facts.

My two-word explanation, however, again fits—it happened.

Star Proves Popular With All

Not every professional woman can make friends with a bunch of sailors the way Lillian Lorraine does. In playing the leading feminine role in "Neal of the Navy," the patriotic serial photoplay which Balboa is filming for Pathe, Miss Lorraine has been called upon to fraternize with men of the sea of all ranks and conditions; and she has met them more than half way. Jack Tars are wont to show deference to the feminine sex, for gallantry is one of their foremost qualities. But not every woman can win the undivided favor of a ship's crew like Miss Lorraine has done. She has mingled with the full quota of half a dozen of Uncle Sam's biggest battleships in the course of the photographing of the maritime story, and invariably the hundreds of men that inhabit them have voted her a good fellow. In off moments Miss Lorraine has entered into the jackies' sports as if she were one of the boys, and she has always lent an interested ear to their tales of the sea. One of them spoke of having seen a school of flying fish. That was too much for the actress. She didn't believe there was such animal. It was up to the sailors to make their word good. They organized an expedition and in a few hours captured several specimens. Like a good sportsman, Miss Lorraine treated the entire crew, for that's the kind of a girl she is.

The Efficiency Expert

Editors Motography:—In an editorial in Motography of Aug. 28, there is a highly colored word picture of the Efficiency Expert, and we are told of the dire consequences of letting this fierce creature run amuck in a moving picture studio.

The producer that would be guilty of turning this wild man into a plant would be likely (if consistent) to select as directors, men from "boiler factories, bicycle shops or insurance offices," and his players from workmen of the ranks. But no, he already has his directors (ex-actors mostly), and the companies are made up of artists of worth. According to the editors, to mention the words system or efficiency to these tempermental people (tempermental—what a multitude of sins that word covers!) is to send shivers up and down their spines. Why stop at making "Gabrielle d'Annunzio punch the time clock?" Why not hang a bell from his neck so that the system man may know whether he is working or, perchance, idle for a few moments?

Here is the aforesaid word picture: "Efficiency experts are beginning to cast covetous eyes at the motion picture business. They see what they take to be a wonderful field for their services—a virgin territory for their occupation. Soon they will be swarming down on the producers' studios like a bunch of old-fashioned housewives on a bachelors' tenement.

"They are persuasive talkers, these efficiency men. They can convince you in ten minutes that the money they can save you will amount to more than your earnings. They could show any big film manufacturer that he was throwing away a million dollars a year, more or less. More than that, they could demonstrate—on paper—that they personally could save him all this discarded value with a dose of system.

"His talk may be convincing; but trust him not. Oh, he can reduce costs, all right. There isn't any limit, short of a hundred per cent, to the amount he can cut off the expense sheet. But unless he is himself a producer of experience he will play more hob with the product of the studio than an intoxicated camera man."

Mr. Editor: Would you kindly confide to a trusting reader of your valuable journal just how much experience as a producer one must have to be of value in the efficiency line? "Commercialism inside of the studio is fatal," you say. Well, don't let the brazen efficiency man get on or anywhere near the stage. Let the directors and actors work when the mood is on them, or on a sufficient number of them at any one time; but really that is not where the making of films begins or ends. What about the development and scenic departments, the carpenter shop, the scene shifters, property men, wardrobe department, garage, stables, machine and blacksmith shops, the electricians, gardeners, janitors, watchmen, firemen and the office force? Can you honest to goodness, cross your heart, say that there is no room for the system man in any of these departments?

In your article you do admit the average motion picture studio might respond to a bigger application of system. "Motion picture production is a purely commercial proposition." If it did not pay, and pay well, there would not be the immense amount of capital invested in it that there is now, and in these days of hot competition the producers must find ways of curbing reckless expense and tremendous waste of time, as well as material, and from actual experience I can tell your readers that the studio end of the proposition needs, and will yield to the proper amount of system, if tactfully applied.

Ask this one question of any of the well known actors or actresses of your acquaintance. "When are you the happiest, when working or when loafing?" You must know very well what the answer would be. The greatest bugbear to the movie actor's life is the long wait while a picture is being prepared.

But even the boiler factory system man was not born an efficiency expert. He may have been trained to make and enforce iron clad rules that know no bending, but he was trained, and it is well that producers are already alive to the need of system and are training men for the work. It is simply a matter of selection and training. The motion picture efficiency expert must have good judgment, even temper, tact and backbone. Yours truly,

F. M. Taylor, one of those terrible efficiency experts.

If Mr. Taylor will read the editorial he mentions again, he will observe that we did not decry the opportunity for systematization in the studio. What we did and still do insist is that the efficiency man who would reform studio practice must be a motion picture expert first, and an efficiency expert second. We do not know anyone who better meets this condition than Mr. Taylor himself; so he has not argued us out of our position.

The distinction is an important one. The expert hired to systematize a telephone factory generally has had no telephone experience. The efficiency man employed to reduce costs in a piano-making plant usually never saw the inside of that particular species of plant before. Yet they get away with it—for the reason that all factory processes are more or less alike. We still do not believe that man (who might systematize "boiler factories, bicycle shops or insurance offices" with perfect success, though he had no previous knowledge of any of them) could make any net improvement in motion picture studio work. We are speaking all the time, of course, of the consulting efficiency specialist, who is called in to physic sick businesses, and departs as soon as he has laid out a diet for the patient.

Yet that same specialist can, and doubtless will, reduce costs in all the mechanical departments of a motion picture plant if he is allowed to tackle the problem, and for that purely mechanical work he needs no picture experience. His systematizing experience is the more valuable of the two.

As far as the studio is concerned Mr. Taylor may conceive that he is in dispute with us; but we cannot see it that way. Rather it appears that he is just the sort of efficiency expert we tried to idealize in our editorial—one who knows the picture business.

Knickerbocker Star Well Again

Florence Rockwell, the Knickerbocker Star, recovered from her recent illness sufficiently to be able to finish her work in the three-reel Knickerbocker Star Feature, "The Purple Night." The illness of Miss Rockwell caused the release date of this feature to be changed from September 1 to September 15. "The Purple Night" will mark the debut of Miss Rockwell on the moving picture screen. Since her first appearance on the stage when but a little girl, Miss Rockwell's career has brought her to the very top of the theatrical profession. Her success in the roles of Juliet and Ophelia, playing opposite Richard Mansfield and Robert Mantell, her triumph in "The Doll's House" and "The Scarlet Letter," and the reputation she established for herself in "The Round Up," "The Barrier," "The Mills of the Gods," and as the heroine in the all star cast of "Fine Feathers," all goes to prove her wonderful versatility. Her wonderful acting in "The Purple Night" promises to give her as prominent a place in the moving picture field as she has attained upon the stage, if one may judge from her work on the screen.

Harry Fisher With Morosco

Harry Fisher, the well known juvenile lead, has been engaged by the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company and is now at work at the Los Angeles studios, in support of Blanche Ring in a screen version of her greatest stage success, "The Yankee Girl." Mr. Fisher, although young in years, has had wide experience on both the theatrical and screen stage. His first success was scored with Corse Payton's stock company in Brooklyn, and he subsequently owned a stock house in Duluth in partnership with Gus Forbes. With the Spooners he played at their houses in Jersey, Brooklyn, and finally in New York, on Forty-third street. In motion pictures he has appeared with great success for many well known producing copanies, including Lasky, in support of Abeles, Breese, Ross and others. In "The Yankee Girl" he is given a big field in which to demonstrate his ability in the role of Willie Fitzmaurice, a part that he is particularly adapted to. Work on this production is rapidly progressing and from early indications it should present one of the biggest hits yet scored by Oliver Morosco. The play was considered a piece of stagecraft far above the average and its wonderful screen possibilities are being made the most of by Mr. Morosco's efficient film staff.

Bonavita Defies Death

The accompanying photograph conveys but a faint idea of the many risks run by Captain Jack Bonavita, the world famous trainer of jungle beasts, now trainer in chief of the celebrated collection of animal performers at the studios of the Bostock Jungle and Film Company, at Los Angeles.

The scene depicted is taken from "The Woman, the Lion and the Man," a two-reel Centaur release in the regular Mutual program of September 23. Captain Bonavita and "Nero," the most celebrated lion performer in the world, who are featured in this stirring drama of love and intrigue, are herewith shown in one of the many sensational scenes in "The Woman, the Lion and the Man," a striking illustration of the fearlessness Bonavita holds for these jungle kings.

Bonavita's past experience with jungle animals, on one occasion being left for dead in the cage after a desperate struggle with "Baltimore," now dead, and again when "Denver," one of his most faithful friends, suddenly became enraged and tore off his left arm, has taught him to always be prepared. Bonavita never enters a scene in which his lions are a part, without a loaded revolver in his possession. In the photograph, Bonavita is shown fully armed, in preparation for an unexpected attack. Strange as it may seem, however, Bonavita in all his long and adventurous career as a trainer of wild animals, has never had occasion to use a pistol, depending entirely upon the strange power he wields over these jungle habitues to protect him.

The wedding in the lion's cage.

The Minusa Cine Products Company made a rush installation of its famous Gold Fibre screen at the Forty-fourth Street Theater, New York City, for a special two weeks showing of the feature film "Trilby," which is staged under the personal direction of S. L. Rothapfel.

Burr McIntosh to be "Wallingford"

Actor, author, photographer, publisher, lecturer, and coal mine magnate—here is a list of activities, any one of which is sufficient to engage an ordinary man his whole life, but Burr McIntosh is no ordinary man. That's why he has been signed for the Wharton production of Pathe's "The New Adventures of J. Rufus Wallingford." George Randolph Chester said Mr. McIntosh was the one man to play "Wallingford," and his advice has been followed.

Burr McIntosh.

On leaving college Mr. McIntosh went back to his home in Pittsburgh where his father was president of the largest bituminous mining company in the country. Our college athlete at once jumped into both business and politics, forming the "Six Foot Republican Marching Club" of 150 men, each of whom was six feet or over in his stocking feet. Pittsburgh still speaks with pride of that remarkable organization.

Tiring of the coal business Mr. McIntosh left to become a journalist in Philadelphia, and got a job at $10 a week on the Philadelphia News. Within five weeks he had a full page expose of the most notorious thieves' resort in the city. Having sufficiently proven his versatility in business and reporting, Mr. McIntosh went on the stage making his debut in Bartley Campbell's play "Paquita" at the Fourteenth Street Theater. Some of the parts which he made famous are "Colonel Moberley" in "Alabama," "Jo Vernon" in "In Mizzoura," "Joe" the cowboy in "The Cowboy and the Lady," and other southern character parts. His best work, perhaps, was as "Pudd'nhead Wilson" as "Senator Langdon" in "The Gentleman from Mississippi," "Col. Watterson Blossom" in "Cordelia Blossom," and "Taffy" in "Trilby," though he expects to obtain even greater laurels in future releases.

JACK PICKFORD A SELIG STAR

Famous Juvenile Who Has Been Featured in Many Big Productions to Appear in Selig Photodramas of Early Release Date

Jack Pickford has joined the Selig Polyscope Company and was in Chicago recently, en route to the Pacific Coast, where he will work with the Selig Pacific Coast companies.

Although only nineteen years of age, Jack Pickford has been engaged as a motion picture actor for the past seven years. He started in the work when he was in knee breeches. He has played important roles with the stock companies of Biograph, Pathe, Reliance and Famous Players. Among the famous productions in which he has appeared can be named: "Wild Flower," "The Love Route," "The Pretty Sister of Jose," "Girl of Yesterday," etc.

"I am delighted to have the opportunity of appearing in Selig Polyscope Company productions," asserted Mr. Pickford while in Chicago. "The artistic aims of Mr. Selig are so well known, the artistic environments of the Selig company is so well understood and appreciated by motion picture actors, that there is a sense of personal gratification in being permitted to affiliate with the Selig company."

Mr. Pickford will be cast for important roles just as soon as he arrives on the Pacific Coast.

Building Dynamited

This photograph shows the extent to which Director-General D. W. Griffith of the Reliance Motion Picture Corporation will go in order to secure an effect. The photograph is that of an explosion in the feature "Her Oath of Vengeance," the photoplay in which "Teddy" Sampson plays the part of a Russian girl. The explosion is of a cannery at the edge of a California orchard. It is planned and executed in the photoplay by a former Russian nihilist, who has tried to incite a strike among the workmen and has failed.

The explosion as caught by the camera.

While Director-General Griffith did not build a complete cannery for the purposes of the explosion, he did have one constructed which, with very little addition, could have been in practical operation.

Pathe Player Proves Rare Find

Miss Marie Wayne, who is supporting Richard Carle in Pathe's Gold Rooster play, "Mary's Lamb," is new to pictures, but well known in vaudeville as one of the team of Deeley and Wayne. Donald Mackenzie, who is producing the picture, saw her in her act and liked her so well that he felt sure she would make good in pictures, and so gave her her chance.

Miss Wayne was borne in Tokio, Japan, of American parents, her father being in the U. S. government service there and her grandfather a Methodist bishop in foreign service. She ran away from home when seventeen years old to go upon the stage, and secured an engagement in vaudeville with Lasky's "Pianophiends." An engagement with the Shuberts at the Winter Garden followed, and then she went into vaudeville again as a member of the team, Deeley and Wayne. Miss Wayne has a charming personality which should appear to good advantage on the screen.

Fundamental Principles

TRANSFORMED BY FEATHERSTONE

DAYLIGHT PICTURES

MUCH mystery usually is attached to the showing of so-called "daylight pictures." The principles controlling their production are so simple that if any exhibitor with an ordinarily good screen and means to project a bright picture will heed a few simple suggestions he can have a fairly well lighted house and a satisfactory picture at the same time.

The first condition is that no light shall reach the screen except what comes from the projector.

This is fulfilled by providing a shadow box whose sides and top extend so far toward the audience that they will shield the screen at least from such side and top lights as are in the part of the theater nearest the screen.

The inside of the box should be lined with dull black, and everything else visible to the spectators should be dark or subdued.

The picture then seems brighter by contrast, and also for the reason that the pupils of one's eyes contract more and more for every bit of added light that enters

IDEAL ARRANGEMENT

The ideal arrangement of screen, booth and shadow box with respect to the audience is shown in Figure 49 in which A is the projecting machine, B the picture screen and C and D the top and one side of the shadow box.

It will be seen that the light rays coming from the booth at A, toward the screen B, pass well within the borders of the shadow box, C, D, E, which is as small as possible without hiding the view of the screen from any of the spectators.

In fact, the size of the shadow box may be determined by running a line from each sidemost front seat to the near-side of the picture frame.

The top of the shadow box is similarly determined (if there is a balcony or gallery) by running a line from the topmost seats to the top of the picture frame.

If there is no balcony and the booth is higher than the highest seat, then run a line from the booth window to the top of the picture frame.

Now in regard to the illumination of the theater itself. This is so important a matter, and yet so simple in principle that it is astonishing how often wrong methods are used.

MOST HOUSES WRONGLY LIGHTED

Probably ninety per cent of the houses that have lights on during the picture show have them arranged to shine in the eyes of some of the spectators as well as on the screen. This leads us to the second condition which is that no light shall reach the eyes of the spectators except what comes from the picture on the screen.

This is even simpler of attainment than the first condition, and merely requires that all lights be shaded in a way that is perfectly obvious when one gives it the least careful thought.

The first condition is that no stray light shall reach the screen. Very well, then, fix your shades so that you cannot see any of the lights when you stand where the picture is.

SHADES PLUS SHADOW BOX

This means that unless all of the lights are above or at one side of the shadow box, they must have a shade that will prevent their shining toward the screen.

The second condition—that no stray light shall enter a spectator's eyes—calls for the complete shading of the back of each lamp, for the simple reason that our eyes are in the front of our heads, and we are looking forward. Yet how many theaters have lights equally visible from all directions.

The back shade must extend down far enough to shield the lamp also from those sitting only slightly behind and below, especially if the lamps be high up as on the ceiling.

Similarly the side lights, along the walls, should shine forward only, or at least they should not be visible from a seat across the hall in the next three or four rows in front of each lamp, for a person more often glances to right or left than upward.

KILLING THE STRAY LIGHT

When the lights are properly shaded, everyone will be able to see clearly every one in front of him, and yet, not being blinded by the glare of any stray light, his eyes will remain wide open so that the picture will appear practically as bright as if the hall were in darkness.

The design of the shades should conform as nearly as possible to those shown in Fig. 49, but a very simple substitute is to make a cone or pyramid lined with a reflecting material and hang it over the lamp so that the light is thrown down and slightly forward.

ADJUSTING THE SHADES

In adjusting the shades simply go to the screen and make sure that from any part of it you cannot see a single light. Then sit in selected chairs in different parts of the house and look toward the screen with all lights on. You should not be able without turning around to see any of the lights from any of the seats.

Of course if you turn around you would see a number of lights from most any seat, but you are not supposed to turn around while viewing a picture.

If the illumination of the house is all artificial there is no real need of a shadow box, but if pictures are attempted in real daylight, then a shadow box will always help, for even if the daylight is admitted only through windows properly shaded as above, daylight is so much more intense than ordinary artificial illumination that enough of it usually will reach the screen to dim the picture.

SPECIAL SCREENS

Many other kinds of attempts have been made to permit the showing of pictures in a lighted hall. Special screens for the purpose are of two kinds—translucent and reflecting.

With a translucent screen (one through which the picture is thrown from behind) similar care should be taken that light from in front does not shine directly on the screen, although this would not spoil the picture so much as with the ordinary screen.

The chief trouble with translucent screens is that the spectators must be almost directly in front of the screen or the brightness of the picture will vary. In fact, the picture usually "fades away" even more rapidly than with reflecting screens of the rough or pebbled variety.

Several reflecting screens have been put out for use in a lighted theater, and with a few precautions similar to the shaded lamps described above, are usually satisfactory even without a shadow box.

LAWS OF REFLECTION

The reason why a reflecting screen is peculiarly adapted to the showing of "daylight" pictures is found in the laws of reflection. The first of these laws is that the angle of reflection is equal to the angle of incidence.

As explained in a previous article, a perfectly flat reflecting screen would show no picture at all, but simply a reflection of the front of the house. Hence they roughen up the surface a bit, so that rays of light are reflected in many directions and make a picture similar to that shown on a dull white sheet, only brighter because a sheet of cloth absorbs and transmits much light, while the reflecting screen sends it nearly all back to the spectators.

SCATTERING LIGHT

Both screens scatter light more or less and that is what makes the picture visible.

Now there is such a thing as making a screen scatter light just about the way we want it to, and this is what the screen makers do when they want to provide you a screen that will enable you to keep the lights burning during the show or actually show in subdued daylight or skylight.

Roughly speaking, the picture machine and the spectators are on the same side of the screen, and in such relative position that light thrown from the projecting machine to the screen bounces back and hits the middle of the house.

Now, depending on the size of the house and arrangement of seats, the reflecting screen has been roughened just enough to make it scatter the light so that all of the seats will receive it about equally well.

This does not mean that the light is scattered in every direction, but just enough to reach all the seats. Here is where the nicety of the arrangement comes in. If you put lamps outside of a certain region the light from them will not be reflected to the spectators even if these lamps shine directly on the screen.

OPEN AIR THEATERS

The same is true of diffused daylight, so that it is possible to leave a large section of the roof open, and if the light from the sky does not reach the screen at an angle exceeding "the critical angle" then it will not interfere with the picture.

There is always this to guard against, however, that the total illumination of the house be not sufficient to "take the shine off the picture." For even though the lights themselves may not shine in our eyes, we can be almost as readily annoyed by light reflected from any bright object illuminated by the shaded lamps, as for instance, white shirtwaists and collars and the faces of those in front and a little to one side, not to mention bright decorations of the theater itself, which, needless to say, should not be indulged in, at least toward the screen end of the house if the pictures are ever to be shown except in total darkness.

Marjorie Ellison a Real Favorite

Marjorie Ellison of the Edison Company, who for more than two years has been before the motion picture in the Edison films, came direct to the Edison Company after six years' stage experience, embracing the fields of musical comedy, melodrama, drama and vaudeville.

Marjorie Ellison.

After two seasons in support of David Higgins in "His Last Dollar," in which she played the adventuress, "Viola," Miss Ellison hearkened to the call of the camera and deserted the ranks of the speaking stage.

Joining the Edison Company, Marjorie gave to the screen its first conception of the real Manicure Girl in a film of that name. In great contrast to that character she gave an equally artistic performance as the Private Secretary, the crafty villainess, in the three-reel play, "The Impostor."

Her work as Annie Jones, the express woman in the farce comedy, "The Terrible Trunk," introduced her with the same degree of success in broad comedies which was followed up in the part of "Nora" in the "Cook's Mistake."

Then back to the dramatic, Miss Ellison gave a splendid performance of "Hetty Sharp" in the three-reel picture "What Could She Do?" Her portrayal of "Laura Leslie" in the "Olive's Opportunities" series is evidence sufficient that this clever young lady can play the adventuress roles with unsurpassed ability, thereby proving her versatility.

Opens New Orleans Office

Increasing business throughout the middle South and in particular the immediate neighborhood of New Orleans, has made necessary the establishment of a George Kleine office in that city. This territory, which up to the present has been handled by the Atlanta branch, will be in charge of Howard Gail, with offices at 103 Nola building.

Thomas H. Ince has recently established a dancing school at Inceville. This is designed to furnish instruction in the terpsichorean art to every actor and actress at the studio who is not a recognized expert.

Ohio Board in for Finish Fight

"HYPOCRITES" SUBJECT FOR CONTROVERSY

THE Ohio Censors have precipitated what promises to be the hottest fight of their turbulent existence, through their flat refusal to pass the Bosworth, Inc., masterpiece, "Hypocrites," which has been passed in every other state in the Union except Ohio, due, as some believe, to the personal spite and prejudice of at least one member of the board, and not to any inherent wrong in the picture itself.

"Hypocrites" has lain dormant in Ohio ever since it was first offered to the public by the Famous Players Film Service, Inc. This fact was daily drawing more attention of both the exchange and the manufacturer until, at the Paramount convention in Chicago, a conference was held between James Steele, president of the exchange, W. C. Bachmeyer, branch manager, and Carl H. Pierce, special representative of Bosworth, Inc., at which it was determined that some action should be taken looking to the release in Ohio of a picture that priests, ministers, police and other censors, and the best people of every community (outside of Ohio) had unqualifiedly endorsed.

At this conference it was decided that Mr. Pierce should go to Ohio and endeavor by every known method in keeping with respectful treatment and polite solicitation to obtain from the censors a favorable decision. Such methods, however, proved unavailing.

Mr. Williams of the board said he feared the picture would be harmful to a certain class. Mr. Wilson said he felt that Paramount pictures were being shown in cheap theaters; that "Hypocrites" would be exhibited to the masses—and that this picture would be harmful to the masses.

As against this contention that Paramount pictures are being shown in nickel houses, Mr. Pierce asked Mr. Wilson to name one nickel house where Paramount pictures are being shown. Of course he could not name one in the United States. In contradiction to his feeling that it would be harmful to the masses, the manufacturer submits one letter from hundreds of a similar nature, written unsolicited by Colonel Alice V. Herron of the Volunteers of America:

> To witness "Hypocrites" means inspiration and a keener appreciation of truth. "Hypocrites" is preaching a great fundamental principle of Christianity to the masses. I truly and sincerely hope that every man, woman and child will witness this wonderful, inspiring photo-play, "Hypocrites."

On receipt of the board's final decision, Mr. Pierce wired for Mr. Steele, who joined him in Columbus, and together they went before the Industrial Commission to endeavor to obtain a reversal of the decision. They were introduced to the commission by Ben H. Harmon, general manager of the Neil House in Columbus—a man of highest repute in his community. "These gentlemen are known to me to be men of integrity and standing," said Mr. Harmon. "They have a picture concerning which they will tell you. I have seen the picture myself and consider it proper in every way to be shown. I wish you would use such influence as you can to obtain a rescinding of the decision."

Mr. Yaple said the commission was very busy; that if it started to consider appeals from the decisions of the Censor Board it would be more busy than it ought to be, but that since Mr. Stoughton, secretary of the Industrial Commission, was by virtue of the law secretary of the Censor Board he would ask Mr. Stoughton to take up the case.

Mr. Stoughton's only effort in this direction was to ask Mrs. Miller to change her mind—and this she would not do. It is said that she has publicly expressed herself so forcefully, saying that "Hypocrites" shall never pass in Ohio, as to practically make it impossible for her to retract. Mr. Stoughton also said that he was too busy to even look at the picture. Did not even have forty-five minutes to give it, and would have to leave the matter as it stood.

This first step in appealing from the censor's decision having failed and all moderate methods having proven of no avail, Mr. Steele counseled Mr. Pierce to proceed with any more severe methods which seemed wise to bring the Ohio Board of Censors to a realization that they are not appointed merely for the purpose of exercising whims, but that when they pass such films as "The Clemenceau Case," "Three Weeks," "Annette Kellerman," "The Devil's Daughter," "The Island of Regeneration," etc., they can ill afford to turn down a picture so pure in its significance and so uplifting in character as to cause women like Mrs. E. M. Platt, president of the Federation of Women's Clubs in Missouri, to exclaim over her own signature:

> Words cannot describe one's inmost feeling when seeing this portrayal of truth. To me the picture is purity itself, for there cannot be purity without truth. The allegory is deeply religious, beautifully conceived, beautifully set, and it touches many phases of life, all tending to inspire the beholder with a greater love and reverence for truth.

Upon consultation with Henry Gumble, reputed to be one of Columbus' wisest and most respected attorneys, it was decided to enter into a campaign, thorough, lasting and conclusive, acquainting the public with the facts of the case. Mr. Pierce also suggested a showing at the Majestic theater, to which should be invited friends of Mr. Gumble (who had seen the picture and thought it right to be exhibited); friends of Mr. Harmon, who is thoroughly in earnest in his desire to see the picture passed; friends of Max Stearn of the Majestic and of J. A. Maddox, both of these men feeling that there is absolutely nothing about the picture that should prevent its exhibition. Miss Alice Brown, dramatic editor of the Columbus, Ohio, State Journal, who had seen the picture and felt that it should pass, was also asked to name a few friends, and this invitation was also extended to the dramatic critics of the Dispatch and the Citizen.

The Majestic having been engaged for the showing, steps were taken to obtain the Trinity Church choir and to have a prominent minister lecture on the deep significance of the photoplay, just as has been done elsewhere.

In addition to making arrangements to have as perfect a showing for "Hypocrites" in the Majestic as possible, active steps were taken to prepare slides, press matter, daily letters to the exhibitors appraising them of the progress of the campaign; and also to send the exhibitors of the state daily clippings from the Columbus papers, which are without exception backing the fight. Mr. Pierce has also arranged, so far as time permits, to visit the newspapers and exhibitors of the state to acquaint them with the circumstances. At this writing he is on his way to Cleveland, where it is felt that the newspapers are a unit in protesting against such forms of censorship as will seemingly not permit of a square deal.

Mrs. Miller of the Censor Board had her ear to the ground. She had heard that scores of applications had been received by Mr. Pierce at the Majestic theater, asking permission to see the photoplay, and to stem this tide she determined upon some drastic action of her own. She called up Mr. Maddox of the Majestic and berated him over the phone for allowing the private showing of "Hypocrites" at his theater. "When it comes to the matter of those to whom we rent our theater for exhibition purposes," replied Mr. Maddox to the infuriated woman, "we feel that that is our business."

"You know that the picture is indecent," Mrs. Miller is reported to have said. "As to that, I have my individual opinion—and it does not happen to coincide with yours," replied the Majestic manager.

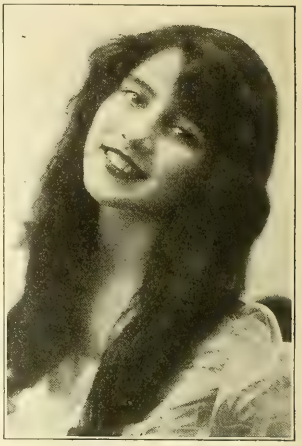
"You infer then, I suppose, that Ben Harmon, manager of the Neil House, is one of those who do not agree with me?"

"Mr. Harmon certainly approves of the picture," replied Mr. Maddox.

"Well, who is Ben Harmon that he should attempt to say whether a picture is or is not fit to show—that is something I should like to know," is the reported conversation.

"Mr. Harmon is a very much respected member of the community," was the answer.

"Anyway," said the lady, "the attorney general has a ruling on such private showings. I think they are not permissible. I shall see him at once and try to stop the Majestic showing,"—and she rang off.



"Fortunately for all of us," said one Ohio exhibitor this week, "Mrs. Miller's days are numbered. She had the effrontery recently to come to me and ask me to recommend her for reappointment, notwithstanding the fact that she has given me more to meet than any living woman. Not only this, but she insisted that I send her a carbon of my letter to the governor. She was not content to rub in the vile treatment she gave me by asking me to recommend her, but she did not even trust me to write the letter if I promised so to do, without seeing my carbon. Of course I refused such a request, which is only a sample of her methods. If she is not reappointed, and there seems to be no earthly chance that she will be, a mighty shout will go up from exhibitors and exchange men all over Ohio, for she certainly has been some problem to us all."

Meanwhile the "Hypocrites" showing at the Majestic, arranged for next Saturday, is looked forward to with interest by all of the exhibitors in the state, for no more moral film, and no better money getter has ever been released.

Many will be interested in the reported coming release of "The Pearl of the Antilles" the first production of Tom Terriss' recently formed producing company. The Terriss Feature Film Company produced this five-reel masterpiece last spring in Jamaica. Certain small details in the interior scenes were not completed at that time and, although the feature was advertised for release by the Picture Playhouse Film Company, the picture was never given to the public but was withdrawn at the last moment in order to give the fullest perfection to the production.

Plimpton's Son Marries

That even the "hardened" camera man, looking upon beauty with a "picture eye" alone, is susceptible to the girl of real charm is surely evidenced in the surrender of Horace Gordon Plimpton, Jr., camera man, Edison, Saturday, when he married with some haste the lovely Marie La Manna of that company.

Marie La Manna.

The romance began less than a year ago when Miss La Manna was chosen because of her girlish beauty and grace for the part of the lovelorn beautiful princess in the Edison five-part feature production of the widely-known Hanlon Brothers' "Fantasma." It was her first role of importance with Edison and she made an immediate impression with her refinement of beauty, her willowy gracefulness, and a roguish winsomeness of the schoolgirl.

Since that time Miss La Manna has appeared in the Viola Dana feature, "The Slavey Student," "A Sport of Circumstances," "A Chip of the Old Block," "In His Father's Footsteps," "Only the Maid," "The Struggle Upward," and "Out of the Ruins."

Mr. Plimpton, though not long a camera man, is often spoken of as having become proficient at the art in an astonishing short length of time. He is the son of Horace G. Plimpton, who recently resigned from studio managership of the Edison studio.

Frohman Feature in Demand

The Authors' Film Company has purchased the territorial rights for the states of New York and Pennsylvania for "Just Out of College," the Frohman Amusement Corporation's recent production of George Ade's farce comedy of that name. It will release the production through this territory.

The Bert Levey Circuit of San Francisco has purchased the territorial rights to the same feature for the states of California, Arizona, Nevada, the Hawaiian Islands, Canada, and seven southern states. Mr. Sherrill, president of the company, has received a wire from the Bert Levey Circuit informing him that "Just Out of College" has been booked for the first one week run, opening October 3, at the Tivoli theater in San Francisco.

"The Shrine of Happiness," a three-reel Balboa production which is to be released through Pathe, has been sent to France to be colored. This film, featuring Miss Jackie Saunders and William Conklin, has a wealth of wonderfully beautiful exteriors, being made in Southern California, and will be a finished production when it comes back in the late fall, after being treated to the magic touch of Pathecolor.

"THE GALLOPER" PLEASES

Audience in Broadway Theater Laughs Till Its Sides Ache at Antics of Clifton Crawford, Pathe Star in Newest Feature

"The funniest comedy ever put on the screen," was the decision of the audience at a large Broadway theater last Friday when they saw "The Galloper," Pathe's new Gold Rooster Play, with Clifton Crawford in the lead, shown for the first time. For almost an hour and a half the entire house was literally "in stitches" at the antics of "The Galloper" and Copeland Schuyler, the parts taken respectively by Melville Stewart and Mr. Crawford.

This is the first appearance of Mr. Crawford in the pictures and he has already made a name for himself in this line that others have tried for years to do, but have failed. He is, in short, an ideal screen comedian, as well as one on the legitimate stage. No slapstick is necessary to put the comedy across, the grimaces and actions of the star being excruciatingly funny.

Donald Mackenzie, who produced the picture for Pathe, made a ten strike when he signed Crawford, and it is safe to say that the Pathe people will sign him up for more comedies.

TWO NEW SCENARIO WRITERS

Edwin Thanhouser Signs Virginia Tyler Hudson and Clinton H. Stagg, Well Known Script Writers, for Photoplay Staff

With the great expansion of operations at the Thanhouser studios, Edwin Thanhouser now announces additions to his staff which more than justify his reputation as a connoisseur of ability. This time he reached out into the literary field and on his thumb came two plums, in the person of Virginia Tyler Hudson and Clinton H. Stagg, both headliners in the newspaper and magazine world. Miss Hudson is from Kentucky, a graduate of Weslyan College. She served with such distinction on the Louisville Courier-Journal under Col. Watterson that that famous editor advised her to go up to the big cities, where he took special interest to see that she was properly placed. In Chicago she worked with the McCutcheons, George Ade, Eugene Field and others, whose names today mean the highest of the art. In New York and Boston her services were so signal on the great dailies that she became known as "the only newspaper woman who is a newspaper man." She studied the political field and campaigned with Roosevelt and Wilson and covered three inaugurations. Then she became press agent; in this capacity she handled the great Brady production, "Life," and also did the work on some Shubert plays. She understands photoplay technique and her first stories prove that she has been a more than casual observer at picture shows.

Virginia Tyler Hudson.

Clinton H. Stagg is one of the few reasons why Jerseyites are proud of their state. Although a native of New Jersey, he has made his mark, and those who know him well say that no handicap could stop "Clint" Stagg. He seems to have developed a remarkable aptness for mystery stories, and the millions who read Munsey's, People's, Popular, Adventure, Saturday Evening Post and numerous other periodicals, have been thrilled by his tales, written during the past five years. His unique record is the sale of a million words a year to his publishers. One of his greatest works is the serial "Thornby Colton, Blind Detective," which gave the fiction world a new type of detective. Police authorities all over the yorld have written Mr. Stagg interesting comment on his remarkable conception and the progress of his plots. Another well known work is his "Silver Sandals," which is now being published in book form in England. But yarns alone have not always been his work. He is a newspaper man of proven worth. He has played a stirring part in the political dramas of New Jersey, but only as a paid lobbyist. It is said of him that he can take either side of a controversy and with equal conscientiousness win. He has been both against and for President Wilson, the latter the more permanent, he hastens to admit.

Clinton A. Stagg.

With his unusal conception and cleverness at making situations, Mr. Stagg is expected to give filmdom some novelties. His first effort will be seen in a Than-o-play, a Thanhouser 3-act feature, but both he and Miss Hudson are so versatile that the Falstaff comedies and Thanhouser brand will also be supported by their work.

DINNER DANCE GREAT SUCCESS

Affair Given by Alexandria Hotel in Honor of Messrs. Griffith, Ince and Sennett Proves Most Enjoyable Occassion

The After-Summer Dinner Dance given as a complimentary courtesy to the people of the motion picture industry of the Los Angeles and Southern California studios at the Hotel Alexandria in Los Angeles Saturday evening, September 4, was pronounced the most notable and enjoyable affair of its kind ever given for the pleasure and entertainment of screen artists.

The event was given under the personal direction of Morgan Ross, manager of the great hostelry which has become so famous because of its social affairs. Given in honor of three notable and representative motion picture producers who have done and who continue to do much to aid in the advancing progress of Los Angeles as the film metropolis of the world: David W. Griffith, head of the Griffith-Reliance-Majestic studios and producer of "The Birth of a Nation"; Thomas H. Ince, founder of Inceville and director-general of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, a man who has secured more notable legitimate stars for screen features than any other leader, and Mack Sennett, comedy producer with a world-wide reputation, director-general of the famed Keystone comedies—all of whom are now vice-presidents and directors in the newly organized $5,000,000 Triangle Film Corporation of Los Angeles and New York, and heads of the large studios which they manage and direct.

The idea of the after-summer dance was the conception of "Captain Jack" Poland, Pacific Coast representative of Motography, and editor of Static Flashes, the smallest and yet the only exclusive motion picture newspaper in the world.

When invitations in the name of the Hotel Alexandria management were mailed out to moving picture magnates, official heads, stars, directors and players of note, inviting them to come and participate in an elaborate affair honoring three princes of the industry, the acceptances came in promptly.

Never before has there gathered anywhere in the west such a representative and cultured number of prominent guests most of whom are personally interested in the advancement and development of the screen industry.

Beautiful maids and matrons richly gowned held court in the grand ball room and at private tables in the great hotel dining room. Stars of the stage who have become just as famous in screen life were seen on every hand. Others who have become equally as notable and high salaried in motion pictures, yet who never appeared on the legitimate stage, were also present.

Among the famous men and women present were: David W. Griffith and Miss Lillian Gish; Thomas H. Ince and Mrs. Ince; Mack Sennett and Mabel Normand; DeWolf Hopper, Dustin Farnum, Mr. and Mrs. Phillips Smalley (Lois Weber); Maclyn Arbuckle and Mrs. Arbuckle; Miss Kathryne Arbuckle and Andrew Arbuckle; Mabel Taliaferro and party; Rosalind Coglan. H. P. Caulfield and party; Henry McRae and Mrs. McRae; Mr. and Mrs. Ford Sterling; "Capt. Jack" Poland and Mrs. Poland, Mrs. Harry Hellyar; Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Cudahy and party; Count Waldemar Doubeck, Owen Moore, J. C. Epping, Frank Hayes and party, Gertrude Horton and party, George Fawcett, Count Rabanoff and Madame Anna Pavlowa; Allan Dwan and Mrs. Dwan (Pauline Bush); Henry Woodruff, R. E. Burbank and Mrs. Burbank; Wallace MacDonald, Harry Edwards and Mrs. Edwards (Louise Glaum); Ed Dillon and party, John Dillon and party; Frank Keenan, Willard Mack and Mrs. Mack (Marjorie Rambeau); E. W. Hewston and Mrs. Hewston; Kenneth A. O'Hara and Miss Elizabeth Burbridge; Raymond B. West; M. H. Thompson, Ch. Swickard, W. S. Hart; Courtenay Foote, Miss Edna Purviance, Mr. and Mrs. Bradner Lee, Wm. Morris and Mr. Hallward; F. E. Woods and party, Miss Dorothy Gish, Bennie Zeidman, Jean Emerson and party; Robt. Harron, Alf Wright and party, Herbert Standing and party; Fred Mace and party, Hampton Del Ruth and party, Harry Williams and Mrs. Williams, Vincent Bryan and Mrs. Bryan, Jean Havez and Mrs. Havez, Harry Wulze, Frederick Palmer and Chuck Reisner; William Rock, Sidney Grant, Miss Frances White, H. S. Keenan and party; George Seigman and party; H. F. McGarvin; Miss Schmidt, Mr. Philmore and party; J. P. Lessing and party; L. H. Friedlander and party; Miss Filbert and party; Mrs. Horton and party; Wadsworth Harris and party; Carl Stockdale, "Hank" Mann, Thos. W. Prior, Frank Campeau, J. Nurnberger, and many others who came with special parties.

Celebrates Ninth Anniversary

Richard Wangemann, who plays character parts in Lubin photoplays, is celebrating the ninth anniversary of his advent with Lubin of Philadelphia. Mr. Wangemann was born abroad, and began his stage career shortly after receiving an honorable discharge from the German army. During his career on the speaking stage Mr. Wangemann played in various cities in Switzerland, Austria, Russia, Italy and even in Northern Africa.

Richard Wangemann.

In 1888 he was stage director and manager of the principal theater in Bremen and subsequently played with great success in various German and Austrian cities. Then he came to Cincinnati to the German Opera House, where he remained three years, going subsequently to Cleveland. Then he came to the German theater in Philadelphia, from which he was graduated to the photoplays at Lubin's.

Mr. Wangemann, who is a linguist of considerable ability, is known as the "man of many faces" because if his wonderful facility in the art of making up. He is a popular favorite in the Lubin studios because of his gentle manner and the sincerity of his friendship.

Pathe Authorizes New Series

George Brackett Seitz, adapter of the "Exploits of Elaine," "The Galloper," and many other of Pathe's most successful releases, has been commissioned by the firm to write a series of photoplays under the general title of "Who's Guilty?" Following somewhat the same plan as Pathe's very successful series "Who Pays?" the stories will be serious studies of life as it is, and each will end with the query, "Who is guilty for this social crime?" In many incidents it will be found that we, the state, are responsible for the mistake of an erring boy or girl. Mr. Seitz has just completed the first of the series which is entitled "Grist of the Mill."

Motion Picture Board of Trade Formed

WILL COMBAT CENSORSHIP

AFTER keen competition among themselves for more than ten years, the men who entertain the public with their motion pictures got together Thursday, September 9, at the Hotel McAlpin in New York City and decided to bury the hatchet by the organization of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America. Among the original signers of the charter of this industry, which during the last year turned over $370,000,000, the sum received at the various ticket windows throughout the entire country, were the Metro Pictures Corporation, the Vitagraph Company, the V. L. S. E. (an organization which includes the Vitagraph, Lubin, Selig and Essanay companies), the Mutual Film Corporation, the Fox Film Corporation, and representatives of the manufacturing accessories, selling exchanges and trade journal branches of the industry. The charter list will be closed on September 16 and is to be forwarded to Albany then for incorporation.

Plans for the organization have been on foot for nearly a year because of the necessity of such a body in the motion picture business to act as a unit in legislative matters and in the holding of expositions. The committee which drew up the working plans consisted of Arthur James of the Metro Pictures Corporation; Walter W. Irwin of V. L. S. E.; John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation; S. M. Field, general counsel for the same company; W. R. Sheehan of the Fox Film Corporation; J. W. Binder of the National Board of Censorship; L. J. Selznik, president of the World Film; J. Stuart Blackton, president of the Vitagraph Company; William A. Johnston, editor Motion Picture News; W. S. Bush of the Moving Picture World; S. L. Rothapfel; Carl H. Pierce of the Morosco Company; Nicholas Power, George K. Spoor of the Essanay Company, Ferdinand W. Singhi of Lubin Company, and others representing the big lithographers and supply houses.

"The purposes of this new organization are threefold," said Arthur James of the Metro Corporation, at the conclusion of the initial meeting. "First, to fight hostile legislation, secure the repeal of unfair laws, carry controversies with censor boards to the courts and to defeat candidates for public office who favor unfair censorship. Under this same head comes also the procuring of favorable legislation and constitutional amendments which will give the industry greater freedom for development and growth. Next in line comes the subject of publicity in eleven states whose legislatures will be in session the coming months from November to March. Publicity campaigns in behalf of freedom of the industry will be conducted simultaneously in New York, New Jersey, Rhode Island, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, Georgia, South Carolina, Virginia and Massachusetts. The third purpose of the board of trade is commercial, and the plans include the holding of expositions, the securing of fair treatment in the transporting of film by railroads, the recasting of insurance and fire laws and the conducting of a department of credit.

"The membership is divided into six classes, with annual dues ranging from one dollar to five hundred dollars. The membership classes include manufacturers, dealers in supplies and equipment, selling exchanges, publishers, exhibitors and miscellaneous. The latter class includes motion picture directors, scenario writers, actors, operators and the employ-

Information Concerning Motion Picture Board of Trade of America

The six classes of membership, initiation fees and annual dues for each are as follows:

Class.	Initiation Fee.	Annual Dues.
1. Manufacturer's Membership, including therein all those engaged in the manufacture of films and supplies and equipment for said industry, including importers and exporters	$100.00	$500.00
2. Those engaged in dealing in supplies and equipment relating to said industry	100.00	300.00
3. Those engaged in operating selling exchanges of films used in said industry	10.00	50.00
4. Publishers' Membership, including those engaged in the publishing information and data relating to said industry, and periodicals devoted thereto	25.00	25.00
5. Exhibitors of motion pictures, including therein all classes of such exhibitors and irrespective of whether said exhibitors exhibit for profit or for educational or other approved purposes.
Exhibitor owning theater seating not more than 500	5.00	5.00
Exhibitor owning theater seating not more than 800	5.00	10.00
Exhibitor owning theater seating not more than 1,000	5.00	15.00
Exhibitor owning theater seating not more than 1,400	5.00	25.00
Exhibitor owning theater seating not less than 1,400	5.00	50.00
6. Miscellaneous. This class of membership shall include and consist of directors of motion picture production, scenario writers, actors, operators and the employes of each and every branch of the said industry	2.00	1.00

Directors

There will be ten directors, two chosen by and from each of the classes of membership, except the publishers' class, which is not represented on the board.

Each theater for which an initiation fee and annual dues are paid entitles the owner or representative of that theater to one vote for the two directors of his class.

Each exchange paying initiation fees and annual dues is entitled to one vote for the two directors of its class.

Liability of Members

The liability of members of the board is specifically limited by the by-laws to the amount of initiation fee and annual dues.

Annual Meetings

The annual meeting will be held on the second Monday in January of each year. Directors elected at the organization meeting serve until the next annual meeting.

ees of all branches of the industry." Mr. James then said this is the first successful attempt to bring together all branches of the industry for their common good. "Motion picture makers," he said, "have been busy making money that they have not had time to complete certain necessary features of the organization of their industry as a whole.

"As a result, all kinds of legislation has got on the statute books and became operative, before those vitally affected were aware of it. The trouble has been to secure the co-operation of the responsible element of the industry and until this present movement crystallized into the organizing of a Board of Trade, national in scope, the greatest need of the industry has gone unsatisfied."

Just as Motography goes to press the following telegram arrives from J. W. Binder:

New York, September 15, 1915.—Motography, Monadnock Bldg., Chicago.

The Motion Picture Board of Trade of America, Inc., a membership corporation under the laws of New York, will be organized at a meeting of the charter members, embracing some of the most prominent men in the industry at the McAlpin Hotel, tomorrow, Thursday afternoon.

The objects are to foster trade and promote business interests, reform trade abuses, fight hostile legislation, diffuse information regarding standing and character of those in the industry to members, to settle differences between members and promote a more enlarged and friendly intercourse between them and to perform all such acts as tend to promote the welfare of the industry at large. The headquarters will be at 18 East Forty-first Street, New York. Commodore J. Stuart Blackton has the backing of the organization committee, of which J. W. Binder is chairman, for the presidency. There will be five vice-presidents, a secretary and treasurer. J. W. BINDER.

"BUSY IZZY" MUTUAL STAR

Gaumont Company Signs George Sidney, World Renowned Comedian for Forthcoming Screen Comedy of Sort That Made Him Famous

There isn't anybody, from a newsboy up, in any town boasting more than a thousand inhabitants west of Pittsburgh, who doesn't know George Sidney, and who hasn't known him for a good many years.

George Sidney created the famous role of "Busy Izzy" in the comedy by that name, which has visited every town in the West. In fact, George Sidney is just about the creator of the Jewish comedian type on the stage. With "Busy Izzy" and his funny pranks, the comedian established the popularity of the Jewish comedian in all of the cities of the United States, and since the day that "Busy Izzy" first made his appearance, the "Busy Izzies" of comedy, burlesque and vaudeville stage have fairly out-Charley Chaplined Charley Chaplin.

George Sidney in his famous role has just completed a motion picture version of "Busy Izzy" for the Gaumont Company, which will be released through the Mutual Program. This picture will serve not only to introduce Sidney to the Mutual screen, but will introduce a brand new form of picture from the ever-growing studio of the enterprising Gaumont Company. It will be the first comedy of a series of "All Star" comedies in two reels which it is the purpose of the company to release.

THE BUCK PARVIN STORIES

Charles Van Loan's Famous Character to Appear on Screen Next Week with Art Acord Playing It —Anna Little Also to Be Featured

In staging the Buck Parvin stories by Charles E. Van Loan, President Samuel S. Hutchinson of the American Film Manufacturing Company will not only afford the moving picture public opportunity to see this famous writer's work picturized, but will also present for the edification of the fans the author's six foot inspiration—this inspiration being one Art Acord, the most famous cowboy actor on the screen today. Art (he would scorn the designation "Mr.") was famous before motion pictures claimed him for their own, having accomplished everything in the line of outdoor daring that horse and rope can suggest.

Art Acord.

It was while he was "roping" prizes at a Wild West and Cowboy Sports Contest that he came upon the horizon of Mr. Van Loan, whose imagination immediately seized the giant-built, honey-smile westerner as a character for a series of stories. That the author's phrases gave to his work a most substantial characterization of a most unusual type of man, is evidenced by their success in the Saturday Evening Post, which brought them out.

It was the tremendous enthusiasm with which the publication of the Buck Parvin stories was received that determined Mr. Hutchinson to put them into pictures. At the time he was in New York, Mr. Van Loan was up in the Northwest, but a meeting was finally arranged in Los Angeles, when the film rights passed into producing hands.

Mr. Hutchinson saw in Mr. Van Loan's work definite character-drawing that bespoke for picturization a naturalness that would be all-convincing, and, at the same time, retain in an emphatic way the humor that characterizes the writer. In the Buck Parvin series, Mr. Van Loan has woven well his imaginative threads, for there is fun galore, thrills a plenty and just enough of the sentimental to please everyone.

Miss Anna Little, than whom there is none better known in western pictures, will give to the series the graceful charm and daring that has placed her in a niche all her own, in a picture way. With these stars there will be in important roles E. Forrest Taylor and Lawrence Payton, actors of established experience, ability and popularity, and the director's hat rests upon the head of a typical son of the West—William Bertram. Director Bertram knows the West, for he has felt her knocks when the law of the land was to take care of yourself. He will bring to direction of these pictures a thorough knowledge of western things.

STARS ADDED TO HORSLEY CO.

Myrtle Stedman, Leona Hutton and Margaret Gibson Are Signed to Long Term Contracts—Will Appear in New Horsley Brands

David Horsley announces the engagement this week, for long periods of time, of the distinguished photoplay stars Myrtle Stedman, Margaret Gibson and Leona Hutton to appear in the different length productions which Mr. Horsley is now making for release on the Mutual program.

The engagement of these prominent artists, in addition to George Ovey, featured in Cub comedies; Captain Jack Bonavita, appearing with the Bostock animals, in the Centaur features; and Crane Wilbur, starred in the three-reel features, adds much to Mr. Horsley's array of stars, and is indicative of the playing strength to the Horsley pictures.

Miss Myrtle Stedman is a star of stellar magnitude and comes to Mr. Horsley's company after acquiring an enviable reputation by her work in many important productions. She is an unusually gifted actress with a wide range of expression. Fair, with large blue eyes, a wealth of golden hair, and exceptionally beautiful of features, she is a most excellent photographic subject.

The Selig Polyscope Company first claimed her for pictures. She remained with this company for four years, working as leading woman under the direction of Otis Turner. She then was engaged by Bosworth, Inc., and appeared in that company's features and also in those produced by Bosworth in association with Oliver Morosco.

Miss Leona Hutton, whose services Mr. Horsley has also acquired, comes from the New York Motion Picture Company, where for three years she divided her time, appearing in the Broncho, Domino and Kay-Bee releases made by that concern. In practically all of these she was cast for the leading roles, playing in many instances opposite Walter Edwards. Her work is recognized as being of the highest order and has made her a host of admirers. By a coincidence Miss Hutton will be under the direction of Jay Hunt who was her director with the N. Y. M. P. and who is now also with Mr. Horsley.

Like Miss Hutton, Margaret Gibson is a former New York Motion Picture Company player. Aside from her well known ability as an actress Miss Gibson is noted for her striking beauty. Miss Gibson began her motion picture career with the Thanhouser Company, later going to the Reliance studios on the coast as leading woman with the stock company. Following this she was engaged by the New York Motion Picture Company.

Miss Hutton and Miss Gibson will be prominent in the support of Crane Wilbur in Mr. Horsley's three-reel feature productions, another of Mr. Horsley's new brands, the first of which, "The Protest," will be released on September 29, in the regular service of the Mutual program.

Announcement of the name of the brand in which Miss Stedman will appear, together with the release date of the first picture and of the people in the cast supporting her, will be made later.

Secured Grand Prix Films

William Weisfeld, vice-president and general manager of the E. & G. Films Service, 110 West Fortieth street, New York City, has concluded a contract with the Associated Film Sales Corporation by which the E. & G. Film Service obtains the right to handle the Associated Grand Prix features in Greater New York, and in Northern New Jersey. The Grand Prix Photoplays are special features, dramas of five and six reels.

D. W. Griffith's gigantic spectacle "The Birth of a Nation," passed its twenty-eighth week in the Liberty theater, New York, Saturday night. On Tuesday night the five hundredth performance in New York was given. This is one of the biggest records of recent years.

SIEGMUND LUBIN HONORED

Famous Philadelphia Manufacturer of Film Has Day at San Diego Fair Set Aside in His Behalf and Entertainment Arranged

The San Diego Exposition has set aside Saturday, September 25, as Lubin Day, in honor of Siegmund Lubin, head of the great Lubin Manufacturing Company, pioneer producer of photoplays. Mr. Lubin is the only man in his line of industry to be thus signally honored. Not only the city of San Diego and its officials, but the governor of the state will be there to welcome him and to extend the freedom of the city. Mr. Lubin will leave Philadelphia on Wednesday, September 15, and will arrive in San Diego on Friday, September 24. The same evening the new Lubin studio at Coronado will be officially opened and dedicated by the mayor of San Diego and the city officials. The next day, Saturday, Mr. Lubin will be escorted to the exposition by President Davidson and the members of his staff. Captain Rifenberick, military aid to the president of the exposition, will be Mr. Lubin's escort during his stay in San Diego. On Mr. Lubin's arrival at the exposition grounds there will be a military parade in his honor and he will review the troops. Then will come a luncheon and Mr. Lubin will be escorted through the exposition grounds. Later in the afternoon the famous manufacturer will be the guest of honor at a dinner given by the exposition officials. Mr. Lubin, although born in Berlin, Germany, is essentially a Philadelphian, having lived in the city of brotherly love more than forty years. He arrived in that city with little money but plenty of courage and at once started a small optician store on Eighth street, which still bears his name.

Siegmund Lubin.

More than twenty years ago he began to experiment with animated photography and soon Mr. Lubin's pictures became known throughout the length and breadth of the civilized world. Not only did he make pictures, but he invented cameras and projecting machines and improvements to most of those invented by others.

Now his various plants constitute a total of the greatest motion picture factories in the world. Besides the great plant and studios at Twentieth street and Indiana avenue, Philadelphia, the company bearing Mr. Lubin's name has studios at Sixteenth street and Glenwood avenue, a 500-acre estate at Betzwood, Pa., and studios at Jacksonville Florida, Phoenix, Arizona, Atlantic City, New Jersey, Coronado, California, Los Angeles, and Newport, Rhode Island. Eleven directors and a host of assistant directors and camera men and more than 200 actors and actresses work incessantly. They produce at least two acts of photoplay a day, as well as three to five feature films a month—claimed to be the largest amount of film produced in a similar plant by any producer in the world.

LAS VEGAS LANDS ANOTHER

Big Biblical Motion Picture Company Locates in New Mexico City as Direct Result of Advertising Campaign in Trade Journals.

Some time ago Las Vegas, New Mexico, through a unique advertising campaign in a number of moving picture journals succeeded in having the Selig Polyscope company send one of its companies to the New Mexico city.

Now comes the news of the National Bible Play Society, a million dollar corporation, selecting Las Vegas as its headquarters and the taking over by this society of a 1,000 acre tract of land known as the Las Vegas Hot Springs. The deal was brought about directly through the advertising campaign carried on by the Las Vegas Commercial Club in MOTOGRAPHY and other motion picture trade journals. The National Bible Play Society, backed by Kansas City and Texas capitalists, will produce and release biblical motion pictures, utilizing the Palestine-like topography of Las Vegas for its backgrounds. Each Bible story will be supervised and censored by an inter-denominational board of ministers who will pass on its chronological and historical correctness. The circulation of the film will be chiefly among churches, Y. M. C. A.'s and similar organizations. Also the society will produce bi-enially, a sacred play on the order of Oberammergau. Unlike the German Passion Play, however, "Ecce Homo" (Behold the Man) will require 14 days in showing and will cover the story of Christ from His birth to His Ascension. The society will operate the famous Hot Springs resort as a vacation spot particularly for church people. Chautauquas, conventions and summer encampments will enliven the stay of the visitors. A most unusual and unique part of the society's plans is that 40 per cent of its net profits will go to charity.

ADDITIONS TO MOROSCO STUDIO

Increased Activity Necessitates Increase of Floor Area to More Than 120,000 Square Feet and More Dressing Room

The steady expansion in the facilities of the Oliver Morosco moving picture studio still continues because of the growing extent of the productions. The big Council street enclosure for the outdoor stages has been extended through to First street, giving a depth of a full block and increasing the area to over 120,000 square feet. An extension of the big concrete wing forming the north wall of the glass-roofed stage is expected to be under way shortly, and this will provide the additional quarters for directors' offices and dressing rooms now beginning to be needed. When the studio was built the architects took pains to anticipate what, at the time, was thought to be any possible growth for the next ten years, but the activity has unexpectedly increased by such leaps and bounds that now at the beginning of the second year there is already an imperative cry for more room. The studio is now being occupied in the production of "The Yankee Girl," starring Blanche Ring in her original role.

Kleine players returned last week from Lake Saranac where the finishing touches were added to "The Sentimental Lady."

EQUITABLE'S FIRST QUARTER

Many Players of Stellar Rank to Appear in Adaptation of Famous Plays and Novels— Six Directors Busy

The first quarter of the new and active Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation begins September 20, with the release of its first production, "Trilby," and ends the latter part of December with the presentation of Cyril Scott in one of his former stage successes which is now in the course of construction at the Triumph film studio, a subsidiary of the Equitable.

During the twelve weeks that constitute a quarter with Equitable, twelve players of stellar calibre will be seen in twelve noted works, either adapted from stage productions or popular fiction works.

Following "Trilby," which will be seen September 20, Helen Ware will be offered in her most recent stage success, "The Price," which was supplied by George Broadhurst, author of "Bought and Paid For," "The Man of the Hour," and other great dramas. Miss Ware was in active appearance before the camera ten weeks at Triumph's studio and the production when finally seen will be elaborate and quite up to the Equitable standard.

Julius Steger in his own great and unique romance, "The Master of the House," in which he appeared for a long season at the Maxine Elliott theater and on tour, will follow "The Price." "The Master of the House" is undoubtedly one of the greatest stories yet transferred to the screen. In the fourth Equitable release, Thomas A. Wise, beloved of all, will make his screen debut in Paul Armstrong's great race track story, "Blue Grass," directed by Thomas Seay and staged in the exact locale of the original script. Mr. Wise has the support of an all star cast in "Blue Grass."

Kathryn Osterman, last seen in a big World Film production, will see the light of screen day with Equitable in "The Bludgeon," another powerful story from the pen of Paul Armstrong.

Following Miss Osterman and in an entirely different type of play, will come the irrepressible Cyril Scott, whose fame took a great leap by reason of his work in "The Lottery Man." Mr. Scott is now at work in a play, the title of which has not been made public, but which will be in absolute keeping with his standing as a stellar player.

Katherine Kaelred will make her first appearance on any screen in a big, serious play of moment, when she is seen, following Cyril Scott. A play in which Miss Kaelred appeared in the spoken drama is being secured for her and work will begin on it at once under the direction of Webster Cullison at the Fifty-second street Equitable studio. Miss Kaelred will have the support of several Broadway luminaries.

Charles Cherry, he of the grandiose poise and elegant manner, whose work for Charles Frohman made "Seven Sisters" the hit it was, will be seen November 7 in a famous novel, now one of the best sellers.

Florence Reed, last seen with Famous Players and Metro in two big plays, will be seen on the Equitable program about November 30 in "The Cowardly Way," which is now in the last stages under the direction of Cullison.

Lily Cahill and Henry Kolker will, in all probability, appear jointly in one of the forthcoming Equitable plays. A suitable vehicle is being sought now and will feature the program early in December.

Margarita Fischer, the American Beauty star, now a permanent Equitable player, will be seen under the direction of her former director, Harry Pollard. General Manager Felix F. Feist has been dickering with Harriet Ford for the screen rights to her plays, including "Polygamy," "The Argyle Case," "A Strange Woman," and others, and if he is successful, Miss Fischer will be seen in "Polygamy." In the event of Equitable securing "Polygamy," it has been promised the support and co-operation of the Mormon Church heads and the picture will be staged in Salt Lake City.

Robert Edeson, last seen in feature work in "Where the Trail Divides" for Lasky, will be seen in a visualization of a book, which, according to those who know, should make a tremendous screen subject. "The City of Numbered Days" is the book selected by Mr. Edeson.

Lenore Ulrich is now at work at Triumph in "The Better Woman," while Katharine Kaelred will be seen about December 15 in William J. Locke's "Idols."

William Courtleigh, George Soule Spencer, Clara Whipple and other noted stars will feature Equitable releases during the following quarter, beginning January 1, 1915.

Equitable now has six noted directors. Webster Cullison, John Ince, Joseph Golden and Charles Seay are located at Flushing, while Harry Pollard and Marshall Farnum will be in control of the Fifty-second street studios.

MASTERS, NEW PUBLICITY CHIEF

Well-Known Newspaper Man and Former Advertising Promoter With Nation's Largest Concerns Now With V. L. S. E.

A change in its publicity department is announced by V. L. S. E. Inc. Charles J. Giegerich, who organized the department and has been with the company since its opening last April, has severed his connection with V. L. S. E., being succeeded by E. Lanning Masters, who assumes the position of director of advertising and publicity.

Mr. Masters brings to the "Big Four" a well-rounded newspaper experience, plus an extensive advertising and merchandising training. A graduate from the editorial rooms of some of the country's most representative papers, including the Philadelphia Evening Telegraph, Los Angeles Examiner, New York World, and others, Mr. Masters entered the advertising field several years ago as promotion manager for the New York Times. His work there attracted the attention of R. H. Macy & Company, and he was made advertising manager of that establishment. Later he joined the Blackman-Rose Company, one of the most highly regarded advertising agencies in the field, handling the advertising of such firms as Likly Luggage, Vacuum Oil Co., Theodore B. Star Inc., Packers' Tar Soap, Force, Hoggson Bros., Quaker Lace Co., Royal Rochester Tableware, Lowneys, etc.

For the past two years Mr. Masters has been promotion manager of the International Magazine Co., publisher of Hearst's Magazine, Cosmopolitan, Good Housekeeping and Harper's Bazar. The service ideas instituted there, and the human interest element of the promotion material issued by that organization elicited for

Mr. Masters' work widespread recognition among the big publicities of the country.

His affiliation with the V. L. S. E. is in line with that organization's efforts to render the exhibitor maximum co-operation in every phase of his activities, and it may be expected that Mr. Masters will focus his principal efforts on aiding theater owners to do better advertising and get better publicity for the productions they show.

Certain it is that in the matter of service, the new advertising and publicity director and the company with which he has associated himself, would seem to be in hearty accord, and it may be assumed that his entrance into the moving-picture field will be followed by several interesting innovations in photoplay publicity methods.

Real Mirage in "The Red Mirage"

One of the most elaborate expeditions into the great American desert ever undertaken is that which is headed by Lou Tellegen and some of the artistic staff of the Lasky Feature Play Company into Imperial Valley.

Lou Tellegen.

Lou Tellegen, who will make his debut as a Paramount star in the Lasky production "The Explorer" has started on his second photoplay, "The Red Mirage," some of the scenes of which are supposed to be laid in the Sahara desert. George H. Melford is the director immediately in charge of "The Red Mirage" and ordered his caravan from the Lasky studios to march this week. The trip to the edge of Imperial Valley was made by train and automobiles, the horses, donkeys and three camels having gone on before. The "location" was some miles beyond civilization and the caravan, with Melford and Lou Tellegen at the head, made a forced march all one night to reach the spot where the scenes are to be made. Imperial Valley is not far from the little town of Indio and the valley is about 360 feet below sea-level. Mid-August found the temperature well into three figures and most of the work of photography was done in the early morning hours before the hot summer sun drove the star and the company under shade for the day.

Mirages are frequent in Imperial Valley and photographs of several have been taken. The staff is eager to return to the studio developing rooms to see the results. Theodore Roberts, James Neill, Miss Dorothy Davenport and Tom Forman are among the players in support of Lou Tellegen in "The Red Mirage."

Director Charles J. Brabin with Henry B. Walthall, Essanay leading man, and a company of players, is now in New York taking scenes for "The Raven," a six-act photoplay woven about the poem of that title by Edgar Allen Poe. This photoplay will be Essanay's November release on the V. L. S. E. program.

HORSLEY STUDIO BUSY

Three Brands Now Being Produced for Mutual Program and Master-Picture is Still to Be Added Making Four Brands in All

With the release of "The Protest" on September 29, through the Mutual, David Horsley introduces his new brand of three-reel features and brings into the Mutual his third brand since he became allied with that distributing organization less than two months ago.

Though to bring three new brands into the Mutual, or any other program for that matter, within such a short space of time is probably a record, it does not cover the extent of Mr. Horsley's productions. Later on, within the next few weeks, he will have a fourth release, this to be four-reel Master-Pictures, in which prominent Broadway stars will be featured.

The brands now being produced are the Cub Comedy, the Centaur Features, and the three-reelers, for which no name has so far been selected. All three releases are being made at Mr. Horsley's studios in Los Angeles, which represents the proverbial bee hive of activity.

The Cub comedy was the first Horsley brand to make its debut on the Mutual program. George Ovey, who has been heralded as the funniest man in America, is featured in these one-reel comics, one of which is released every Friday.

Mr. Horsley's second brand to be brought into the Mutual is the Centaur features, which are two-reel subjects, featuring the Bostock animals and Captain Jack Bonavita. While the opinion of exhibitors and the public is not yet to be had on these subjects, the first release, "The Rajah's Sacrifice," being scheduled for September 16, those who have seen the picture at private showings and are competent to judge, agree that it lives up to Mr. Horsley's promise to present in the Centaur features animal pictures in an advanced form.

For his three-reel features, of which "The Protest" is the first, Mr. Horsley has gathered a company headed by the popular photoplay star, Crane Wilbur, who won success by his work in "The Perils of Pauline," and other important productions. His supporting company includes many well known players. For director he has secured Jay Hunt, for three years with Thomas Ince, and previously with Vitagraph. A Crane Wilbur picture in three reels will be released every four weeks by Mr. Horsley in the regular service of the Mutual.

Preparations are now under way for the production of the first Horsley Mutual Master-Picture, which will be staged at Mr. Horsley's studio in Bayonne, N. J Announcement of the name of the star and of the supporting people and the director with this organization will be made shortly.

"Capital Punishment" Pleases

Knickerbocker Star Features are in receipt of a letter from R. B. Wilby, manager of the Strand Amusement Company of Montgomery, Alabama, which contains the highest praise for the release, "Capital Punishment." "You have the right idea for three-reelers," writes Wilby. "Certain it is that your pictures are overdrawing very decidedly any other three-reel productions exhibited by us."

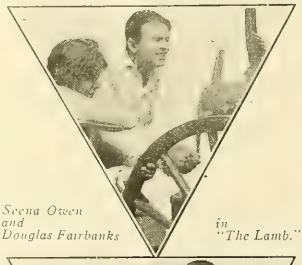
Triangle Bill Changed

SECOND KEYSTONE COMEDY SCHEDULED

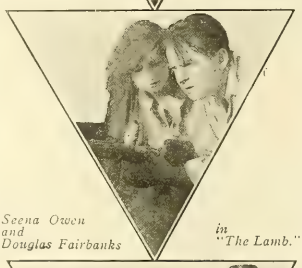
With Ince and Griffith Features

Harry Booker in "A Game Old Knight."



DIRECTORS of the Triangle Film Corporation, which has been making great strides in its giant organization for exploiting the dramas of the Griffith, Inceville and Keystone studios, met in New York, Friday, September 10, and definitely decided on Thursday evening, September 23, as the date of opening the first of the model theaters, the Knickerbocker in New York city. The openings at the Studebaker, Chicago, and the Chestnut Street Opera House in Philadelphia, will probably be simultaneous a week later, that is, Thursday evening, September 30. William Furst reported to the directors that he had brought back the orchestral score of two of the plays, namely, "The Iron Strain" and "The Lamb." The rest of the music has been shipped and was due to reach New York Monday, September 13.

On account of the contracts that the corporation is making with exhibitors throughout the country, it has been decided to present four plays the first week as well as in the succeeding weeks. That was the original plan, but the desire of Messrs. Sennett and Hitchcock to run "My Valet" as a four-reeler allowed only three plays. Now the original plan has been resorted to; "My Valet," Raymond Hitchcock's medium, will be somewhat abbreviated, and a second Keystone will be added, namely, Harry Booker in the costume burlesque, "A Game Old Knight." This makes the first entertainment consist of Dustin Farnum in "The Iron Strain," Douglas Fairbanks in "The Lamb," Raymond Hitchcock in "My Valet," and Harry Booker in "A Game Old Knight." The first "week," by the way, in the four model theaters will last ten days, and the second week will start Sunday matinee, October 3.



Harry Booker's elevation to the select company of Hitchcock, Farnum, Fairbanks, Sennett, Fred Mace and Mabel Normand in the first star combination of the Triangle has been earned by a long and successful career on the legitimate stage, both abroad and in America.

Dicky Dials, Michael Funey, Sandy McFarson, Uncle Cesaire, Hobbs and leading comedy roles in "Rosemary," "Nathan Hale," "My Partner," "A Bunch of Keys," "Sapho," "The Harvest Moon" and other well-known plays, have found him under the direction of Charles Frohman, William A. Brady, Jacob Litt and the prominent managers on the other side of the Atlantic.

Successful English seasons inspired in him the vaudeville idea, and he has been a favorite in the London music halls. These engagements led to tours of the leading circuits of Great Britain, France, Spain, Germany, Austria, Russia, Italy and Holland. In America he has been a headliner on the Keith and Orpheum time. It was while he was playing an engagement in Los Angeles that he attracted the attention of Mack Sennett. His work in the burlesque costume piece, "A Game Old Knight," resulted in the addition of that Keystone feature to the initial Triangle star combination, which will be shown at the Knickerbocker theater, New York, on Thursday evening, September 23, and a week later at the Studebaker in Chicago and the Chestnut Street Opera House, Philadelphia.

William Furst, the well-known musical director and composer, began rehearsals Monday at the Knickerbocker theater, of the symphony orchestra which will be a feature of all the Triangle star combinations to be shown at that famous old house. He returned from the California studios of Griffith, Ince and Sennett a few days before with the orchestrations of the incidental music for the Fairbanks adventure story, "The Lamb," and the Ince release, Dustin Farnum's "The Iron Strain," a stirring play of Alaska.

The famous composer guarded his sharps and flats as if they had been so much gold. He gave the porter a large tip to keep the orchestrations under lock and key during the journey across the country. Frequently he repaired to the locker to see that the sable guardian had not permitted the priceless possession to slip away.

"The bundle was heavy," remarked Mr. Furst as he dropped it in the office of the Triangle Film Corporation in New York, "but the music is light. I can guarantee that the audiences at the Knickerbocker, Studebaker and Chestnut Street Opera House won't go to sleep. The writing of the music for motion pictures is now in its infancy. The music should be treated symphonically as in 'The Birth of a Nation.' Composers should be thankful to Joseph Carl Breil for the pioneer work he did in this Griffith production. I hope to have thematic music for all the Triangle plays, but it certainly is a large order, as more than one hundred will be produced in the course of a season."

Speaking of the Griffith studio, Mr. Furst said he would like nothing better than to remain there permanently and write while Griffith was directing.

"When I saw him," the composer went on, "I said, 'Mr. Griffith, if I had a thousand hats on all at once, I would take them off to you for your Civil War spectacle.' Having seen personally all the leaders of both sides who appear in 'The Birth of a Nation,' I was able to appreciate the wonderful work the director had done in obtaining the skillful portrayals and exact makeups shown in the production."

Vitagraph's Publicity Helps

Exhibitors the country over are being mailed by the Vitagraph Company a special lot of publicity matter and a lobby display of a unique sort all pertaining to the Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature, entitled "Mortmain," in which Robert Edeson is featured.

The envelope containing the publicity, besides bearing a beautiful lobby display which can be readily used in the ordinary lobby frames, holds a sheet containing hints for newspaper advertising of the "Mortmain" picture and some excellent displays of mats that can be purchased at a minimum cost and that will add still further distinction to the newspaper advertisement. The press sheet devoted to the story of the film and containing suggestions for newspaper reading notices announcing the coming of the big feature to the local theater, will all serve to aid the exhibitor in arousing enthusiasm over the picture. The Vitagraph publicity department is indeed to be congratulated upon the nifty publicity it has provided and exhibitors who fail to make use of it will surely be shortsighted.

"Sunshine and Tempest" Rialto Release

"Sunshine and Tempest" will be the title of a three-reel Rialto star feature picture which will be the important Mutual release of October 6. In this play, full of the clouds and smiles of Tennessee skies, written by Rev. Clarence J. Harris, will be featured "Sunshine and Tempest," the two dearly loved little actresses who, since they were children together in the sunny Southland, have been associated together on the stage.

To New Yorkers, their work in the "Follies," and the show at the Winter Garden, was enough to win them unending popularity. Last season "Sunshine" appeared with Raymond Hitchcock in "The Beauty Shop," while vivacious little "Tempest" went on tour as a most surprisingly attractive little boy in the successful vaudeville sketch, "One of the Boys."

As motion picture players, the charming young actresses are great successes. Their clear cut beauty, their alertness, and their ready intelligence gives them more than the average screen value. In the great Rialto star feature picture in which they will appear in the Mutual program, the girls have not only the advantages of their youth and beauty and intelligence to make them unusually successful. They have both been cast for roles, and in setting with which they are both familiar. Although they do not live in Tennessee, their early life in Kentucky served them the same purpose, and they interpret the life of the southern backwoods, as only those who have lived near it could.

MUTUAL RECOVERS STOLEN FILM

Arrest of Several Ex-Mutual Employes Results in Disclosing that Thousands of Feet of Positive Film Were Disappearing

A campaign begun by motion-picture distributors against a new type of theft, a sort of by-product of the film industry, led to the arrest last week in New York of Jacob Schonbrun, charged with having stolen 149,000 feet of film from the vaults in the Newark office of the Mutual Film Corporation. Schonbrun, who was dismissed two weeks ago as manager of the Newark offices, was arrested at his home, 8796 Bay Thirty-third street, Brooklyn, by Detective Edward Dwyer of Brooklyn and Detective Patrick Ryan of Newark after a search of more than a week. He refused to go to Newark without extradition, and pending extradition proceedings his bail was fixed at $7,500.

The police believe Schonbrun is one of a gang of film thieves who have been carrying on extensive operations, stealing not only films, but posters, heralds, and other advertising matter with which to market them. His arrest followed that of Samuel Glauber, assistant manager of the Newark office, earlier in the week, admissions made by Glauber implicating Schonbrun, the police say. S. Goldfone, a film dealer of Newark, and Jack Greenberg, an employe at the Newark branch, are being held for examination.

The search for the thieves came as the result of recent inventories, which showed that 250,000 feet of film were missing from various Mutual offices. Films are kept in individual metal containers and stored in vaults, and at distributing branches where there are many hundreds of films, by systematic thieving, it would be an easy matter to remove some of them each day. The films are worth from 10 to 25 cents a foot, and their compact nature makes it possible to hide booty of great value in a small space.

A search was made through Schonbrun's quarters. It was found he had many addresses. Three rooms were searched in vain, until Arthur F. Beck, manager of the Twenty-third street branch of the Mutual, in New York, came upon an innocent-looking old trunk, securely locked. Detectives had passed it up and had decided there was no film on the premises.

"There may be no film here," remarked Beck, "but it is a cinch that I smell film."

There is a faint but peculiar odor from motion picture films, due to the treatment of the celluloid with oil of eucalyptus to prevent aging. This odor is scarcely noticeable to those who are not accustomed to the handling of films. But to Mr. Beck it was an infallible clue. He and the detective sniffed about the room. The scent led to the old trunk in which they discovered some of the Charlie Chaplin comedies originally put out by the Keystone and released through the Mutual.

They found also data that indicated where many more reels were concealed. Subsequent raids turned up more missing film, making an aggregate of 200,000 feet recovered and many thousands of posters to be used in the advertising of the stolen reels.

According to officers of the Mutual, the Newark thefts are typical of what has taken place in cities throughout the country, so that in the past few years hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of films have been stolen. The Mutual has branch offices where stocks of films are kept for distribution to the exhibitors in fifty-four cities. The large number of picture theaters makes it comparatively easy for the thieves to market their plunder. In larger cities, it is said, there are agents who deal exclusively in stolen films.

As a result of the discoveries in Newark, the Mutual is formulating a plan for a nation-wide campaign in which other companies will be asked to co-operate. John Cecil Graham, assistant to the president of the corporation, has taken general supervision of the work. Elaborate records of stolen films are being prepared and private detectives will be put on the scent.

Helen Pollock With Metro

Helen Pollock, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Channing Pollock (Anna Marble), who recently made her debut as a motion picture actress with the Rolfe-Metro forces, comes from a long line of theatrical ancestry. Miss Pollock's grandfather, Edward Marble, was for many years leading support with "Lotta" and was the author of many farces and musical comedies, including "Tuxedo," in which he was associated with Thatcher, Primrose and West. Her great-granduncle was William Warren, the famous comedian, and star of the Boston Museum. Her great-grandfather was Danforth Marble, also a well known Yankee comedy star of a half century ago. The late Joseph Jefferson was another relative on her maternal side. With such a number of dramatic forbears, it is small wonder that Miss Pollock should have succumbed to hereditary influence and a natural love of the theater. Her latest picture was "When a Woman Loves," written by Charles T. Horan, and produced by Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., for the Metro program, in which she appeared as the leading ingenue. The directors of Metro predict a bright future for this acress.

CELEBRITIES SEE LUBIN FILM

Marie Dressler, Star of "Tillie's Tomato Surprise," Shows Picture to Bevy of Specially Invited Friends

Marie Dressler wanted to see herself in her latest moving picture, "Tillie's Tomato Surprise." However, the weather was warm and Miss Dressler, who is recuperating from the strenuous action of the comedy at the Gedney Farm Hotel, White Plains, was not particularly anxious to come to New York to satisfy her curiosity.

A happy idea struck her. Why not have a private showing of the feature in the ballroom of the hotel? Accordingly, Miss Dressler called up the V. L. S. E. office, from which the feature will be distributed, and arranged to have an operator bring the film to the Gedney Farm Hotel on Sunday, September 5. Then, to make a regular party out of it, she invited a number of her friends to see the picture. Among those that were given an evening of uproarious fun, were Louise Dresser, William Courtenay, Virginia Harned, Mrs. M. A. Thompson, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Dillingham, Mrs. Oliver Harriman, Ruth Crosby Dimmick, Admiral Marix and Grace Filkins.

Miss Dressler's new comedy is being surrounded with considerable mystery by the Lubin Company who produced it, and herself. Contrary to the usual procedure, no word as to the plot of the comedy is being given out. It is said that this is Miss Dressler's own wish. She believes the feature is of such an exceptionally laugh-creating character, that she wishes to save the fullest measure of its mirthful qualities for those who see it. The picture will be released by V. L. S. E. Inc., on September 20.

William Collier Signs With Sennett

William Collier, famous on the legitimate stage, recently signed a contract to appear with Mack Sennett's Keystone studio in California. He will begin work there in November. Mr. Collier takes with him the scripts of most of his greatest stage successes and he will be able to give the scenario staff of the Keystone able assistance in their compiling original scripts for him, as almost every play he has appeared in during the last few years has borne his name at least as part author.

Anna Little, Charles Van Loan and Arthur Acord.

Arleen Hackett With Essanay

Acting for motion pictures is more exacting and strenuous than appearing on the legitimate stage, says Miss Arleen Hackett, Broadway star, engaged by Essanay especially for the part of Dolores de Mendoza, leading feminine character in the six-act feature photoplay, "In the Palace of the King," from F. Marion Crawford's famous novel.

Arleen Hackett.

Miss Hackett's appearance in this film is her second in photoplays, and therefore she is extremely critical of her work before the camera. She was watching a test film of her make-up in Essanay's exhibition room when she made her comparison between photoplay and stage acting.

"On the stage," she said, "one has an opportunity to correct an error in a later performance. This is not the case, however, in photoplays, because once the finished film goes out any mistake that has been made will be seen by every audience, and there is no chance to right it. Nevertheless, I have enjoyed my motion picture experience immensely."

Miss Hackett, who played last season in "Today," and in "Dickey Bird" with Mary Shaw, has had a wide experience on the speaking stage, and has been engaged by William Faversham as his leading woman in "The Hawk" next season. For the last three years she has starred on Broadway, and the year before last appeared in "Damaged Goods." She has been featured under the Morosco and Frohman managements and has starred in Ibsen, Strindberg and George Bernard Shaw plays. She also made a great success in Shakespearean roles, playing Ophelia, Portia, Lady Macbeth and Rosalind.

"The Spoilers" to Be Re-issued

One of the big enterprises under way at the Selig studios on the Pacific Coast is the preparation of Rex Beach's vigorous Alaskan play, "The Spoilers," for re-release in its original length of twelve reels. Lanier Bartlett has been remodeling and expanding the screen play from the abridged form in which it was shown and it is promised that the new production will out-do the original in many respects. It is a substantiated fact in motion picture history that "The Spoilers" has proven to be one of the most successful American picture plays ever released. It is as popular today as when it was first presented to the public several years ago. "The Spoilers" has played as many as a half dozen return dates in many of the principal theaters. The cast includes Kathlyn Williams, William Farnum, Thomas Santschi, Bessie Eyton, Wheeler Oakman, Jack McDonald and others. It was produced by Colin Campbell, dean of the Selig corps of directors and who was also responsible for "The Carpet From Bagdad," "The Rosary," and other Selig successes. "The Spoilers," both as to plot and scenes has been imitated many times. Imitation is the sincerest form of flattery, but none of the adapters has been able to reproduce the realism shown in the original Selig play.

Exhibitors and the public will await with pleasurable anticipation the release of "The Spoilers" in its unabridged form. It is as standard as is "Uncle Tom's Cabin," "Way Down East," etc. At least three thousand feet of the original film will be replaced in the production.

Giegerich's New Position

Charles J. Giegerich last week severed his connection with the New York executive offices of V. L. S. E., Inc., and is at present devoting his time to making preparations for the opening of Weber's theater, in New York, as a motion picture house. Later he expects to make a connection with one of the trade journals or in the advertising, publicity or sales department of some film manufacturer.

During the time he was employed by the V. L. S. E., Mr. Giegerich organized the publicity department and in addition to the usual trade journal stories placed a large volume of special stories in the daily newspapers and magazines of the country. He also had charge for some time of The Big Four Family, the weekly house organ of V. L. S. E., devoted to sales talks and advice to branch managers. In severing his connections with V. L. S. E., it is understood Mr. Giegerich leaves with the best of feeling existing between himself and the officers of the company, who wish him well in whatever new connection he makes.

Death of Bert Bohannon

Telegrams and messages of condolence have been pouring in at the offices of the Nicholas Power Company expressing great sorrow over the death of Bert Bohannon, traveling representative of that company, which occurred at Stamford, N. Y., Thursday morning, September 9, after a lingering illness of several months. Bohannon had been associated with the Power Company for several years and always worked indefatigably for the advancement of the business of the company. Prior to his connection with the Power concern he was identified with the theatrical business for years and was one of the very first to use motion pictures in connection with a vaudeville performance. Mr. Bohannon was a man of lovable personality and sterling qualities of character that endeared him to associates and competitors alike, and it can be correctly said that he had no enemies. Many of Mr. Bohannon's old associates acted as honorary pallbearers at the funeral held at Evergreen cemetery on Monday, September 13.

A Big Buy in Slides

One of the largest purchases ever consummated in the slide business has just taken place. Over 21,000 slides, of world-wide interest and covering a large variety of subjects, have been purchased by the Novelty Slide Company from Hunton-Fell-Elliott, Inc., and will shortly be offered to the trade at below cost price.

The purchase of this large stock has made it necessary for the Novelty people to lease an additional floor in the present building, thus giving them three floors at 67 West Twenty-third street, New York City.

Advertising All of the Program

FOR a film manufacturer to pick one, or two, or three, releases from the mass of his weekly output and concentrate his publicity on those few, is to cast the undeserved shadow of suspicion on the unadvertised balance. Why, the exhibitor asks himself, didn't they tell us something about the rest of the program? Are there only two good ones in the lot? Or didn't the advertising manager have time to see the others?

In the week's output of a big program house some releases are bound to be better than others. But they cannot be much better, because even the poorest has got to be pretty good. An old, well established brand of film, celebrated for its quality, can still acquire an unsavory reputation in short order by releasing a rotten picture every two weeks or so as a part of its program.

It is all right to advertise a program for its continuous and consistent excellence as a whole. But after all it is the parts of a program that the people see; it is the individual releases on the program, one at a time, that convince the exhibitor of its drawing power. So while general claims for the merits of any program may be forceful enough, they lack the convincing quality of advertising which sets forth the attractions of each and every part of the program. Advertising one or two releases on a program, to the exclusion of the others on the same program, makes features of subjects that were not intended for features.

We are glad to note a tendency among the big program makers to give consistent publicity to all the numbers on their programs. There are good examples of such advertising in this number. Where we find the entire program for the week described in detail, the releases explained one by one, the exhibitor can form a pretty accurate estimate of all he is getting. We believe that is what he wants.

In most lines of business the advertiser can content himself with featuring a few interesting samples of his line, letting them speak for the whole. You can judge a hardware man's axes by his pocket knives. A good chair manufacturer can be relied upon for good tables and bedsteads. But in the film business this principle is true only in a limited way. That a producer turns out one good film is no sign all his product will be just as good. And that one subject picked from a program advertises promisingly does not guarantee to the exhibitor that the rest of the program, about which he knows nothing, will please his patrons.

The exhibitor who is interested in a certain brand of film feels that he is entitled to information about every release of that brand. Only by such information can he assure himself that the program is uniformly excellent, calculated to hold old attendance as well as gain new. The essential virtue of the program scheme lies in continuous releases that are ALL good, rather than a series of alternately super-excellent and mediocre subjects. The program that can announce all its releases with equal enthusiasm will gain the greatest hold on the exhibiting trade.

Criticising the Films

DRAMATIC critics on the great dailies draw their mysterious salaries by strange and devious methods. A few of them think a play is good or bad and say so in an ordinary human way. Others—probably the most famous—have never been known to praise a play in any way. This sinister reputation is their stock in trade—their recommendation to greatness. Yet doubtless the world could not get along without them.

There is no logical difference between a dramatic critic and a film critic—except that the latter has more work to do or needs be more numerous because of the enormous weekly release of new films. Some of these film subjects a dramatic critic could condemn with one hand tied behind him. Others he could find it hard not to admire; though a good conscientious critic would probably manage to turn his thumbs down in any case.

Every once in a while a dissatisfied exhibitor or an inspired publisher conceives the notion that printing unbiased criticism of all film releases would be the greatest service a trade paper could render its trade. The editor is urged to "tell the truth" about the films, "regardless of the advertisers."

Very well. There are over a hundred releases every week. To do the thing right, suppose we assign the job to ten men. That will cost us probably five hundred dollars a week at least; but no matter. Turn 'em loose, each to do his little criticism of ten or twelve films a week. What do we get then? What does the dear reader get?

Grant that any one of these expert critics is competent to say a certain film is bad—rotten—should never have been made, etc. Along comes a bunch of exhibitors who haven't heard the criticism yet. "By Golly," says one, "that's a good picture!" "Dandy!" says another. "You bet!" agrees a third. And they all book the film, and the people like it, and everybody is happy but the editor.

You see, there are no rules for criticism. It is not an exact science—or any science at all, for that matter. One man's meat is another man's poison. One man's pippin is another man's piece of cheese. The criticism must always be one individual's opinion—and only an opinion, not a fact. Even the opinion of a judge on the bench, in a matter of hard law, may be reversed by the next court. If film criticism could be performed by a jury of twelve critics, and then appealed to a higher critic or jury of critics, we might get a really wise decision when we got through. Since this is impossible, the exhibitor remains a better judge than the critic. The exhibitor has an instinct that tells him what his people want. The critic only knows what he personally approves or disapproves. He is as often wrong as right.

Sometimes we can tell where a picture might obviously have been improved; and that is our duty for the benefit of both exhibitor and producer. But to go beyond that is presumptuous.

According to reports from Germany, the Imperial Government has prohibited the exportation of German films to Sweden. This will affect not only the industry as far as the importers in this city are concerned, but the entertainment of the people as well, for the reason that some of the most interesting pictures in this respect have thus far come from Germany.

Just a Moment Please

As mentioned before in this Pinnacle of Persiflage, press agents have shown a wonderful desire of late to try their hand at being editors, but the latest recruit to the editorial fraternity is one Tom North of the V. L. S. E.'s Seattle office.

Tom goes 'em all one better by starting out with Pals, a four-page little sheet devoted to the houses using V. L. S. We note, too, its quality has improved, and from present indications Tom is not even yet satisfied.

Can it be possible that the lengthy story of the Paramount Convention in our last issue got the Famous Players publicity office so "het up" that spontaneous combustion resulted, thereby causing the recent w. k. fire?

Or perchance, the famous Lloyd R. has been experimenting with a new kind of incendiary bomb, preparatory to planting it somewhere and getting columns of free newspaper space when it was discovered by some star of the Famous Players galaxy whom Lloyd planned to "tip off" as to its whereabouts.

Some of these lads the Mutual nabbed, upon discovering that they had deliberately appropriated a hundred thousand feet of film or so, must have been planning on starting a film exchange of their own, despite that fact that this method of getting a start in the w. k. film game is generally considered passé.

house-top executed by Edward Brady, who is doing some splendid character work as Hernandez, furnishes a thrilling climax. Mr. Brady leaps from the roof, which is about fifty feet above the ground, to a tree and his fall thus "broken," he alights on the ground unharmed.

The conclusion of this episode finds the coverted chart in two fragments, the South American in possession of one half and Annette, after a brave struggle, still retaining the more important portion of the parchment. In this struggle with her persistent pursuer, Lillian Lorraine proves herself to be quite an athletic young woman, resisting her male opponent with surprising strength and agility. The contest is seemingly in dead earnest and has no appearances of rehearsal, it is so realistic.

At the beginning of this chapter Mrs. Hardin and Annette accept Inez Castro's invitation and visit with her at her Newport cottage. Neal obtains a leave of absence from the training-station and calls to see them. While walking with Annette, Neal sees Hernandez and recognizes him as one of the men who escaped from the revenue officers before he joined the navy. Neal follows him, but the South American enters an automobile and quickly drives off.

From a note which Hernandez has dropped, young Hardin learns that he is living in a secluded house near the shore, and that he is smuggling drugs into the country. With this information he returns to the training station. Hernandez instructs Inez to lure Annette to his house, having been told by Joe Welcher that the girl always carries the chart of Lost Island with her. Inez enjoys the absolute, confidence of Mrs. Hardin and Annette, she has little trouble, therefore, in persuading Annette to go with her to the smuggler's house.

The girl is seized and carried to an upper room where she is confronted by Hernandez. He commands her to give him the parchment, telling her that he knows she has it on her person and if she does not produce it in a few minutes he will search her. The South American leaves the room. In the meantime sailors, among them Neal, are sent to arrest the smuggler. Annette sees them approach. Unable to make them hear her cry for help, she throws her belt buckle out the window.

Hernandez returns to the room and finding the girl unwilling to give him the chart he attempts to search her and secure it. He calls the brute-man and Ponto to help him. In the struggle the paper is torn. At this point the naval officer and his men break into the room. Hernandez escapes with the upper half of the chart. The brute-man and Ponto also escape.

"The Circular Staircase"

Reviewed by John C. Garrett

THE Selig-Polyscope Company chose as their five-reel V. L. S. E. release for September 20, a dramatization of the popular novel "The Circular Staircase," by Mary Roberts Rinehart. The producer, Edward Le Saint, has done full justice to the story provided for him.

"The Circular Staircase," is a drama that registers with a jolt. Eugenie Besserer, as Aunt Ray, proves her ability to do some vivid playing and she is ably supported by Stella Razeto, as Gertrude Innes, her niece, and Guy Oliver, as Halsey Innes, her nephew. F. J. Tyler also does some clever work as "Old Tom," the colored servant. The handling of the scenes is done with remarkable cleverness and splendid photography adds much to the convincing realism of the picture.

Halsey and Gertrude Innes, on their way to Sunnyside, the summer home of Paul Armstrong, which has recently been rented by their Aunt Ray, stop at Greenwood Club and Halsey is just in time to prevent a quarrel between Jack Bailey, Gertrude's fiance, who is cashier of the Armstrong bank, and Arnold Armstrong, son of banker Paul Armstrong. Later Jack Bailey accompanies them to Sunnyside and enjoys a pleasant evening.

At three a. m. Aunt Ray is aroused by the sound of a pistol shot. Accompanied by Gertrude and her servant, Liddy, she rushes down stairs and at the bottom of the circular staircase stumbles over the lifeless body of a stranger. They discover that Jack Bailey and Innes have disappeared and telephone the country club. When Jarvis, a clubman, arrives and looks at the dead body he exclaims "Arnold Armstrong, and murdered in his father's house." Suspicion points to Bailey, as he is missing and he and Armstrong were bitter enemies. The next morning Halsey returns but refuses to give an account of his absence. He brings with him a newspaper which tells of the failure of the Armstrong bank and of Cashier Bailey being released under a large bond and securities aggregating a million and a quarter dollars being missing.

The mysteries encircling the circular staircase continue and Aunt Ray finds Louise Armstrong in old Tom's cabin. Old Tom explains that she came the night Arnold was killed. The next day a message is received from Dr. Walker telling that Banker Armstrong has died and that Sunnyside must be vacated at once, but Aunt Ray refuses to vacate after such short notice. A few days later Mrs. Watson, the housekeeper, is taken to the hospital. This same day old Tom, the butler, is heard to exclaim by a new gardener who has been engaged by Aunt Ray, "The grave gives up its dead" and then the old negro falls lifeless from fright.

Two nights later Halsey and Alex, the gardener, resolve to stand watch at the foot of the staircase and in the middle of the night the stables catch fire and the men rush to the scene. Mrs. Wason is dying at the hospital and summons Aunt Ray. She tells her that the night of young Armstrong's murder she had been called to old Tom's cabin and on the way had been accosted by Arnold Armstrong. He had asked her for the key, but she had refused to give it to him and he then struck her across the arm with a golf stick. Upon her return to the house she had seen Armstrong creeping up the stairs and had fired the shot that killed him.

Aunt Ray in the meantime discovers a secret room behind a chimney and after entering it the door shuts and she is a prisoner. During the night the secret panel is opened and when she rises she confronts Paul Armstrong. She shrieks and is heard by Detective Jamieson and Alex, the gardener, who burst open the door just as Armstrong makes his escape. The banker slips and falls full length down the circular staircase and so goes to his death. Aunt

"Business Is Business"

NAT GOODWIN, famous on the legitimate stage, takes the stellar role in "Business is Business," the Universal Broadway feature in five reels, released on September 13. This vehicle, which proved to be popular on the stage, was scenarioized by F. McGrew Willis. The directing of the photoplay was done by Otis Turner, to whom much credit is due for the scenes which are well photographed and one in particular which deserves special mention. It is a flash showing Christ at the Last Supper and is a very good interpretation of this historical event. On the whole the picture is one which will attract interest.

Mr. Goodwin's portrayal of Isadore Lechat, a man with millions of dollars acquired recently, is splendid. He is supported by a very good cast, including Gretchen Lederer, Mademoiselle Marguerite and Mr. Nelson.

Isadore Lechat, a man with recently acquired wealth, believes that business is the most important thing in the world and lets nothing whatsoever interfere in his search for more wealth. His wife, who was a peasant girl, cannot accustom herself to the life which she is supposed to now lead and likewise their daughter, Germain, who has inherited her mother's traits, does not care for society and the glamors of wealth, but spends most of her time aiding the poor people who are working on Lechat's vast estate.

Germain is in love with her father's chief gardener and meets him secretly for fear of her father sending him away.

Lechat makes a bargain with a nobleman, who has lost his wealth, for his son to marry Germain, but the girl's love affair which brings motherhood almost before it brings marriage, blocks her father's scheme.

In Paris Lechat has established his son and idol, Xavier, a gilded youth, who is a frequenter of Parisian cafes, and also he has established Celeste, his mistress, in a wonderful apartment there. Celeste is dissatisfied with life and demands that Lechat take her to his home, but he refuses.

Lechat offers Xavier the gift of a gold mine in Africa if he will influence a government official, the father of Xavier's friend, to remove a restriction which forbids the ownership of mines within military lines. Xavier accomplishes this and leaves in an automobile for Monte Carlo. He is killed in an automobile accident and brought back to his father. sure that he will not close it now that his son is dead and are secretly gloating over the fact that Lechat, who though heart-broken over his son's death, still believes that "business is business" comes in and signs the papers, closing the deal.

Celeste, who has come to the house to see Lechat, is accidentally shot and with this death and that of his son the old man sinks back in a chair before the great fire and recalls the fact that his daughter had called him a "Judas." He then sees in his dying moments a vision of the betrayal of Christ by Judas at the Last Supper. The servant later finds him dead in his chair before the fireplace.

Little Helen's illness brings husband and wife together.

American's two-reel feature "The Barren Gain," scheduled for release on Monday, September 20, but the story is handled in such a clever manner by the director and players that it appears almost new and gets over most effectively.

Walter Spencer is cast as Philip Cameron, a talented young author, and Nan Christy appears as his wife, who is quite a social butterfly with a fondness for the bright lights. Vivian Rich appears wholly natural at Meta Daunt, a girl with a literary ambition who comes to Cameron's home as a guest and later comes within an inch of breaking up that home through her sympathy for Cameron, which the latter interprets as love. Ere the story ends, however, Meta realizes the suffering her presence in the Cameron home has caused and succeeds in bringing about a better understanding between husband and wife, though her own heart is well nigh broken at being compelled to do so, for she sincerely loves Cameron.

erary fame. His close application to work during those hard years has erected a barrier between him and his beautiful, pleasure-loving wife. Their child, Helen, a lovely girl of five, is their only tie. Philip longs for someone, sympathetic and interested, to share his dreams and ambitions. Lois gives all her time to society.

Philip recieves a letter from his boyhood friend, John Daunt, that he is sending his daughter, Meta, to Philip that she may develop her literary talent. Philip finds that she has talent, and also that she shares his dreams and ambitions. It becomes a joy to work with Meta, and their joint output is successful.

Dr. Brainbridge, a frequent visitor at the Cameron home, falls in love with Meta, but she feels toward him only a casual friendliness. Barr, a wealthy man of the world, is paying assiduous attention to Lois—and his attentions are not unwelcome.

Meta and Philip are facing a serious situation. They find that their mutual attraction has ripened into love, but, for the sake of Helen, they do not give in to their feelings.

Meta overhears Barr and Lois planning to elope; and sacrificing her own love, she decides to stop the affair. She confides in Dr. Brainbridge. He administers a sleeping powder to Helen and pretends she is seriously ill. Lois is summoned from packing her grip and Philip is called away from a banquet in his honor.

Midnight finds Barr waiting in vain at the railway station. The crisis of the child's illness has brought husband and wife together. Finding his ruse successful, Dr. Brainbridge revives Helen, with the announcement that she is out of danger. And Meta! "Oh, bitter loss and barren gain." She has given up eternally the man she loves.

"Esmeralda"

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon

QUICK and refreshing in its action, "Esmeralda" reaches its fifth reel when it seems time only for its second or third. The ability of making time fly belongs only to good pictures, and Mary Pickford in scene from "Esmeralda."

"Esmeralda" is one of these. Mary Pickford plays the title role in it in a manner that will further endear her to those who like to see her in light comedy; not that this recent Famous Players release can rightly be classed as a comedy, but what humor it does contain, and there is considerable of it, is introduced by Esmeralda. James Kirkwood directed the picture which is being released on the Paramount Program.

The role of a little country girl who cannot reconcile either her conception of things or her manners to the formal luxury of the city home secured by her ambitious mother is one over which Little Mary is complete mistress. The story, while essentially drama, does not delve deeply into it, and is much breezier, and, at the same time, convincing because of that fact. The situations through the play are unusual enough to arouse interest and suspense, and still, natural enough to come within anyone's comprehension without necessitating strenuous imagination.

The settings and exterior scenes are in perfect harmony with the story, and are splendidly photographed. The cast, which renders invaluable support to Miss Pickford, includes Ida Waterman as Esmeralda's mother, Fuller Mellish as her father, Arthur Hoops as Count de Montessin, William Buckley as William Estabrook, and Charles Waldron as David Hardy.

When her mother voices her protests against farm life and expresses her intention of moving into the city, both Esmeralda and her father oppose her, but to no avail. It is only through the intercession of David Hardy, Esmeralda's lover, that the woman is saved from selling the farm, on which oil has been discovered. The land is leased for a magnificent sum, and the three take up residence in a mansion in the city.

Esmeralda and her father do not enjoy their luxurious surroundings, but must endure them because the girl's mother is ambitious and wishes to marry her daughter to a title. This, of course, would be impossible without the medium of exclusive social functions and a suitable place in which to hold them. Count de Montessin is chosen for Esmeralda's future husband, but the girl does not like him and makes no attempt to conceal the fact.

Hardy, meanwhile, has journeyed to the city, determined to make something of himself and thus qualify for Esmeralda according to her mother's standards. It is reported that Hardy is dead. Esmeralda is so downcast on hearing this that abandonment seizes her, and she consents to her mother's oft-repeated plea that she marry the count. Hardy happens near the church as the bridal couple arrive. Esmeralda sees him, and realizes at the same time that her betrothal to the count is more a matter of surrender than of love.

A telegram from the men at the farm states that the oil has run out, and that the land is, therefore, worthless for their further use, but that the neighboring farm belonging to the Hardys has proven of great value, due to the discovery of rich mineral products on it. The whole party returns to the country where, in the final scene, David is seen visiting Esmeralda, who has consented to become his bride in the fall.

"The Mansion of Tragedy"

Reviewed by John C. Garrett

DARWIN KARR as Richard Baldwin, a rising young lawyer, Lillian Drew as Hester, adopted daughter of Mrs. Kelsey, played by Minnie Stanley, Howard Lang as Prince Oswald, a fortune seeker, and Beverly Bayne as Nell Kelsey, the pleasure-loving daughter of Mrs. Kelsey, all doing commendable work, comprise the cast of the three-reel Essanay production, "The Mansion of Tragedy," released on September 13. The story, which is out of the ordinary, has engrossing interest from start to finish and is very well presented, being artistically projected and showing complete interior settings.

Mr. Kelsey, a poor cobbler, spends all of his spare time in figuring and says nothing concerning this to anyone. He works hard to support his daughter, Nell, and his wife and later, Hester, the daughter of a neighboring man, after her father's death. Richard Baldwin, a young lawyer, and a great friends of the family's, spends much of his time there and when Mr. Kelsey dies Baldwin gets hold of the plans for a manufacturing machine which the old man had been working on and through his efforts Mrs. Kelsey receives $1,500,000 for them.

After the double wedding.

Some years later, after Nell Kelsey and Hester have grown up in luxury, Prince Oswald wins Hester's love. Nell is herself in love with the prince. The prince proposes to Hester and she, deeming it only her duty, tells him that she is not the real daughter of Mrs. Kelsey, and therefore not an heiress. The prince, upon learning this, casts her aside and proposes to Nell, who accepts him. Young Baldwin is in love with Hester and after Mrs. Kelsey has told the girl that she would be happy if Hester would only love and marry Baldwin, Hester accepts his proposal and some few days later there is a double wedding at the Kelsey home.

Immediately after the wedding the prince calls Hester aside, tells her that in order to be near her he will not go on a honeymoon as he has not the money anway and plans to meet her the next day. Hester confides in Mrs. Kelsey, telling her of her love for the prince and of how he turned her down when she was not the heiress and the heart-broken mother calls her son-in-law aside and tells him if it were not for her daughter's happiness she would kick him out of the house, but as it is she will not give him a cent of her money.

The next day, through his connection with the Kelsey family, the prince manages to secure a sum of money, goes to Hester and proposes that she run away with him. In the meantime Baldwin has received a telegram calling him out of the city and returns home to pack his grip.

Mrs. Kelsey has overheard the prince's plans and Nell has seen her foster sister in her husband's arms. When Baldwin reaches the house Mrs. Kelsey tells him to start from the house pretending he is going away and to return immediately. Baldwin bids his wife good-bye and when she is sure he has gone she prepares to leave with the prince. On second thought, however, she changes her mind and just then the prince steps into the room. He pleads with her to leave with him but she refuses and he takes her in his arms. Just then the door opens and Richard Baldwin steps into the room.

The prince draws a revolver and levels it at Baldwin. The two men grapple with each other and in the struggle which ensues the revolver is accidentally discharged, killing the prince. Baldwin then takes Hester into his arms.

"Via Wireless"

Reviewed by Thomas C. Kennedy

PRODUCED by Pathe, "Via Wireless," a five part "Gold Rooster" play, is remarkable for its spectacular, realistic staging and the excellent work of the strong cast, headed by Gail Kane and Bruce McRae. In the striking effects obtained in the scenes at the steel mill, the explosion of a huge coast defense gun, the yacht foundering and an automobile wreck, the director, George Fitzmaurice, has made "Via Wireless" a most impressive production.

This picture is one that will, undoubtedly, be much talked about and long remembered by those who view it. The story is an adaptation from the original play of the same name by Winchell Smith and Paul Armstrong, and it embodies numerous dramatic situations which, strengthened by the atmosphere of realism conveyed by the settings and worthy interpretations by the players, are convincing, and interest compelling.

Gail Kane, who achieved notable success on the legitimate stage, is a beautiful and engagingly natural Frances Durant, the steel king's daughter. She is effective in both her light and dramatic scenes. Miss Kane photographs well and she is seen to better advantage than the average stage star who appears for the first time in pictures. Lieutenant Sommers is a part well suited to Bruce McRae, who has been identified with some of Broadway's most successful offerings, and his performance is splendid. The leads are rendered fine support by the balance of the cast.

The story concerns itself with Lieutenant Sommers whose plans for a new coast-defense type of gun are accepted by the government authorities. He is sent to the Durant steel mill where he is to give instruction for the manufacture of his invention. Summers has previously met Frances Durant, and he renews his acquaintance with her. Jealous of the growing affection between Frances and the Lieutenant, Pinkney, the manager at the mill, who has control of an invention which he wishes to sell to the goverment, determines to eliminate competition by the Sommers gun.

He plans to prepare the machine contrary to the specifications. Sommers learns that his instructions have not been carried out, and warns the manager that he will hold him responsible. Pinkney succeeds in causing a misunderstanding between Sommers and Frances. Sommers is sent with his fleet to Turkey. Some time later Frances reluctantly engages herself to Pinkney. The Durants decide to take a trip aboard their yacht.

The Sommers gun is tried. It explodes and kills two of the operators. Sommers is notified that he is to return and appear before the board of inquiry. On his return voyage his ship passes within a short distance of the Durant yacht. He receives their distress signal; the yacht having struck a floating mine. In the confusion on board Frances is left in the wireless operator's room. Sommers risks his life to save the girl.

When they arrive in America it is proven that Pinkney is responsible for the explosion of the gun. In an attempt to escape from a detective, the manager is killed when his automobile plunges over a cliff. Sommers and Frances are married.

George Kleine's "The Fixer"

Reviewed by George W. Graves

THE latest comedy to emanate from the studios of George Kleine is a five-reel subject founded on Willis M. Goodhue's famous farce, "Hello, Bill." Bickel and Watson, identified as the laugh getters in Ziegfeld's early "Folly" shows, are the main lights in "The Fixer," from which diffuse the rays of humor, so inherent in their personality and actions. Incidentally, this is their first appearance on the screen.

Although it is true that speech is a large factor in the stage comedian's interpretation, it cannot be denied that these two make a strong combination in the screen comedy for procuring ludicrous situations without the aid of interlocutory effects or slap-stick work. The grimaces and contortionery exercises which Watson inflicts upon his face register clearly on the screen and succeed in getting over.

It cannot be affirmed that the whole five reels are teeming throughout with funny situations, but there are enough of the latter to induce many expansive grins and no few loud laughs on the part of the audience. Prominent virtues of the production are: the absence of vulgarity, the manifest care in developing the plot, the elaborate settings, and a strong cast, among whose members are Ben Taggart, Snitz Edwards, Alma Hanlon, and Ruby Hoffman.

The story centers mainly around Mr. William Fowler, diplomat, Bill Fowler, bogus diplomat, Christopher Cutting, "the fixer," who always has a happy thought in time of stress, and the wealthy widow whom Bill has just married. As Bill is a likely candidate for incarceration in the local jail, he deceives his wife, impersonates a diplomat, and with his friend, "the fixer," journeys to balmy Mexico, from which place they send home glowing accounts of their trials and triumphs.

Of course, in reality they meet with rough treatment at the hands of the bandit chiefs. The real diplomat has been achieving success, however, and Bill, his namesake, on arriving home receives the honors, as he looks more like Napoleon than does the diplomat, and no one will believe the latter. But, as the genuine diplomat's friend is in love with the widow's daughter, he is persuaded not to betray the fabricating Bill, and things end decidedly to Bill's advantage.

"The Man From Oregon"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward

ONE of the most grippingly powerful photoplays ever released under the brand of a Mutual Master-Picture is "The Man From Oregon," this week's offering of the New York Motion Picture Corporation. The story is so naturally unfolded, and so skillfully played that one is surprised, as it ends, to discover that it is only a celluloid play he has been witnessing and not a little section out of life itself.

The piece abounds in big stage settings, each one a masterpiece of the scene painter's and stage carpenter's art. You gasp at the magnificence of the Washington ballroom in which one of the big scenes is set, only to be more astonished a few minutes later to behold the United States senate chamber, in which "Honest Jim" Martin, the Man From Oregon, delivers his tirade against a certain railway land grab.

Howard Hickman makes of "Honest Jim" Martin a man of power and influence, a man who really looks the part of a United States senator, and not a make-believe character, while Herchel Mayall as William Landers, the chief of the railroad lobby, is equally convincing in his smooth, saucy fashion. Clara Williams has the feminine lead as Harriet Lane, the tool of Landers, and she most capably performs the part assigned her, while Fanny Midgley as "Mother" Martin, the parent of "Honest Jim," fairly radiates motherly love and faith in her offspring and his honesty.

The plot of the story must have been founded on the sensational case of a blind United States senator whom certain unscrupulous lobbyists sought to implicate in a bit of scandal some years ago, but who ultimately proved his innocence, for it follows along almost exactly parallel lines.

"Honest Jim" Martin is elected United States senator upon his promise to fight a certain land grab contemplated by a railroad traversing his constituency and upon arriving in Washington at once spurns the smoothly worded offer of bribery made him by Landers, the head of the lobby.

Later, he finds it harder to refuse the plea of Harriet Lane, whom he meets in a Washington ballroom, when the girl unfolds a sad tale to him and begs that he vote in favor of the bill. Martin, of course, is unaware that Harriet is a tool of Landers and has been paid in advance for any influence she can bring to bear upon the new senator to prevent his casting his vote against the proposed measure.

Harriet, ultimately, is forced to agree to a plan of Landers for besmirching the name of "Honest Jim" and reluctantly dispatches a note to the senator, summoning him to her apartments. "Honest Jim" comes and, as agreed upon, Harriet manages to drop herself upon his shoulder, at the same time loosening her hair and tearing one arm out of her waist, at which time Landers appears in the doorway, a smile upon his face and a camera in his hand. He explains that the negative just exposed will be given to the newspapers for publication unless "Honest Jim" consents to vote in favor of the railroad's land grab.

Disillusioned, "Honest Jim" Martin returns to his rooms and ponders over what he had best do. Shall he vote for the bill and keep his reputation or shall he vote against it and be branded as a man who forces his attentions upon helpless women? The answer is made known to all next day, when, in the senate chamber, he delivers such a tirade against the bill that it is defeated by a big vote.

Harriet, meanwhile, recalling the faith of "Mother" Martin in her "big boy," resolves to destroy the evidence against the senator. She knows the negative is in the safe in Landers' apartments and goes there to procure it, only to discover that the combination has been changed and she cannot open the safe. Desperate, she calls police headquarters on the phone and asks that a man be sent who can open the safe. A safe cracker appears, believing, of course, the girl is in her own home, and opens the safe. Just as Harriet is about to destroy the bit of glass Landers enters and claims the negative. He lays it down upon his library table and the girl, snatching up his revolver, sends a bullet into the plate, smashing it to atoms. Landers has to stand calmly by, for he fears to disclose its real importance lest he be arrested for blackmail.

Senator Martin, his reputation thus saved, next day invites the girl to luncheon with his mother and himself and it is easy to foresee the beginning of a romance.

"The Diamond From the Sky"

Reviewed by Neil G. Caward

EXCITEMENT aplenty holds one's interest in "The Rose in the Dust" which is the title given the twenty-second chapter of the North American's exciting serial, "The Diamond From the Sky."

The threads of the thrilling story are beginning to straighten themselves out, as in this chapter Esther manages once more to obtain a glimpse of Arthur Stanley and the latter, having seen Esther again, is harder than ever to convince that he is suffering from mental trouble and only imagines he is seeing the girl he loves.

Old characters, too, who have been absent from the story for several chapters, make their reappearance and coming installments of the serial should be even more interesting than those which have already been screened, since Hagar has regained her normal state of mind and Luke Lovell is once more on the trail of the missing diamond.

Chapter twenty-two of the serial is marked by particularly beautiful backgrounds and one of the prettiest of these is the route taken by the tallyho when Arthur and his friends set out for the races and, later, the return, when the tallyho passes the hand organ of little Quabba and Esther, his companion, standing at the roadside.

The latest chapter resumes the battle in the circus tent, following the killing of the animal tamer by one of her lions, and the panic that results. All the principals safely make their escape from the tent, though in the riot among the spectators several of them have difficulty in getting out. Arthur and Quabba are separated from Arthur once more in the hubbub and the latter is not fully convinced that he really has seen Esther again, since Durand, Duval, Vivian and Blair all insist that his vision of Esther is a pure figment of his imagination.

The man who stole the diamond succeeds in escaping to a lonely stable far away from the circus, and there hiding the precious jewel in the hay loft, but it happens that the stable selected for the hiding place of the diamond is the very one in which Quabba keeps his horse and hand organ, and later when Quabba goes to the hay-loft to procure some feed for his horse the diamond falls down into the manger and ere the chapter ends is seen lying amid the whisps of hay, while rats scamper across its shining surface.

Arthur Stanley is kept almost a prisoner in his home, since Durand and Duval convince him that he is not yet strong enough to resume his duties at the office, and Blair is therefore given every opportunity for managing Arthur's affairs as he sees fit. Arthur bribes one of his butlers to send a telegram, without the knowledge of any other member of the household, the wire being to the detective in Richmond, Va., asking if Esther Harding is in Los Angeles or not.

Unfortunately the reply is sent to Arthur's office instead of his home. Blair secures it and upon noting that Arthur is advised that Esther is in Los Angeles, he and Vivian insert the telegram in a typewriter and add the word "not" after "is," thus convincing Arthur once more that he was mistaken in thinking that she was in Los Angeles.

Next day Arthur is taken to the races in a tallyho, accompanied by his friends, and Quabba, who has learned that they are to proceed from Arthur's home, induces Esther to dress once more in her gypsy costume and take up her station on the road in such a way that Arthur will be sure to see her as he passes by.

Everything works out as Quabba had foreseen, but when Arthur attempts to stop the tallyho Blair grabs the lines and hurries the horses on, while Vivian merely laughs at Arthur's statement that he is sure he has seen Esther again. Just at that time Luke Lovell appears and noting Quabba and Esther starts out to follow them as the twenty-second chapter ends.

"Trilby"

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon

FOR its initial release the Equitable Motion Pictures Corporation presents "Trilby," powerful as a novel and famous as a stage success both in this country and abroad. Produced by Maurice Tourneur and starring Clara Kimball Young and Wilton Lackaye, "Trilby" is a filmed work of art whose charms are impervious to age or period. Years from now "Trilby" will be the same exquisite piece of workmanship that it is today. Its general release date is September 20, but since September 6 it has been drawing heavily at the Forty-fourth Street Theater, New York City, where a short war picture, "Trilby" being but five acts in length, is added to fill in the program.

It is evident from the finished production that the story received much of the director's attention. With less careful or skillful handling, "Trilby" could have become an ordinary multiple-reel release despite its wonderful theme. Its opportunities for unique effects, delicate expression and moments of subtle humor and dramatic tensity are manifold, yet, without proper treatment by a fully appreciative director might have passed virtually unnoticed. In condensing "Trilby" into five reels many parts of the story were only lightly touched upon and some not at all. The result is a picture which is interesting every second and utterly devoid of even the least trace of padding.

Technically, the production is perfect. The childishly free Bohemian atmosphere of the Latin quarter is borne out in the action and environment of the scenes representing that section of Paris. Fully as well done are the theater scenes. The manner in which mirrors are used to produce certain effects is exceedingly clever. The photography throughout is fine.

to the role physically, being beautiful in face and figure, and her magnetic personality and proven ability lend to the character the quantities of grace, humor, and appeal. Wilton Lackaye is Svengali from his first appearance on the screen until his death near the end of the picture. It is impossible to imagine him as anything but the hypnotist and cringing musician whom he portrays. Supporting these two is a capable cast, including Paul McAllister as Gecko, and Chester Barnett as Little Billee.

Briefly, the story is of Svengali's mysterious power over Trilby, a power that transforms the pretty but harsh-voiced artist's model into a wonderful opera singer. Svengali first meets Trilby in the studio of a young English chap known as Little Billee. The latter loves Trilby and plans to marry her, but, on the night on which their engagement is celebrated, Svengali, a fierce-looking, wandering musician, hypnotizes the girl and starts with her for England.

Arriving there, Svengali has no trouble securing an engagement for Trilby in the opera house. Billee, meanwhile, has returned home. He attends the opera one evening, and recognizes in the beautiful singer his former sweetheart, Trilby. During the intermission Svengali staggers into a room off the stage, and falls dead. The strain of keeping Trilby under his influence has proven too much for him. At the rising of the curtain, the girl attempts to sing as usual, but this time it is her natural voice that is heard, and she is soon hooted off the stage.

That evening she and Billee and some of the latter's friends have a reunion party. While waiting for the elevator on leaving, the men hear a scream followed by the sound of a fall coming from Trilby's room. Entering, they find her dead, the reflection of a life-sized portrait of Svengali staring at them with baleful eyes from out of the mirror before which Trilby had been standing.

"The Purple Night"

INTEREST is commanded less by the plot itself than the characters which the author has conscientiously depicted in "The Purple Night," produced in three parts and released September 15 on the regular General Film Program by Knickerbocker Star Features. The story hangs upon the caprices of a young society woman. This figure, the author, the director and Florence Rockwell, who interprets the part, have combined to make more or less convincing.

Miss Rockwell, who has created, with honor to herself, many roles on the legitimate stage, makes her screen debut as Carol, the renowned artist who, becoming bored and dissatisfied with her social life among New York's fashionable set, seeks exhilaration in the slums, which leads to her own undoing. In support of the star, Noah Beery as the gangster and Lionel Adams as the inventor, both of whom are well known on the speaking stage, have pleasing presence and give generally good performances.

Richard Carlyle as Stanley Cross, is well suited to his part and enacts it with understanding and pleasant restraint, and, though his part is small, he makes a very favorable impression in it. The story is well staged, the interior settings are tasteful, and there are just enough outdoor scenes to give the piece good balance. The photography is thoroughly commendable, having clearness and depth, and the lighting effects are attractive in their simplicity. Stanner E. V. Taylor directed the production.

Carol, a young society woman and a successful painter, by chance meets a gangster, Billy Clark, whose stalwart physique attracts her to him. She persuades Clark to pose for a subject which she is now working on. Carol, exceedingly tired of life as she sees it at the various social functions given by her wealthy friends, desires to see another side of life, causes her to give way to her impulse to meet Clark as her equal.

In a short time she becomes infatuated with him and breaks her engagement to Stanley Cross. Warren Powers, wealthy inventor, has on many occasions sought the acquaintance of the renowned artist, but minor circumstances have always interfered with the fulfillment of his desire. Carol grows more daring, and visits the gangster's haunts with him. At her instance he attempts to rob an elderly man. In the struggle both Clark and the man, who is the father of Powers, are killed.

Carol manages to escape from the police. She returns home conscience-stricken. After her recovery from the shock she meets Powers. They become lovers. One day the inventor speaks of his vow for vengeance upon the woman who the police said witnessed his father's death. Then Carol realizes her great mistake, and a short time later, welcomes death which follows a bullet wound received while trying to prevent a Japanese spy from stealing the formula for a new explosive which her lover invented.

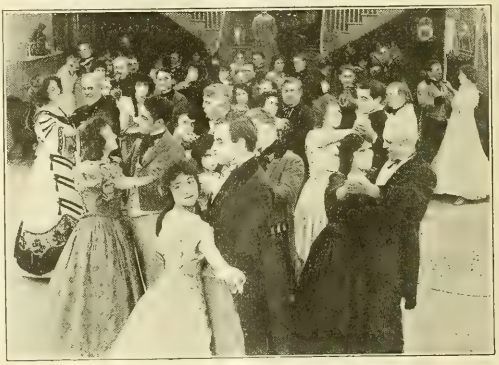
One day Tom returns, is seen by Jack Stark and the revenue men told of his presence in the village, Stark declaring that unless Joe arrests Tom he will do so himself.

After Tom has called at the home of his former sweetheart he learns of her engagement to Joe and then, broken-hearted, walks along the sea shore. Stark has followed him and, fearful of Tom's physical powers, draws a revolver and fires at Tom from behind a distant rock.

"The Runt," who is still charmed by Tom's manly physique, who has set out to renew her friendship with him, sees Stark's dastardly attempt to kill her lover and leaps into the path of the bullet.



As Tom turns to face Stark the latter fires again and Tom, dying, crawls over to "The Runt," and there, side by side, they are found by Daddy Reynolds, Joe Russell and others of the fishing village, the next morning.

THIS five-reel Broadway Universal feature is a successful rendition of Lottie Blair Parker's famous play of the same name, adapted for the screen by William A. Lathrop. Mary Fuller and Milton Sills, the eminent English actor, are seen in the leading parts. Miss Fuller's work is of exceptional delicacy and charm, and is sure to please. Paul Panzer, the "venomous and vindictive king of intrigue," perfects another of his famous "heavy" characterizations with distinction.

It is essential to mention also the fine work done by Charles Ogle, who impersonated Major Crofton, and that of Clara Byers, portraying the absconding wife. Others who maintain the worth of the picture, are Bert Bushy and William Heidloff.

The action of the story evolves smoothly and logically, developing into tense situations in spots, but not entering the precincts of melodrama. There are several choice bits of negro comedy and dancing, which offer pleasant diversion. The gallant, hospitable air of the South pervades the studio part of the production, thanks to the skill and taste of the director. It is gratifying to note that the Civil War, which has been worn to shreds by the photoplay, is barely touched upon, although the story is laid at that period. Mary Fuller as Lelia Crofton, is celebrating her eighteenth birthday at the opening of the picture, amidst the gorgeous surroundings of her father's mansion. Her two lovers, Burleigh Mavor (Milton Sills) and Steve Daubeney (Paul Panzer) are present.

While Lelia was but two years old, her mother had run off with another man, and Lelia has been kept in ignorance as to her mother's past. The mother, who has been long since deserted, can not overcome a desire to see her daughter at the age of eighteen, and making her way to the plantation, she hides in the bushes. As Steve is leaving the grounds after being rejected by Lelia, he overhears a conversation between the former Mrs. Crofton and Aunt Doshey, an old servant of the family. Aunt Doshey hides the former "missus" in her cabin.

Lelia to keep the secret, promises to marry Steve, and Hallowe'en comes she invites both of her suitors to a large party. Steve is determined not to be refused again, telling Lelia that if she will marry him he will keep her mother's secret. Lelia cannot come to believe that there is anything disgraceful about her mother's past, but when Steve reminds her "Like mother, like daughter, they say," she takes it that he means the taint of negro blood. Realizing this to be an unforseen wedge, Steve does not try to further elucidate his meaning.

Lelia, to keep the secret, promises to marry Steve, and refuses the one man of her choice, Burleigh Mavor. When the wedding day arrives, however, Lelia runs to the protecting arms of her father, declaring that she cannot marry Steve. Lelia's mother, who has been watching from the window, dashes in and begs forgiveness of her husband. When Lelia shows surprise at the fact that her mother is a white woman, her father demands of her "who said she wasn't?" Lelia cries "Steve Deubeney." Steve makes good his escape.

After the interrupted wedding, Burleigh and Lelia become engaged. Steve who now hates his rival, has him captured by a gang and deported far into the woods for the purpose of giving him a coat of tar and feathers. Lelia, who has been apprised of the capture by Aunt Lizer, saves her lover from the gang after a while ride over the country.

The climax of the story is reached when the minister is marrying Lelia and Burleigh on the lawn in front of the mansion. Steve rises out of the bushes, and levels a gun at Burleigh's heart. But as he is about to pull the trigger, a shot is heard in the distance, and Steve drops. The shot was fired from a squad of soldiers who were looking for Steve, as a deserter from his regiment.

The story of "A Desert Honeymoon" was written and produced by Romaine Fielding, who also takes the leading part in this screen drama. His work is most commendable and he has compiled a story which is highly interesting and well adaptable for screen use.

Mr. Fielding as Jack, a young man from the East, has chosen for his leading woman Vinnie Burns, who portrays the character of Chiquita, a Spanish dancer and the pride of the small desert town. Miss Burns is called upon to do some dramatic work and she does it very well indeed. These two stars are supported by Jack Lawton and Violet Malone.

The strong climax where Jack and Chiquita fall unconscious from heat and thirst in the desert with a terrific sand storm raging about them is made most realistic by the aid of splendid photography.

Jack and Mary, the little school teacher, are engaged to be married. Jack receives word from his pal, Bob, in a small desert town in the West, that land is cheap there. The young man tries to persuade Mary to go West with him, but on account of her invalid mother the girl says she will wait until he has established a home there and when he sends for her she will come.

dancer's evil influence, fires and the shot grazes Bob's forehead.

Bob slowly recovers and is being tenderly nursed by Mary and a strong friendship has sprung up between them. Jack, who is being followed by the sheriff, comes into the cabin once occupied by him and Bob, and there is followed by the dancer, who comes in and asks Mary if she will not forgive Jack. The girl says she forgives him and just then the sheriff and his posse break in the door.

They have found Jack's revolver and ask him if he was not the one who shot Bob. He tells them he is and with the little dancer protestingly hanging onto him he is led to the desert's edge, there to be sent out alone to meet death. Finally, however, the dancer's wild pleadings result in her being sent out into the desert with Jack and the sheriff tells them to go and it will be their "honeymoon." We last see them both fallen exhausted from the lack of water and the intense heat and a terrific sandstorm is raging about them.

"The Incorrigible Dukane"

Reviewed by Charles R. Condon

THE melodramatic comedy, "The Incorrigible Dukane," is a splendid subject for a film play, and what is even more important, just the vehicle for John Barrymore. His mannerisms and expressions applied as a tonic to a fair story develop it into a laughing success. In a play with strength, persistency and opportunity such as "The Incorrigible Dukane," Barrymore is a scream.

He is funny from the first scene on, and in addition to being a comedian, proves convincing as the young man who divests himself of his irresponsible, carefree disposition when face to face with a crisis, and leads a gang of laborers and mechanics against the supporters of his father's superintendent, a man who has deliberately planned substituting a cheap mixture for cement in an enormous dam under course of construction. Young Dukane, incorrigible probably, but resourceful and fearless when aroused, defeats the superintendent's plans.

The picture is a Paramount release produced by the Famous Players Film Company. Although fully three-fourths of it is pure comedy, the action does not at any time approach slap-stick. The story unfolds evenly and the humor in its situations and in Barrymore's work is without obvious forerunners and does not smack of being forced. Original, spontaneous bits of comedy never fail to convey good humor to spectators. And they did not when "The Incorrigible Dukane" was first shown at the Broadway Theater, New York. It took exceptionally well, and sent people from the theater talking about its cleanness and freshness.

In one of the ludicrous scenes in the production Dukane is seen attacking the big construction foreman, who holds him out at arm's length, from which distance the youth makes futile punches and kicks at the man, resembling a crazy windmill in his gyrations. The picture is graphically staged, and its realistic construction camp scenes show up to good advantage in fine photography. Supporting John Barrymore who plays the part of James A. Dukane, Jr., are W. T. Carleton as Dukane, Sr., Stuart Baird as Superintendent Corbettson, William Meech as Lantry, the camp bully, C. E. McDonald as Crofton, a ranchman, and Helen Weir as his daughter, Enid.

There being a limit to all things, the senior Dukane's patience gives out upon the receipt of four cafe bills contracted by his son. When the latter timidly walks into his father's office at five o'clock in the afternoon, having arisen at four, he is informed that he must make something of himself and must do it right away. Dukane, Sr., hands him $200 and a letter of introduction to the superintendent of his construction camp in the West, and walks out of the office.

Crofton, the owner of a ranch where Dukane's men are building a dam, objects to having his land drained dry, but receives no satisfaction from Corbettson, the superintendent of construction. Accompanied by his daughter, Enid, he journeys East to see Dukane. He enters the office just after young Dukane's departure. The latter meets Enid downstairs, but is just becoming acquainted with her when her father returns and whisks her off.

After many mishaps, Dukane, Jr., reaches the construction camp, clad in the raiment of a tramp who exchanged clothes with him while he slept.. Not having the letter of introduction, young Dukane fails to convince the men at the camp that he is their employer's son. He is put to work with a pick and shovel, but is soon afterwards discharged. While in the superintendent's office, he learns of the latter's crooked methods.

Armed with proofs, he convinces a number of the men of Corbettson's villany, and leads them against the superintendent who has gathered about him the rougher element of the camp. Dukane, Sr., arrives shortly after the sheriff and his men have quelled the disturbance. He is overjoyed to learn that his son has so much mettle, and appoints him superintendent of the camp. Jimmie then introduces him to Enid whom he has again met and to whom he has become engaged.

World's "Evidence"

Reviewed by Hugh Hoffman

IN THIS offering we have an adaptation of a stage play which was recently presented in New York at the Lyric Theater under the same title. There are some strong dramatic elements in it which put it in a class with "East Lynne." There are many points of resemblance between this story and the story of "East Lynne" along general lines, but the details are different enough to make it certain that nothing has been plagiarized.

It is a story of English society life with most of the scenes laid in England. Edwin August, the director, is due well-earned credit for his consistency in preserving the English atmosphere in the action and environment of the play. In many details the difference between England and America has been carefully borne in mind, such as the English style of telephone and lighting and other minutae. This is a trait in a director that is altogether commendable, but there are very few directors who do not overlook some little point. In this picture friend Edwin has made sure that every detail was strictly English except his own silk hat. The

A scene from "Evidence."

English have never been known to depart from the familiar bell top, and Edwin has made the glaring indiscretion of appearing in the conical French tile, which happens to be in vogue in America at the present time.

But no matter. These are only details. The fact remains that Edwin has made a very good job of this production. Besides that, he has played the principal part and has done it in his usual finished style. The first scene is somewhat overloaded with artificial palms and other foliage, but he gets away from that soon after, and gives us glimpses of some very pretty places.

The unfortunate heroine in this particular story is quite similar to the Lady Isabelle in "East Lynne." She is happily married and has a pretty boy. The man who comes between her and her husband, however, is not such a deep dyed villain as Sir Levison. If he had remained sober on one particular evening he could have prevented all the trouble. But he chose to drown his troubles in drink, and in that condition tried to convince the beautiful wife that she had made a big mistake in not marrying him, and thereby hangs the tale.

There was another disappointed suitor, of noble character. This part was played by Edwin August himself. It is not necessary to dwell upon Mr. August's ability, as it is well known in the photoplay profession. It is also needless to say that he is always handsome and convincing in any picture in which he appears. He played the self-sacrificing friend in a way that one would not expect to see improved upon by anyone.

Lillian Tucker, who played the part of Lady Una, stepped right along with Mr. August. She is the rare combination of a beautiful woman and proficient actress. She rose to dramatic heights in several scenes with superb skill and was thoroughly convincing in each case.

First Doughty Scenario

The master hand of Francis Worcester Doughty, as a scenario writer will be seen September 30 when Centaur Features present "Stanley's Search for the Hidden City," a two-reel animal drama in an advanced form featuring the Bostock animals and Capt. Jack Bonavita, is released on the Mutual program. This picture marks Mr. Doughty's first scenario contribution under the arrangement recently made with Mr. Horsley whereby he is to write all of the stories for the Centaur features.

Mr. Doughty's ability to concoct stories especially suitable to the style which the Centaur features present needs no comment when it is said that he is the man who wrote "The James Boys," "The Young Sleuth," "Detective Brady," and over twelve hundred published works of similar theme. The vivid imagination of a man capable of such a number of writings and these, too, of such an interesting nature, can readily be imagined and may be used as a basis of what may be expected in his scenarios.

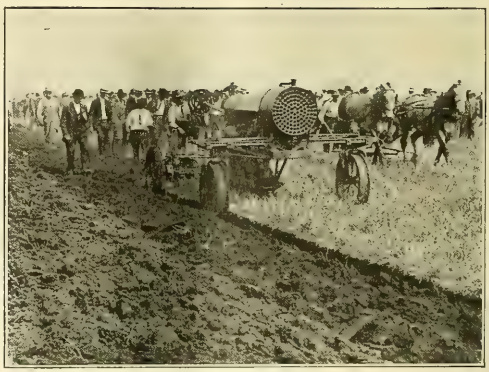
This imagination will be given ample opportunity to work as in writing scenarios to be enacted by the Bostock animals no restrictions will be imposed. The animals have been trained by Capt. Jack Bonavita and his assistants to perform unsually clever feats which Mr. Doughty will incorporate in his plays.

The story of "Stanley in Search of a Hidden City" concerns, as the title suggests, the efforts of a scientific party to discover a Hidden African City, which is ruled by a former lion trainer. After a series of thrilling adventures they arrive at their destination and are confronted by the problem of freeing a white girl, who by shipwreck years before, was placed in the hands of the king. This lays the foundation for a succession of dramatic events in which the animals of the island play most important parts.

Edison Night "Upstate"

Director John H. Collins and company have just returned from Berlin, N. Y., whither they had gone to film a new four-act feature, in which Viola Dana is featured, midst the beautiful gladiola fields, which flower gives the name to the heroine and the play, "Gladiola." Mary Rider, the well known author who has written a number of successful Edison features, wrote the play especially for Miss Dana and placed it in that beautiful country where, in one locality, there are seventy acres covered with gladiolas. The scenes are said to be some of the most artistic and pleasing ever filmed and make a beauteous background for a particularly worthy play.

While in Berlin Manager McCarty, of the New theater in Hoosick Falls, planned a gala day for the town and surrounding country. He advertised the event of the personal appearance of the Edison players widely and when he whirled them up in automobiles, it looked, from the crowds, as if a circus had come to town. He had secured "The Stoning," in which Miss Dana made her memorable impression, for the feature of the evening. All were introduced from the stage and made fitting speeches, afterward being royally entertained at the home of the owner of the theater. Besides Miss Dana, the party included: Robert Conness, who will play opposite her; Pat O'Malley, Charles Sutton, Helen Strickland, Jessie Stevens, and A. Kelly, Director Collins' assistant.



Edgar Lewis, the director of big feature films, who goes to take charge of the directorial end of the new Lubin outfit in Philadelphia very soon, has in preparation a book, entitled "Advice to Actors." He cites an actual incident in his own life or in that of an actor friend to illustrate the truth of each bit of advice.

Mary Boland and Willard Mack, two of the many illustrious stage stars now at Inceville, are making preparations this week for their departure to the Grand Canyon of Arizona where, under the direction of Walter Edwards they will enact a number of scenes for the Ince Triangle feature in which they will be co-starred.

Mr. Davies and Mr. Roth have opened a picture house in Silver Creek. Universal program is to be shown.

Harry Goldburg, of the Princess Theater, at Omaha, is getting his electricity from a motor generator and has discovered it is the best projection in Omaha. He also uses a mirror screen. The Goldburg brothers will add an echo organ to their already installed pipe organ.

Charles Jacobson, Omaha, sold the Suburban theater. He is intending building a $20,000 vaudeville and picture house.

Max Miller, popular North Side real estate man of Omaha, will build a $60,000 picture house. Ground has already been broken for same.

A $250,000 picture house wil be erected by George and Co., of Omaha, on the site where the World Herald, Nebraska's oldest paper, had their offices.

Beginning January 1 the motion picture operators of Omaha will have to prepare for an examination by the city of Omaha, as a license will be required after that day.

Wilfred Ledoux, manager of the Princess theater, of Omaha, has just returned from Los Angeles.

Kansas.

Carrie Simpson, official censor at Topeka, has barred and forbidden any of the Frank films to be shown anywhere within the State of Kansas. The press generally throughout the southwest are condemning the showing of the Frank film pictures in picture shows, and it is believed that no attempt will be made to show the films in this section of the country.

The moving picture censorship now being enforced by the Kansas board of censors is being bitterly condemned by film producers and exhibitors, and the Kansas board's recent ban on "The Devil's Daughter" aroused the flame of resentment to white heat. This play is a product in which Theda Bara, the vampire woman, is starred and which was shown in Oklahoma City and other Oklahoma towns recently without shocking public morals.

Missouri.

The bookings for the "Birth of a Nation," now playing at the Olympic Theater in St. Louis, Missouri, have been arranged to keep the big spectacle in the big amusement centers of the country indefinitely. St. Louis will be the only city in which it will appear for scores of miles around this season. The spectacle has been billed and advertised in every small city and town for miles around and within a radius of seventy-five miles of St. Louis. The same policy has been pursued everywhere since the "Birth of a Nation" started in Los Angeles last February. Runs that broke all records for length of time in Los Angeles and San Francisco drew from the population hundreds of miles in every direction.

Oklahoma

J. G. Street, manager of the Oklahoma Amusement Company, has taken out a $75,000 permit to build a new theater in Oklahoma City, Okla., which will show the best moving pictures obtainable and high class vaudeville. The new building, located at 21 North Robinson street, will be one of the finest and best equipped in the Southwest and will be strictly modern in every respect. It is expected to have the building completed and ready for opening by January 1, 1916.

"The Ring-Tailed Rhinoceros," starring Raymond Hitchcock, now being played in Oklahoma City, is recalled by local theatrical folk as the film which Hitchcock saw for the first time when he was at the Overholser Theater in Oklahoma City last winter—the first picture that Hitchcock ever appeared in. When Hitchcock was starring here he sent out invitations to local theatrical people asking them to stop at the Overholser after the close of his regular offering, to see him in motion pictures. What was seen was Hitchcock in "The Ring-Tailed Rhinoceros. Hitchcock gave a talk accompanying the picture. The film had been sent to Oklahoma City for Hitchcock to see long before it was released to the exchanges.

Texas

For the first time in its history Texarkana, Texas, had moving picture shows open and running on Sunday, September 5, all three of the picture playhouses located on the Texas side opening their doors at 1 p. m. and continuing until after 8 p. m. It is estimated that about three thousand people attended the performances, which were free, no tickets being sold and no collection taken at the door, consequently no arrests were made by the police. Petitions are being circulated and several thousand signatures have been secured asking for the opening of picture theaters to the public on Sundays. The measure is being supported by organized labor and is being strenuously fought by the church people, who are bitterly opposed to the opening of picture shows on Sunday. A great deal of interest is being manifested in the matter, and it seems yet uncertain as to whether Sunday pictures are to prove a "go" in Texarkana.

The Majestic Theater, located at the corner of North Fourth street and Sanger alley, at Waco, Texas, has been purchased from D. R. Fant of San Antonio by the Las Morras Company of Waco. The theater is a two story structure with frontage of 50 and depth of 100 feet. The purchase price was $70,000. The building is to be remodeled and will show moving pictures and vaudeville.

Nathan & Namaan have purchased the Arlington Opera House at Marlin, Texas, for a cash consideration of $8,500, and will make immediate repairs in rebuilding and refurnishing and equipping the structure with a view of keeping it open both summer and winter as a place where moving pictures and high class vaudeville can be seen.

Mayor Lindsley of Dallas, Texas, appointed three women and four men, a board of seven, as a board of appeals to pass on moving pictures that have been censored by the censor. The appeal board will consist of Mrs. F. M. Smith, president Mothers' Club; Mrs. Geo. K. Meyer, president Dallas Art Association; Mrs. Mary K. Craig, teacher of women; Claude McCallum, attorney; N. Nigro, wholesale fruit dealer; John S. Aldenory, fire insurance agent, and Harry L. Seay, former police commissioner. They are the members of the board of appeals under the new ordinance which became effective about a month ago. With this board lies the power to condemn a moving picture film or theatrical production and forbid its being shown in Dallas, Texas. While the decision of the board is final, the board of appeals will only be called upon when there is a disagreement between the censor and the manager showing the picture, when either side can appeal to the board for decision.

General Film Corporation.—Stock has been weak on the general acceptance of the fact that the V. L. S. E. have made a decided cut into net profits that have been hitherto received by this company.

Mutual Film Corporation has now completed its program and is extensively advertising the changes that have been made. Business is showing a satisfactory increase.

Triangle Film Corporation.—Market has advanced to 7⅛ bid, 7¼ asked. Local managers report they are making very much quicker progress than expected in getting leading theaters to change to their service at considerably higher prices. Contracts in Kansas City, Chicago, New York and Boston indicate the new service has struck a popular note.

vice-presidents of the Triangle Film Company, David W. Griffith, Thos. H. Ince and Mack Sennett. Many notable film stars were present to do honor to the heads of the Reliance-Majestic, New York Motion Picture Corporation and Keystone Film Company.

Among the celebrities of the legitimate stage who have arrived in Los Angeles during the past ten days to pose before the camera for motion pictures are DeWolf Hopper, Billie Burke, Joe Weber, Lew Fields, Beverly Bayne and others. The appearance of these stars in films promise popular features for the devotees of the screen.

There is a steady demand among the western moving picture theaters for Mutual program releases. The steady popularity of Mutual features seems to be growing, even in the face of the higher priced pictures. The "all-stars-all-features" policy at popular prices seeming to appeal to the masses.

Because of the popularity of Mae Allison and Harold Lockwood, of the American Film Company, Santa Barbara, throughout the western circuits, there is an abundance of inquiries coming into the Mutual offices for the new picture, "The House of a Thousand Scandals," which is to be released through the Mutual program September 23. This is a stirring drama artistically interpreted.

The big producers of the Triangle Film Corporation report much interest being awakened by the announcement of the forthcoming $2 pictures. Many exhibitors are writing for advance information, terms of contracts and other data. The first service it is announced, will start about October 1, in the larger cities of the East. The Griffith, Ince and Sennett studios are busy, with every star and player working overtime so as to finish the first pictures contracted for on early program releases.

The published warnings by the Essanay Company regarding the proposed vigorous prosecution of infringements and imitations of their famous Charlie Chaplin pictures in which the only and original Charlie is so successfully featured, is attracting much attention here in the West, where so many boys and young men and would be screen stars see the dashing Charlie in all of his originality in productions, and so many try to copy his acts. In almost every parade and in certain play houses the imitations are in evidence. Many old pictures have been revived and the public hoodwinked into thinking them the real up-to-date article. The Honest Picture Policy advocated by the Essanay company is heartily endorsed by legitimate producers and exhibitors.

The Selig Diamond Special, "The Jungle Lovers" presenting the popular and captivating Bessie Eyton, a star who is so well known on the coast. has attracted renewed attention to the celebrated Selig Zoo in Los Angeles, where the pictures were made. This is a drama of wild beasts that proved particularly venturesome and many of the scenes were witnessed in the making by visitors at the Zoo, tourists attending the two expositions and thousands of others, all of whom are anxious to witness the screen showing in their home theaters. This picture was released September 16th.

Grace Cunard, Universal Star-Director, featuring the "Broken Coin" series, has recovered after a severe operation in a local hospital. While convalescing she is yet prohibited by her physicians from active work, the series being completed under the direction of Francis Ford.

The arrival of Beverly Bayne, the star with the $50,000 wardrobe at the Quality Studios, to play leads with Francis X. Bushman, has caused a stir in the local motion picture social colonies. Miss Bayne has already given evidence of becoming a leading favorite.

Motion Picture Day at the San Diego Exposition under the auspices of the Department of Exploitation, headed by H. F. McGarvie, Saturday, September 11, proved one of the most notable days of the Panama-California Exposition. Hundreds of screen players, stars, heads of local Southern California studios and visitors participated in the program of festivities, and the selection of and crowning of a King and Queen of the Exposition on Movie Day was witnessed by thousands. A committee of one hundred prominent citizens of San Diego owning automobiles personally looked after the pleasure and entertainment of the visiting motion picture guests. Francis X. Bushman, the popular Metro star and his leading lady, Beverly Bayne, were elected king and queen.

The following General Committee had the Motion Picture Day festivities in charge, and there was something doing every minute of the players' sojourn in the southern exposition city:

Fred J. Balshofer, president of the Quality Pictures Corporation, who has been visiting New York on business connected with the Bushman-Snow-Quality-Metro pictures, has returned to Los Angeles and is a very busy man handling important details of the new Bushman-Bayne pictures.

W. N. Selig, president and general manager of the Selig organizations, is expected in Los Angeles this week. He plans to remain several weeks adding new features and perfecting details at the Selig Studio, Edendale and the famous Selig Zoo. William N. Selig is always a welcome visitor to California and his many friends plan several specialty entertainments and social sessions for his delectation during this sojourn.

Wm. C. Dowlan, one of the capable young directors of the Universal has returned from a two weeks' mysterious vacation. He left on his trip leaving no address behind and would not tell his friends where he was going or how he expected to spend his vacation. Yet he returns looking happy, filled with pep and ginger all ready for new picture productions.

Hobart Bosworth of the Big U organization has returned to work after a temporary illness. He is now in the Bear Valley country producing "Natawangan," a story of the Northwest, written especially for him by Ronald Bradbury.

Phillips Smalley and his wife, Lois Weber, of the Universal producing directors staff, who this week finished a great three months' series of pictures featuring Madame Ana Pavlowa, the famed Russian dancer in the "Dumb Girl of Portici," gave a dinner party to 100 people in honor of the noted star at Hotel Alexandria, Wednesday, September 8. It was a very enjoyable affair. Midst sparkling wine and a tempting menu toasts and congratulations over the successful handling of the great masterpiece picture were offered and drunk. Madame Pavlowa proved the life of the entertainment. The Smalleys were highly complimented over their splendid work and achievements in the specialties introduced in this picture, which started in Chicago three months ago and closed at the Universal City studios September 8. It is picturizations of this high class and quality that adds to the popularity of the Smalleys and the prestige of the Universal program.

In the passing of David Berton Allen, aged 31 years, the motion picture industry loses one of its most able young camera artists. Mr. Allen died Monday morning at the Angelus Hospital following an operation for appendicitis.

He withstood the shock bravely but complications set in and he passed away peacefully. At the bedside was his bride of only a few months, hopeful to the last. Berton Allen was a bright and capable young artist photographer. For some four years he has been employed as a cameraman for the Selig company, coming to Los Angeles to make pictures for this organization.

NEW YORK ITEMS.

C. M. White, advertising and publicity manager for the Gaumont Company, recently moved his headquarters from the World's Tower Building to the Gaumont studio at Flushing, L. I.

Bill Barry, he of the Nicholas Power Company advertising department and Brighton Beach sunburn, has for the past month been week-ending at the Point Pleasant, N. J., residence of Brother MacArthur of the M. P. World. As Bill's face is not as yet adorned with nicks or scratches, he evidently has not ridden much in MacArthur's tree-climbing auto.

The Arrow Film Corporation, of which W. E. Shallenberger is president and Albert S. LeVino, secretary and treasurer, is now putting the finishing touches on their recently produced five-reel feature, "Right Off the Bat," featuring Mike Donlin, and expects to release it within the next week or two. The picture should prove a good drawing card around the time of the world's series.

William Sadler, for three years a member of the Edison Company and more recently connected with the Universal-Imp Company, is again appearing in Edison pictures, having returned to the Bronx studio last week.

Among the visitors in New York this week are: Joseph H. Finn, president of the Nichols-Finn Advertising Company which launched "The Diamond from the Sky"; Bill Parsons, president of the National Film Company of Los Angeles; and H. M. Horkheimer, president of the Balboa Film Company of Long Beach, California, producers of the "Who Pays?" and "Neal of the Navy" series and many noted multiple-reel subjects.

Walter L. Johnson, formerly connected with the Cheltenham Advertising Agency, is now to be found behind the copy desk in the advertising division of Triangle's publicity department.

S. L. Rothapfel's first exclamation upon viewing Lasky's "Carmen" for which he was to arrange the musical score was: "I don't see what you want me for. 'Carmen' is good enough to get along by itself"—and, coming from him, that is saying a good bit for a picture, as Rothapfel is noted for his ability to increase the artistic value of a film fifty per cent by his superb musical accompaniment.

As Paul Gulick's vacation draws to a close, Bob Doman, associate editor of the Moving Picture Weekly, has frequently been seen to glance at the editor-in-chief's vacant desk and smile softly but sincerely, the grin broadening as the time for Gulick's return draws nearer. In credit to Doman, however, it must be said that the M. P. Weekly has traveled along right merrily under his editorial management in spite of his desire for his chief's return.

Wid Gunning's new magazine, Films and Film Folks, made its debut on the newstands on Friday of last week, and was well received. So well, in fact, that more than one newsdealer ran out of his supply in advance of the end of the week's demand.

Another new fan publication to make its initial appearance on newsstands recently is the Moving Picture Mail, which is a magazine supplement to the Saturday issue of the New York Evening Mail. It, too, sold heavily. The first issue came out on Saturday, September 11. John Semler and Harry Havens, formerly the advertising department of the Morning Telegraph staff, are on the staff of the Moving Picture Mail.

The advertising and publicity department of the Fox Film Corporation has moved from the sixth floor to the fourth floor of the Leavitt Bldg., the suite formerly occupied by Eclair. J. H. Goldfrap still remains publicity manager of the Fox concern.

CHICAGO GOSSIP

On October 9 the Strand Theater Company, at present occupying Orchestra Hall, moves its attraction to the Globe theater which is being entirely renovated and redecorated. A large pipe organ will be installed. The occupancy of the Globe, it is understood, will date only until the new theater now planned for the Strand Company in the loop is erected and ready for business.

J. M. Hayes, Chicago manager of the Picture Playhouse Film Company, is getting ready for some new pictures his house is sending him which he claims will be the equal of anything now available.

Ben Beadell, the world's greatest salesman of waterproofing for films and president of the National Waterproof Film Company, left for New York on September 11, to visit his old friend Lynn McChesney, who is in charge of the Edison studio in the Bronx.

Harry Cohen, who has just returned from a visit to King George was in town on September 10. Harry is an enthusiastic booster for the Metro product and says that it took like wild fire over in London. He brought word from Montague, who represents the Selig interests in the British Isles, stating that Mr. Montague is now a policeman for part of his time, during which he carries a regular London bobby club and wears stripes on his arms. For the benefit of our readers it must be stated that Mr. Montague is customs inspector three mornings each week.

J. Stuart Blackton, although unable to visit Chicago in person, sent designer Smith to drive his boat, Baby Reliance No. 5 which made a very creditable showing in the speed boat races last week, an unfortunate accident preventing Mr. Blackton's boat from competing the last day of the race. Mr. Blackton was detained by the opening of the big eight-reel film, "The Battle Cry of Peace," which opened at the Vitagraph theater last week and which bids fair to become one of the film sensations of the year. Mr. Blackton was author of the scenario from which this film was made, the story being based on Hudson Maxin's book, "Defenceless America." The picture is now showing at $2.00 on Broadway and negotiations are being made for one of the large Chicago theaters at which the same prices will prevail.

A. M. Eisner has resigned his position with the Northwest Weekly in Minneapolis and returned to Chicago, where he will again engage in the film business.

Don Bell, sun-tanned and wrinkled about the eyes, from his two months' trip to California, is back in Chicago and busily engaged in trying to rush shipments on the machinery which he has ordered. The war over in Europe has so tied up the machinery manufacturers that lathes which Don ordered some three months ago are not promised for delivery until April of next year. Punch presses ordered quite a while ago are promised for delivery next February, all of which is responsible for retarding the increase of manufacturing facilities which the Bell and Howell Company planned some months ago. At the present time Don states his company has orders on file for goods that will run over $100,000, and although his factory is working night and day it will be some time before he can assure reasonably prompt deliveries. Mr. Bell made a contract some three months ago with one of the big film manufacturers whereby his entire output of step printers is sold for the next five years. Patents on various Bell and Howell cine machinery will issue within the next two or three months and Don states that at that time he is going to institue vigorous legal proceedings against those companies which are infringing on the devices.

Carl Ray, the one time film magnate of Muskegon, Mich., arrived in Chicago on September 15, to dispose of the state rights for Illinois, Wisconsin and Indiana on his 5-reel picture, entitled "Vengeance of the Wilds," a thrilling wild animal drama.

veloping into an author, Harry having a splendid article on "The Future of the Feature Film Business" in one of our local publications last week.

Nate Ascher's new theater, the Lakeside, 4730 Sheridan Road, again did capacity business the second week since its opening. Splendid taste has been used in selecting a program for this house with a view to pleasing the patrons and bringing them back again. The premier was a showing of Selig's splendid mystery story, "The House of a Thousand Candles," which was vigorously applauded by the entire house. Essanay's comedy, "A Bunch of Keys" was the attraction last Saturday night and both sides of Sheridan Road for almost two blocks was lined with the automobiles of patrons who came from a distance to see this splendid offering. Vitagraph's "Mortmain" was the attraction on Monday which sent the patrons away with satisfied expressions. The orchestra employed in this theater is not as good an orchestra as can be secured and many are of the opinion that Mr. Ascher, in catering to the aristocratic residents of the Sheridan Park district will find it greatly to his advantage to raise the quality of the musical part of his entertainment. An admission fee of 15c is charged.

W. N. Selig stated last week that his western company is laying out the scene plots for the production of Winston Churchill's famous book, "The Crisis." Readers of the book will doubtless remember the strong situations which are offered and the time and attention which the Selig Company is devoting to the laying out of the necessary essentials for the production of this feature, bespeak in advance, another "Spoilers." The production of the "Garden of Allah" is naturally being postponed until spring, when the desert scenes necessary for its proper filming may be taken more advantageously.

R. R. Nehls, the general manager of the American Film Manufacturing Company, was a visitor to Motography's offices last week with a head full of enthusiasm and plans for the utilization of the tremendous floor space which the erection of the new American office and factory buildings will give him. Mr. Nehls stated that his company is turning out almost a million feet a week at the present time and that a great deal of additional help will be necessary shortly in the laboratory and developing rooms.

George K. Spoor, in a recent chat explained that the action of the London branch of the Essanay Company in virtually making a closed market on the Essanay product, became necessary because of the fact that under the old sale conditions films got away from the jurisdiction of the Essanay Company and not infrequently some of these found their way back to America and re-rented in competition with the regular Essanay releases handled through the General Film Company, so in justice to the General Film Company as well as the Essanay Company this action had to be taken. The popularity of the Essanay pictures in England bespeaks a success for the plan which could not be put into operation without such exclusives as Charlie Chaplin, Broncho Billy, Henry Walthall, etc. Mr. Spoor looks far ahead in the film business and has some big plans for the presentation of feature films which will prove intensely interesting to this field when they are announced. Mr. Spoor, desiring to set at rest the rumors concerning Charlie Chaplin, stated that the services of Mr. Chaplin are contracted for for the next two years and that exhibitors may rely on securing Chaplin releases only by booking Essanay films. All statements to the contrary by rival film companies are misleading to the exhibitor.

On Thursday morning, September 16, a special advance showing of the Equitable release "Trilby," which features Clara Kimball Young and Wilton Lackaye, was held at the La Salle theater on Madison street. The special showing was arranged by the enterprising local manager of the World Film Corporation.

A. W. Thomas, the well known scenario writer, accompanied by Mrs. Thomas, his bride of but a few weeks, arrived in Chicago on Wednesday morning, September 15, for a visit of a few days with local friends. Mr. Thomas is much improved in health following his sojourn in the west and will no doubt be heard from in a big way in the near future.

NOTES FROM ALL OVER

George Ade, the king of the humorous writers of America and popular fable maker, made a flying trip through Universal City recently. Accompanying Mr. Ade was a large delegation of members of the Sigma Chi fraternity of which he is a member and who were returning to their homes after attending the national convention of the order in San Francisco.

Otis Harlan is very popular in England where he starred in Hoyt's "A Stranger In New York." The Hoyt comedies in which Harlan will appear under the Selig Red Seal trade mark should prove unusually popular in the British possessions.

Included in the list of players recently engaged to appear in the support of legitimate stage stars at the Fine Arts Films studio are Robert Anderson, Viola Barry, Fred J. Butler, Gladys Field, Edwin Harley, Clyde E. Hopkins, Al Jennings, Francis MacDonald, Loyola O'Connor and Monroe Salisbury. These recent additions bring the list of players employed to a very high mark.

A. M. Horkheimer, president and general manager of Balboa, has gone East on his annual fall business trip. While he's away, E. D. Horkheimer, secretary and treasurer of the company, is in command at the Balboa studio. One of the brothers is always in New York to look after the company's interests. They alternate between the plant and the East.

Ralph W. Ince has just completed a one-part comedy for the Vitagraph Company, entitled "The Counts." Anita Stewart and Earle Williams will be seen in the principal parts. This will be the first short picture in which these favorite Vitagraph players have appeared in some time.

Helen Ware, the popular emotional actress, will make her debut at the Fine Arts Films studio in a story, "Cross Currents," written specially for her by Mary H. O'Connor.

Mary Anderson, who recently joined the Western Vitagraph Company, at Santa Monica, California, to play leads, is now working on her first picture, "Cal Marvin's Wife," an original story by Lulu Case Russell, being produced under the direction of Ulysses Davis.

Nobu Hara, the Japanese prima donna, recently arrived in Los Angeles, and while there expressed a desire to see the Wonders of Universal City, the fame of which had spread even to the land of the cherry blossoms. Miss Hara visited the picture city in the company of her uncle, Sen J. Katayama, editor of the Oriental Economist of Tokio, and was delighted with everything she saw.

Grace Cunard has to go to the hospital again to undergo another operation. She has never fully recovered from an injury she received a year ago, and although she underwent an operation at that time, she did not stay long enough.

Miss Lillian Tucker, who is playing the leading role opposite Edwin August in "Evidence" which will soon be released through the World Film, is of a distinctly English type of beauty, with frank blue eyes and light hair. She is tall and graceful and is wonderfully adapted to the role of the English beauty, "Lady Un Wimbourne," which she plays.

Edna Maison is still appearing in the "Dumb Girl of Portici" film with Madame Pavlowa. This big feature will be completed in about two weeks time, when Edna will have her own company again.

E. H. Calvert, who recently headed a company of Essanay players at Chattanooga, Tenn., tells some glowing tales of possum hunting. He established a new record for "stalking" possum in the mountains and created a great awe in the minds of the native mountaineers.

Word has been received from friends in Australia by Colin Reed, of the Selig Polyscope Company, that the famous multiple reel production of this company, "The Spoilers," is one of the most popular pictures in that country at the present time.

Teddy Sampson, erstwhile featured player of Majestic films, is cast for the Helen Ware picture, to be produced at the Fine Arts Film studio.

Harry Spingler, who recently joined the Universal after a season of nine months with the Fox Film Corporation, during which time he created the leading juvenile roles in many of their most successful screen offerings, will be seen in the very near future on the screen in a feature in which King Baggot will play the star role.

Harry Todd, the famous "Mustang Pete," of Essanay's western comedies, is one of the veterans in the moving picture business. He has been acting in photoplays some eight years, more than half of this time with Essanay.

Earle Williams, of the Vitagraph Company, is the first of the motion picture players to have the story of his life enclosed between the covers of a book. "The Life of Earle Williams" is just off the press and is claimed to be written in an interesting way with chapters on, "Stage Work," "Thrilling Experiences," "Film Work," "Home Life," etc., covering every part of his life from youth to the present time, and to form a lasting record for the admirers of Mr. Williams.

J. P. McGowan, former Lasky producer, who recently joined the forces at Universal City, has just completed his first Big U release, a three reel subject by Randal Parrish, entitled "The Yellow Star." Marie Walcamp and Frank Newberg appear in the leading roles.

Pauline Bush has been enjoying the experience of watching other artists act for the screen. She accompanied Allan Dwan, Owen Moore and others of the Griffith combination, to Bear Valley. Miss Bush says that she gets as tense watching her brother and sister artists, as she does when she is acting herself.

The following youngsters have arrived at the Selig Jungle-Zoo during the past two months: ten leopards twelve lions, two tigers, one fallow deer, two llamas and an axis deer. Race suicide is an unknown quantity in the Selig Jungle Zoo.

A critical visitor at the Balboa studio recently was Monroe Lathrop, dramatic editor of a leading Los Angeles newspaper.

Contrary to a recent announcement made by the Fine Arts Films studio, De Wolf Hopper will make his film debut in the title role of Cervantes' "Don Quixote." It was at first decided for the comic opera star to revive on the screen the eventful life of Dickens' "Mr. Pickwick," but on more serious consideration "Don Quixote" proved the superior for the basis of an introductory picture.

Alfred Vosbrugh has gone to the American and it is said that he will play opposite Vivian Rich. If this is so, Vosburgh is a fortunate man, as he will be acting with one of the really popular screen actresses. Miss Rich is appearing in a series of heart-interest dramas.

The Vitagraph Benevolent Association, which includes in its membership the complete personnel of the Vitagraph Company at Flatbush, will hold a dance at McLoughlin's Bayside Casino, Sheepshead Bay, on Wednesday night, October 27, in aid of the Hospital and Sick Fund. Every person connected with this famous picture producing company, from the heads down to the office boy, will compete in making this the gala event of the early winter season. A. Victor Smith, the Vitagraph studio manager, will be master of ceremonis.

Ruth Roland has a baseball team all her own. Twelve of the Balboa motion picture star's admirers recently banded themselves together under her name and have been winning all sorts of diamond honors in and about Los Angeles.

Henry Otto, formerly of the American Company, who this week joined the producing staff at Universal City, to start work on the production of a three-reel story by Harry Gates, entitled, "The Measure of Leon Dubray." No cast has been assigned him thus far other than Hobart Henley is to be featured in his productions.

For the starring of Henrietta Crossman at the Universal, Producer Ed. J. Le Saint has a distinguished supporting cast, including clever Stella Razeto and Wyndham. Both have very excellent parts in the photoplay which will probably be known as "The Faddist," and which will be in four or five reels.

The photographic department at the Fine Arts Film studio is under the direct supervision of George W. Bitzner, who has made a name for himself as the photographer of the Griffith sensational film, "The Birth of a Nation."

Pretty Ann Drew came from retirement to act in a comedy-drama with William Duncan and George Stanley, at the Western Vitagraph studios recently. The play was "Love and Law," and Ann with her dimples upheld the love end of the story very nicely.

The Smalleys are this week working on the production of a number of scenes in their big street scene at Universal City which is regarded as the most expensive set ever erected at those studios for use in a single picture.

And now Bobby Connelly, the six-year-old Vitagraph star, famous as the hero of the Sonny Jim series, has been honored by having his profile stamped on souvenir spoons of California. Millions of these spoons have been secured by souvenir hunters who have attended the Panama-Pacific Exposition, and will be taken to homes in every part of the land.

The formation of the Fine Arts Films band is the latest move at the studio of the same name, in California. De Wolf Hopper has been appointed bandmaster, and he has selected Tully Marshall for first cornet, Douglas Fairbanks as second cornet, Thomas Jefferson as first trombone, Orrin Johnson as second trombone, Paul Gilmore as tuba, Wilfred Lucas as bass horn, John Emerson as clarionet and Robert Harron and Charles Clary as drummers.

At the Kerrigan-Victor's Lake Tahoe studios Jacques Jaccard has just completed an unusual three-reel story of Indian life, entitled "Son o' The Stars," in which J. Warren Kerrigan is featured in the title role. Helen Leslie, Buck Connors, Ethel Phillips, Norbert Myles and May Talbot support him in this offering.

There is a bright, brown-eyed girl at the Western Vitagraph, who presides over the secretarial duties and who, although she is not heard from much, is one of Rollin S. Sturgeon's biggest assets — Doris Schroeder, modest, and capable, has rare judgment in the reading of potential photoplays. She has been with the Vitagraph for five years. Miss Doris is a treasure.

Ethel Corcoran, daughter of Captain Corcoran of the Sheepshead Bay, New York, fire company, has been selected as leading lady by the Vitagraph Company, to head a company under the direction of Courtlandt J. Van Deusen.

It is good to learn that Charles Clary has another splendid part in a feature now being produced under the direction of Jack Conway, with David W. Griffith at the helm. Clary is such a consummate actor and such a master of expression, that he gives us something to look forward to with a part which suits him.

Laura Oakley, one of the best known among the actresses of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, at its Pacific Coast studio, and chief of police of Universal City, has been notified that she has been elected a member of the Aeronautical Club of Nebraska, the headquarters of which are at Lincoln.

Bob Anderson, a member of the Selig Company, and whom many will remember as one of the two pals in the picture "Pals in Blue" has left for Pendleton, Walla Walla, and Idaho Falls to take in the Contest Circle. Bob is one of the best known contest men in the country. His specialty is riding rough broncs bareback. He carries the Selig colors and at his every opportunity has promised to tell folks about Las Vegas.

Edmund Breese, the eminent dramatic actor, who will soon be seen in Popular Plays and Players-Metro feature, "The Song of a Wage Slave," while hurrying to reach the Popular Plays and Players Studio in Fort Lee a few days ago, his automobile was halted by the constable in Rye, N. Y., and arrested for speeding. He was hailed before the Justice of the Peace and fined.

Aaron Hoffmann and William Jerome joined the scenario writing staff under Managing Editor Hampton Del Ruth this week. These two brilliant men added to the group of writers previously engaged and which includes Mary Williams, Frederick Palmer, Vincent Bryan, Clarence G. Badger, Jean Havez, Charles Riesner, Harry Wulze, Jack Byrne, William Campbell and others. When the new concrete buildings are completed in the rebuilding of the Keystone plant, the scenario department will occupy a structure of its own with private offices, library, consulting room, reception room and every convenience.

Tom Terriss, who has been making feature pictures for the film company which bears his name at Yonkers, N. Y., has purchased a large plot of ground in Mount Vernon, N. Y., and will begin the building of a large motion picture manufacturing plant in the near future.

Jack Richardson is the "deadest" man in pictures. He says so himself and the quote is therefore his own. He is a natural "vilyun" and hopes always to be. He says that himself, too. And the reason why he says so is that he may retain his place as the deepest dyed and most continuous villain on the screen. Mr. Richardson will be seen from now on in Mustang brand pictures with Louise Lester, Helene Rossen and William Stowell, on the Mutual program.

Five actors in succession resigned from the new Pallas Picture, "The Gentlemen from Indiana," starring Dustin Farnum, on learning the part each was engaged for called for a thrilling 25-foot dive from the roof of a house down into the heads of a street crowd. Director Lloyd finally secured a young daredevil who makes a specialty of neck-breaking stunts for the big studios.

"I sing a little baritone; I sing a little bass—I also play in pictures," said Andrew Arbuckle, recently, in his dressing room at the Balboa studio, in Long Beach, Cal., when asked for the story of his life.

The new monoplane which has been added to the mechanical equipment of the Keystone Film Company, is creating much discussion as to who will be the first passenger. The aviator in charge of the Keystone hangar, Jose Murea, has invited Mack Sennett, Mabel Normand and a number of others in his enthusiasm over the flights that he will make at the Keystone plant, and, as it is impossible to carry more than one passenger at a time, he is busy trying to figure how he is going to make good.

Charles Bartlett has been given the direction of the company headed by Winfred Greenwood and Ed. Coxen and will make one and two reel American features.

The marriage of Billy Gilbert and Norma Felicia on May 24, has just come to light. Both are members of the Keystone acting forces. Miss Felicia left for a vacation in San Diego, joining the Spanish dancers troup at the Exposition to combine business with pleasure. Gilbert remained at the Keystone and kept his secret so well that only this week was the happy event announced. Miss Felicia, now Mrs. Gilbert, has returned to Los Angeles and the pair will reside there permanently.

William Campbell, recently promoted from the Keystone scenario department to the position of director, is making a picture in co-operation with Del Henderson, with Fred Mace in the principal comedy role.

Howard Mitchell, former Lubin director, recently engaged by the Thanhouser studios, staged "The Dead Man's Keys," a two reel subject full of action for release in the regular Mutual program, September 21. This is Mitchell's initial effort as a Mutual director.

A trip to the Delaware Water Gap and back all in the same afternoon is something of a feat, even in these days of rapid locomotion, but breaking records is the specialty of Metro folk, and B. A. Rolfe. of Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., Maxwell Karger, his general manager, and Arthur James are no exception to this rule. It happened that Messrs. Rolfe and Karger wanted to
